SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1298 TO 1345
OF 1914.

MUTHU VENKATAPATHI REDDI

AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 8, cls. 1, 2, s. 6, cl. 6, expl.—Occupancy ryot, subsequent acquisition of melvaram by—Rule of merger, whether applies—Appeal, second—Notice, insufficiency or invalidity of, if can be pleaded for first time in second appeal—Interpretation of Statutes—Estates Land Act explicit—Principles of general law, if applicable.

Section 8, clause (1), of the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), simply enunciates the general law of merger, and the same is subject to qualifications to be found in other portions of the Act. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Section 8, clause (2), is an application of the general rule in clause (1) to the particular case where one amongst several co-landholders subsequently acquires the occupancy-right. [p. 3, col. 1.]

But where one out of several mirasidars or ryots becomes entitled to the rights of a landholder in respect of the same land, it is the converse of section 8, clause (2), and is specifically provided for by the explanation to clause 6 of section 6. [p. 3, col. 1.]

Where one of two persons, jointly entitled to the occupancy-right in a certain estate, becomes entitled by purchase to the zemindari or melvaram right also:

Held, (1) that he does not thereby lose his occupancy right; [p. 3, col. 2.]

Abul Hasan Khan v. Bhura, 28 A. 768; A. W. N. (1906) 226; 3 A. L. J. 763, referred to.

(2) that the restriction that such acquisition should be by inheritance or devise applies only to clause 6 of section 6 and not to the explanation to clause (6). [p. 3, col. 2.]

The Madras Estates Land Act is a comprehensive Tenancy Code and wherever it is explicit, a discussion of the general law is irrelevant. [p. 3, col. 2.]

In an ejectment suit where the defendants did not plead any want of notice in the first Court and there was no issue regarding it:

Held, that the plea of insufficiency or invalidity of notice could not be allowed to be raised for the first time in second appeal. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suits Nos. 165 to 218 of 1913, respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suits Nos. 713 to 773 of 1911, respectively.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar (with him Messrs. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar and N. A. Krishna Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The 1st plaintiff owns the mirasi as well as zemin rights in the suit lands. Section 8 of the Madras Estates Land Act applies in terms and there is merger. The 1st plaintiff shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall only hold it as a land-holder.

It cannot be contended that, because the 1st plaintiff's mirasi right is not specific but is only an undivided moiety of the whole land, there can be no merger, for there can be occupancy-right even with respect to an undivided moiety. See Periasami v. Periasami (1).

The land is admittedly ryoti land. I am cultivating it from 1890. So I get occupancy-right. See section 5 (Act I of 1908).

Specific letting has not been proved. Hence plaintiffs cannot eject. Venkatacharu v. Kandappa (2) was referred to.

Messrs. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar and D. V. Neelamughachariar, for the Respondents.—It is unnecessary to decide the question of merger in this case. Even assuming that there is merger, it is only the 2nd plaintiff.

MUTHU REDDI v. MUTHU VENKATAPATHI REDDI.

the owner of the other moiety of the occupancy-right, that will become the ryot and in no case can the defendants (appellants herein) who are only tenants become ryots. For under section 6 the letting must be by a landholder of a person as a ryot (and not simply as a tenant).

As regards merger three classes of cases may arise. (1) There may be only one landholder and only one tenant with respect to a certain land. (2) There may be several landholders but only one tenant. (3) There may be only one landholder but several tenants.

Section 8, clause (1), provides for case (1) above where the entire interests of the landholder and ryot have become united in the same person. Section 8, clause (2), provides for case (2) above where one of several landholders acquires the occupancy-right in any land. Case (3) above is the converse of case (2) and there is no specific provision in the clauses of section 8 which could apply to this case. Hence section 8 cannot help the appellants.

But the explanation to clause 6 of section 6 is an explanation to the whole of the section and specifically provides for the present case. Hence the first plaintiff does not lose his occupancy-right by subsequently becoming interested in the land as landholder.

As to the application of the general law of merger, my submission is that it does not apply as the Act, which must be taken to be an exhaustive Code of the tenancy law of this Presidency, contains a specific provision applicable to this case.

Even assuming that the general law of merger applies, the conditions as to merger are not satisfied. See Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, Volume 9, page 193. Foa, (Landlord and Tenant) 5th Edition, page 628. Gour's Law of Transfer, section 111, clause (d), commentary. Amatoo v. Muksud Ali (3) and Raja Kishen Datt Ram v. Rajah Mumtaz Ali Khan (4). There is nothing to show which is the greater right, the mirasi or the zemin right.

The smaller alone merges in the larger. The landholder's right is, I submit, the smaller right.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar.—The mirasidar is the owner of the land and hence his right would be the larger right.

Farther, the newly acquired right will merge in the older one. The landholder's right was newly acquired by me. Hence I shall continue to be a ryot.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Is there any authority for holding that it is always the later and newly acquired right that merges in the earlier one?]

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar.—There is no specific decision to that effect, but the general law of merger would lead to that.

I have also relied on notice. I have given six months' notice ending with the fasti to quit. In the absence of anything else the tenancy must be presumed to be a lease from year to year. Therefore the defendants' plea of absence of specific letting goes.

If, however, your Lordships be against me on the question of merger, your Lordships should at least give me joint possession. See Subramaniam Ohettiar v. Periasami Thevar (5) and Muthu Ramakrishna Naicken v. Marimuthu Goundan (6).

The case of Periasami v. Periasami (1) cited by the other side has no relevancy to this case.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue as ryots owning the occupancy-right in the suit lands, and the lower Courts have held that they gave defendants, their tenants, valid notice to quit and are entitled to recover possession, rent and profits.

Defendants' first and main contention before us depends on the following facts, which have been admitted or found:—The mirasi or occupancy-right in lands in the suit village belongs to 1st and 2nd plaintiffs, each owning an unascertained moiety of it. First plaintiff and his predecessors have owned their moiety from time immemorial. Second plaintiff acquired hers as stridhanam from her father in 1873. There is no connection between their titles, though it is a fact that second plaintiff married a member of first plaintiff's family. The plaintiffs sue together, as tenants-in-common of the whole village and co-owners of the whole occupancy-right. First plaintiff's predecessor, however, became entitled to the zemindari, in which the suit lands are, by purchase about a hundred years back; and first plaintiff has succeeded to his rights, apparently (though nothing is alleged to turn on the fact) in respect of half the estate. Defendants, therefore, argue with reference to section 8 (1), Act 1 of 1908, that, the occupancy and landholder's rights having been united by transfer in the same person, first plaintiff's predecessor, the latter had and first plaintiff has a right to hold and sue only as a landholder, not as a ryot; and that, as first plaintiff cannot sue in the latter capacity, he and the second plaintiff cannot do so together. Plaintiffs, it is admitted, can succeed, only if their suits are, as the plaintiffs describe them, brought by ryots against non-occupancy-tenants, since it is not alleged that the conditions, in which a landholder can evict his ryots, are fulfilled.

Several answers, total or partial, to this contention have been attempted. But attention may be confined to one, which is decisive. Section 8, on which defendants rely, is no doubt, as its marginal note indicates, the portion of the Act devoted to the topic of merger; and the result of its clause (1) is that, when the interests of the landholder and the occupancy ryot have become united in the same person, the right of the latter is, subject to the rights of third persons, determined. This provision, the one relied on by defendants, is, no doubt, absolutely general and if it stood unqualified their argument could be sustained. Clause 2 of the same section deals with a particular case of the class covered by clause (1), the acquisition of the occupancy-right by one amongst several co-landholders, but assumes that the general rule is applicable in those circumstances also, and provides for the protection of the co-landholder's right to his share of the rent and for the revival of the ryot's right in favour of any future lessee of the land. It is in these circumstances that, according to defendants, the case before us of the acquisition of the landholder's right by one of the co-ryots, the converse in some respects of the case dealt with in clause (2), must also be covered by clause (1). They, however, overlook another provision, the explanation printed after clause (6) of section 6. That clause prohibits acquisition otherwise than by inheritance or devise of occupancy-right by an ijaradar, or farmer, but the explanation following it is of wider scope, providing that a right of occupancy shall not be lost in consequence not only of its owner's subsequently holding the land as an ijaradar, or farmer, but also, what is unconnected with clause 6, of his becoming interested in it as landholder. Here, it is plain, we have what section 8 did not afford, provision for the particular case before us, and though its position in the explanation to a clause dealing with other matters and separated from section 8 by section 7, relating to mining rights, is anomalous, its unambiguous language cannot be deprived of effect. This being so, it is unnecessary to deal at length with the arguments based on the general doctrine of merger or the evidence found by the lower Courts to be in plaintiff's favour as to the manner in which the parties have understood their rights, especially as indicated by defendants' payment of thunduvaram, consistently with the payment being to a ryot owning occupancy-right. As regards the first point it may, however, be observed that, as the Act, a comprehensive tenancy code, is explicit, discussion of the general law is irrelevant; and that an exception to the general presumption of merger, similar to that allowed by the explanation after section 6, clause 6, though more logically placed, is to be found in the explanation to section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Vide also Abul Hasan Khan v. Bhura (7).

Defendants' remaining argument is that the lower Appellate Court should have dealt with their plea regarding a specific letting to them and the absence of any notice by which the tenancy thus created could be terminated. The plaint, paragraph 4, referred to their entering into arrangement with plaintiffs, which was subject to an obligation to surrender the land at the end of the fasli; and in paragraph 5 the giving of a registered notice in December 1911 to surrender before the end of the fasli, i.e., 30th June 1911, is mentioned. In the written statements the arrangement as denied and there was nothing regarding the notice, except a reference to it as "alleged". Issue No. 2 was framed regarding the arrangement. But there was no issue regarding the notice; and throughout defendants have never put forward any alternative contention that, if the arrangement was established, the lease under it was never terminated in a valid way by the notice alleged or otherwise. In these circumstances they cannot put forward such a contention for the first time in this Court at the hearing.

The second appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed, Second Appeal No. 1293 with costs and the others without costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 120, 132—Moveable property—Mortgage decree, if moveable property—Mortgage of mortgage decree, suit on—Limitation—Mortgaged property, purchase of portion of, by mortgagee—Mortgage, extinguishment—Intention.

A decree for sale obtained on the basis of a mortgage by the mortgagee is moveable property and a suit to enforce a hypothecation of such a decree is governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. [p. 5, col. 2]

Gous Mahomed v. Khawas Ali Khan, 23 C. 750; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 300, Jivan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal, 9 A. 103; A. W. N. (1886) 310; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 503, followed.

Where, however, the decree has been converted into immoveable property, the mortgagee of such decree is entitled not only to the benefit of the new security but also to the benefit of the larger period of limitation under Article 132 of the Limitation Act. [p. 6, col. 1.]

Where a person in the position of a mortgagee purchases a portion of the mortgaged property the mortgage does not thereby become pro tanto extinguished, unless it is stipulated that the mortgage is to be extinguished or unless there are circumstances from which an intention to extinguish the mortgage in whole or part may be inferred. [p. 6, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 7th December 1914.

Mr. S. K. Dar and the Hon'ble Munshi Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as it is necessary to set them out for the purpose of determining the two questions which are before us in appeal, may be stated briefly as follows:—

On 29th November 1899 a decree was obtained by Daya Ram and others on the basis of a mortgage executed in their favour on the 23rd of May 1891. Daya Ram and others are now represented by the defendants in the present suit. The decree so obtained was a decree for sale of certain mortgaged property which was described as being a 20-biswa share in Mouza Satta. This mouza, it is admitted, was made up of 2 mahals, Mahal Bhagwati Prasad and Mahal Madangopal. After this decree had been passed, that is to say, on the 9th of September 1901, the decree-holders purchased a $\frac{1}{2}$ share in Mahal Bhagwati Prasad in satisfaction of half of the decretal debt. At this stage these decree-holders borrowed a sum of Rs. 8,000 from the plaintiff in the present suit, one Pandit Lala Ram. In order to secure the money so borrowed a mortgage-deed was executed by them in favour of Lala Ram on the 17th of December 1901. As security for the money borrowed from Lala Ram the mortgagors hypothecated two items of property. One of these was the half share in Mahal Bhagwati Prasad which has been mentioned above. The other item consisted of the outstanding interest of these decree-holders in the decree which had been obtained on the 29th of November 1899. After this mortgage had been executed, that is to say, on the 4th of September 1902 the decree-holders of the decree of 29th November 1899 purchased a half share in the other mahal of Mouza Satta, namely, Mahal Madangopal. The effect of this purchase was to entirely satisfy the decree which was in their favour. Later on, that is to say, on the 17th of October 1902 these decree-holders sold a portion of this Mahal Madangopal to the plaintiff-mortgagee Lala Ram. The consideration for this sale was the sum of Rs. 7,500. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by Lala Ram in order to enforce his claim under the mortgage executed in his favour on the 17th of December 1901, and he sought to have the mortgage-debt satisfied by sale not only of a half share in Mahal Bhagwati Prasad but also of a half share in Mahal Madangopal. Various defences were raised to the suit which it is not necessary to set out here in detail. The lower Court has decreed the plaintiff's claim in full. Here we have been asked to determine two questions, viz., one of limitation; and another in connection with the plea raised by the defendants to the effect that the plaintiff's mortgage had to a certain extent become extinguished.

To deal first with the question of limitation, it arises in this way. The case for the appellant is that the mortgage made in favour of the plaintiff on the 17th of December 1901 was a mortgage both of moveable and immoveable property. It is contended that the hypothecation of the decree which had been obtained by the mortgagors in the year 1899 was a hypothecation of moveable property. The argument, therefore, is that any suit brought to enforce the charge against this portion of the property is governed by Article 120 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act, that is to say, the period for a suit against moveable property is six years. The point was raised in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and his view was that for the purposes of hypothecation the decree mortgaged to the plaintiff being a mortgage decree, it ought to be treated as immoveable property, and, therefore, Article 132 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applied, and he gave the plaintiff a period of twelve years within which to bring his suit. He remarks in his judgment that it is true that there are rulings in which it has been held that "for the purposes of registration, sale in execution of decree, and jurisdiction a hypothecation is considered moveable property". But he observes that he has been unable to find a ruling as to whether for the purposes of hypothecation a hypothecation decree of this kind was moveable property or not. We have no doubt whatever that on the authorities a decree such as these mortgagors obtained on the 29th of November 1899 is to be treated as moveable property, and we may refer in this connection to the Calcutta High Court in Gous Mahomed v. Khawas Ali Khan (1) and the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Jiwan Ali Beg v. Basa Mal (2). We must hold, therefore, that the decree which was hypothecated under this document executed in the plaintiff's favour on the 17th of December 1901 was moveable and not immoveable property. However, this does not settle the question which we have to deal with. We have already mentioned that after this mortgage was executed in favour of the plaintiff the decree became satisfied by the purchase made by the decree-holders of a half share in Mahal Madangopal. It follows, therefore, that we must treat this case as being one in which one security has been substituted for another. The moveable property which was hypothecated to the plaintiff under the deed of December 1901 is now represented, and has been represented since 4th September 1902, by the immoveable property consisting of a half share in Mahal Madangopal. It is impossible to doubt that the mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of this substituted security, and this being so, we have to consider why it is urged that a shorter period of limitation than that laid down in Article 132, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act should be held to apply to the present case. It is quite true, as has been argued on behalf of the appellant, that limitation for a suit based upon a hypothecation of moveable property is governed by Article 120, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act; but it seems to us that, since it has been found that the moveable property which was mortgaged or charged in the first instance has been converted into immoveable property, the mortgagee is entitled not only to the benefit of the new security, but also to the benefit of the larger period of limitation. In dealing with the question of limitation we have to take the facts as they stand at the date on which the suit was brought. There cannot be any doubt that by operation of law the property to which the property originally mortgaged has become converted is a security for the plaintiff's money. The only remedy which was left to the plaintiff, therefore, on the date on which the suit was brought was to bring a suit for recovery of money which was charged upon immoveable property. We are of opinion, therefore, that the argument that this portion of the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation cannot be supported. We think that the proper Article to apply is Article 132 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. We, therefore, hold that the suit was within time.

The 2nd question to be dealt with is raised in the 2nd and 3rd grounds of the memorandum of appeal. We have already mentioned that after this mortgage in suit had been executed, the mortgagors on the 17th of October 1902 executed a sale-deed in favour of the plaintiff Lala Ram. A translation of this document will be found at page 32 of the appellant's paper book. The property which was sold under this deed consisted of a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share of a $\frac{1}{2}$ of holding No. 1 situated in Mahal Mandangopal, and a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share in various items of sir and khudkasht land and also a similar share in a shop and the site of a house. The deed of sale sets out that the vendors are under the necessity of paying various sums of money to various creditors, including Lala Ram himself. It further recites that they require a sum of money for their own purposes. The document purports to transfer the entire property specified therein to Lala Ram for the sum of Rs. 7,500, the details of which are to be found at the bottom of the deed. In the body of the deed there is a recital to the effect that "up to the time of sale the property sold is not subject to any hypothecation or hypothecated by way of security to any one." There is a covenant in favour of the vendee to the effect that if it is found that there is any hypothecation over this property and the purchaser has to discharge the amount of the incumbrance, the vendors are to be liable to him for that sum. One of the items of consideration specified at the bottom of this sale-deed is Rs. 2,727-1-0. With respect to this sum the entry in the deed is to the effect that credit for this amount is being allowed to the vendors in respect of a debt due by them under a mortgage-bond of 17th December 1901 for Rs. 8,000, which they executed in favour of the vendee. Now it is argued that as the plaintiff, who at the time of taking this sale-deed had a charge upon Mahal Madangopal, took a conveyance of a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share of the mahal, it ought to be held that the mortgage qua $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share in this mahal has become extinguished, and in this connection stress is also laid upon the words which have already been mentioned, namely, the recital to the effect that the property was sold free of any hypothecation. It is quite true that there was no formal or written hypothecation of this property at the time of the sale to the plaintiff Lala Ram; but for the reasons we have already mentioned there can be no doubt that Lala Ram had a charge upon this property, the immoveable property which had been substituted for the moveable property which was originally hypothecated to him. It does not necessarily follow that because a person in the position of a mortgagee purchases a portion of the mortgaged property that the mortgage thereby becomes pro tanto extinguished. Everything depends upon the terms of the sale, and unless it is stipulated that the mortgage is to be extinguished, or unless there are circumstances from which an intention to extinguish the mortgage in whole or part may be inferred, it cannot be held that the mortgage merges in the purchase. It is to be noted that the language of the sale-deed is very clear. The vendors owed considerable sums of money to various persons under bonds executed at different times, and under the terms of the sale deed the purchaser was to discharge those various debts detailed at the foot of the sale-deed. The vendors at the time of registration received a sum of Rs. 1,300. It seems quite clear from the recital of the various items contained in this list of debts that the mortgagee had no intention of merging his mortgage security in his purchase to the extent of a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share. All that we find is that a portion of the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 2,727-1-0 is to be applied by the mortgagee in reduction of the mortgage-debt and not in extinction of any portion of the mortgage security, and that is what the plaintiff himself deposed in the witness-box. He has in the present suit given credit for Rs. 2,727-1-0 and the Subordinate Judge in these circumstances thought he was entitled to a decree for the balance. The defendants, even if it was open to them to do so, never put forward any evidence to show that there was any agreement that the mortgage should be extinguished to the extent of $\frac{2}{3}$ rd in so far as it affected Mahal Madangopal, nor did they show, as they might have done, that at the time this sale-deed was executed Rs. 2,727-1-0 represented the proportionate amount of the mortgage-debt which was chargeable on a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share out of $\frac{1}{2}$ of the Mahal Madangopal. We must take it that under the terms of this sale-deed all that was intended was to reduce the amount of the mortgage-debt due to the plaintiff. This being so, we are unable to entertain the plea that the mortgage has become extinguished qua a $\frac{2}{3}$ rd share out of Mahal Madangopal.

A reference is made in the 3rd ground of appeal to the fact that after the plaintiff had purchased this property it was pre-empted, and that the fact of its having been pre-empted did not make any difference. We agree with this proposition, but we have said enough to show that the appellant is not in a position to maintain the plea that any portion of this mortgage in suit has merged in the purchase made by the plaintiff. We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Court is right. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. L. P. Ferro, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to recover certain sums of money alleged to have been due on three contracts. The plaintiff has, however, given up his case against defendant No. 1, and agreed to consider that defendant No. 1 had paid off the amount alleged to have been due on the first of these contracts. Plaintiff has accordingly continued the proceedings against defendant No. 2, solely and in respect of the amounts alleged to be due only upon the second and third contracts. The plaintiff has throughout not been precise in stating the grounds of his claims against defendant No. 2 either upon the 2nd or 3rd contract, and this has led to considerable discussion whether they have been based upon breach of contract, or upon the drafts accepted by the second defendant upon those contracts. The plaintiffs' claims as appearing in the plaint were to recover the sums of Rs. 657-11-0 and Rs. 439 in respect of the loss on re-sale of the goods under the 2nd contract dated 1st of July 1913, and to recover the sum of Rs. 177 as the balance due for the goods delivered under the 3rd contract of the 23rd Sep.

tember 1913, and it was admitted after a careful examination of the plaint that these claims were based on breach of the contracts and not, as might have been supposed from several of the allegations in the plaint, on the drafts accepted by the second defendant upon those contracts.

The defendant No. 2 has pleaded that he was not bound to take delivery of the goods under the 2nd contract of the 1st July 1913, owing to delay through the documents of title having been sent by mistake to the wrong Bank. He has also questioned the amount of damages and in particular objects to the inclusion therein of the travelling expenses of his opponents. He has also pleaded non-liability to pay the sum of Rs. 158-4-0, demurrage charges on the goods sent under the 3rd contract of the 23rd September 1913, as here again the demurrage was due to the delay caused by the documents of title having been sent to the wrong Bank. He has lastly objected to pay any overdue interest on the drafts either under the second or third contract.

With regard to the first plea it does not appear that there was any definite agreement between the parties that the documents of title should be sent to any particular Bank. No doubt there was such a proposal in condition 4 of the conditions contained in the letter of the 28th February 1913 (Exhibit 40). But that particular condition does not appear to have been accepted in the reply of the 6th March 1913 (Exhibit 41). And no other suggestion of such a condition appears to have been made prior to the 2nd contract of the 1st July 1913. Moreover, whether there had or had not been such a condition, it would appear to have been waived by the unconditional acceptance of the drafts drawn upon the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China.

With regard to the amount of damages, these have been amply proved by the evidence and documents put in on commission by the witness Latif Karim, the Manager of Messrs. Ganpathy Pillay and Co., and the Agent, Bank of Madras (Exhibits 42 and 56 to 60). It was suggested with regard to their evidence that it indicated the sale of 90 bags of soojee and 110 bags of flour as specified in the 2nd contract of the 1st July 1913. But it was explained that this was due to mistake in delivery by steamship agents and argued that the damage, if any, caused thereby must be borne by the second defendant. There seems no reason to doubt that the mistake was so caused upon the evidence of Hormusji and it is quite clear that the damage, if any, caused thereby must be borne by the second defendant, as the goods had passed to him upon their shipment in the steamer under the terms of this C. I. F. contract. The effect of such a contract has been pointed out by Kennedy, L. J., at page 956 of his judgment in the case of Biddell Bros. v. Clemens Horst Co. (1); that judgment was accepted as correct by the House of Lords on appeal in Clemens Horst Co. v. Biddell Brothers (2). That is also the legal position to be deduced from sections 79 and 82 to 84 of the Indian Contract Act. But it does not appear to me that the claim to include travelling expenses as part of the loss caused by the breach of contract can be sustained. The Assistant Manager Hormusji went, it is true, in connection with these contracts to Negapatam in the Madras Presidency, but it is open to doubt whether this was the sole object of his journey looking to his other interests and the time spent by him in that Presidency. Such expenses are common in the ordinary prosecution of business and are not usually attributed directly to breaches of contract. They are, in my opinion, too remote in any case for recovery under section 73 of the Indian Contract Act. And they cannot be said to be part of the necessary expenses of re-sale, as such re-sale could and ordinarily would have been effected by the agents, the Chartered Bank of India in Madras. They could not, therefore, be recovered either under section 107 of the Indian Contract Act.

With regard to demurrage on the goods under the 3rd contract of the 23rd September 1913, it appears to me that the amount was properly payable by the second defendant. It is true that it was suggested in the letter of the 25th August 1913 and again in the letter of the 5th September 1913 (Exhibits 32 and 35) that the documents of title in all contracts should be sent to the Bank of Madras at Negapatam and that the documents in connection with this subsequent contract, the 3rd contract of the 23rd September 1913 (Exhibit 37), were sent instead to the Chartered Bank of India. But this fact was duly stated in the forwarding letter of the 20th September 1913 (Exhibit 45), and no exception was taken thereto, and the drafts were nevertheless duly accepted in the Chartered Bank of India. Again the subsequent correspondence between the parties referred merely to objections on account of the late arrival of the steamer and made no reference to the mistake in sending the documents of title to the Chartered Bank of India (Exhibits 46 to 54).

With regard to the objection to the payment of overdue interest in the drafts it appears to me that this objection must be allowed. As already indicated, this suit has been based not upon the drafts but upon breach of the contracts. No good reason has been shown why interest should be allowed on the amount of loss due to the breach of contract, and we are not concerned in this suit with any claim of interest on the drafts which might have been made in a properly constituted suit under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

The issues for decision must, therefore, be re-settled as follows, and thus decided:

Issue No. 1. Was defendant No. 2 justified in not taking delivery of the goods under the 2nd contract of the 1st July 1913? Finding: No.

Issue No. 2. Have the damages claimed been proved in respect of the 2nd contract of the 1st July 1913? Finding: Yes.

But the two sums of Rs. 115 each on account of travelling expenses must be excluded.

Issue No. 3. Was defendant No. 2 liable for the demurrage charges on the goods under the 3rd contract of the 23rd September 1913? Finding: Yes.

Issue No. 4. Is defendant No. 2 liable for overdue interest on the drafts under the 2nd and 3rd contracts? Finding: No.

Issue No. 5. General issues.

The defendant No. 2 is liable to pay Rs. 657-11-0 less Rs. 115 and less Rs. 67 plus the sum of Rs. 439 less Rs. 115 and less Rs. 55-3-7, that is to say, Rs. 475-11-0 plus Rs. 268-12-5 or a total of Rs. 744-7-5 on the 2nd contract and the sum of Rs. 177 less Rs. 26-7-8 or the sum of Rs. 150-8-4 in respect of the 3rd contract.

There should, therefore, be a decree against the second defendant for a total sum of Rs. 894-15-9 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit to date of payment with proportionate costs.

Suit decreed.

The Hon'ble Mr. Narain Prasad Asthana, for the Appellants.

Baru Benoy Kumar Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed the sum of Rs. 705-2-6. The plaintiff alleged that he had purchased certain property at an auction-sale in which the defendants first party were decree-holders, and defendants second party, judgment-debtors. He alleged that after he had purchased this property a suit was brought by a third party against the judgment-debtor for possession, which was successful. It appears that the plaintiff in the present suit applied to be brought on to the record of that suit. He was not brought on to the record and the suit was finally decided against the judgment-debtor after purchase by the plaintiff. Under these circumstances the plaintiff alleges that he is entitled to get back the purchase-money and interest from the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor. The Court below has decreed the claim against the decree-holders only. The latter have appealed.

The plaintiff has never had the sale set aside nor taken steps to do so. Order XXI, rule 91, provides that a purchaser at any sale in execution of a decree "may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold". Order XXI, rule 92, provides for the setting aside or confirmation of the sale and further provides that no suit shall lie to set aside the sale. Order XXI, rule 93, provides for the return of the purchase-money when the sale has been set aside. It is, therefore, quite clear that under the provisions of the present Code, the purchase-money can only be got back where the sale has been set aside. To allow the purchaser to get back the price without having the sale set aside, perhaps long after the sale, would obviously open the door to much fraud and would place the decree-holder at a very great disadvantage. Reliance has been placed on behalf of the respondent on the Full Bench case of this Court in Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1). In that case the point was whether a plaintiff could recover the purchase-money he had paid on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold and that he had for that reason been deprived of it by a regular suit or whether he was confined to the remedy provided by the then Code of Civil Procedure. The Court held that, notwithstanding that he might have got back his money by an application, he had the alternative remedy of bringing a separate suit. It is only necessary to point out that there is a marked difference in the terms of the present Code of Civil Procedure and the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Section 315 of the latter Act provided that the purchaser might get back the purchase-money when a sale had been set aside under sections 310 (a), 312 or 313, or when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold, and the purchaser was for that reason deprived of it. We have already pointed out that under the provisions of the present Code, it is only when the sale has been set aside, that the purchase-money can be returned. In the case of Muhammad Najib Ullah v. Jai Narain (2) a somewhat similar question arose. The learned Judges who decided that case expressed great doubts as to the correctness of the decision in the Full Bench case of Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1) above referred to. The case was not finally decided at the time, an issue being referred to the Court below as to whether or not the judgment-debtor had a "saleable interest". It does not appear what the final order of the Court was. Possibly there was a finding that the judgment-debtor had a saleable interest. The learned Vakil for the respondent points out that that case arose after the alterations in the Code. It is quite clear from the judgment that the attention of the Court was not called to the change in the law. It, therefore, seems to us to be clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to get back the purchase-money by virtue of the provisions of the Code. We think it cannot be argued that he has a right to get back his purchase-money under the circumstances of the present case, irrespective of the provisions of the Code. In the case of Shanto Chandar Mukerji v. Nain Sukh (3) the learned Judges say at page 356: "We think that a purchaser is only entitled to receive back his purchase-money under the conditions stated in section 315, whether by application under that section or by suit. As regards private sales, there is under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor. As regards sales under decree of a Court, there is no warranty of title either by the decree-holder or by the Court". In the case of Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeez (4) their Lordships remarked: "Now it is, of course, perfectly clear that when the property has been so sold under a regular execution, and the purchaser is afterwards evicted under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy against either the Sheriff or the judgment-creditor".

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the decree of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Special Land Acquisition Judge, 24 Pergannas, on a reference made by the Collector under section 49 (1) of the Land Acquisition Act. It appears that the owner of the house demanded a reference on the point, on the ground that the cutting of the corner of his compound with the whole of one and part of a second godown near the gate would be the acquisition of a part of his house contrary to the provisions of the Act. The learned Collector in making the reference drew attention to the question of what would be reasonably required for the full and unimpaired use of the house, but he very properly made the reference in terms of the section for the determination of the question whether the land proposed to be acquired does or does not form part of the house. The learned Special Land Acquisition Judge appears to have entirely ignored this question, which is the only question he had to decide, and to have based his decision on a clause in section 49 which allows him to take into consideration the question whether the land proposed to be taken is reasonably required for the full and unimpaired use of a house, manufactory or building. That such a question should be taken into consideration where the circumstances allow, there can be no doubt. But it cannot be held that that is the only question, or indeed the main question to be decided.

In appeal before us a preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies, and the authority of Hasun Molla v. Tasiruddin (1) is cited. That is direct authority only for the proposition that an order of the Special Land Acquisition Judge refusing to restore a claim case by setting aside a decree passed ex parte for default of the claimant, is not an award and does not come within section 54 of the Land Acquisition Act, but the learned Judges who decided that case pointed out that in every case the order complained of must be considered and the Court has to see whether that order is an award or any part of an award. An order of this nature has been dealt with in appeal on several occasions by the Allahabad Court and by the Madras Court, and it has never been doubted that an appeal would lie. But assuming that it did not lie, we should certainly have to interfere in this case in the exercise of our powers of revision, which we have been asked to exercise by a petition upon which a Rule has been issued.

We have already noted that the learned Judge's judgment had altogether missed the point for adjudication; and the only point for consideration is whether these godowns do or do not form part of the premises which consist of a gentleman's house and the necessary outbuildings attached to it, or whether they are separate pieces of land which can be taken away without detriment to the reasonable requirements for the full and unimpaired use of the house. In deciding the latter point the learned Judge makes use of a somewhat curious argument. He says that because the accommodation for servants is already extremely defective it cannot injure the owner to make it still more defective. This is an argument to which we cannot accede. The fact is that these two godowns which the learned Judge calls "durwan's godowns" are the only servants' house, properly speaking, in the whole of the premises. The premises have been let in flats apparently for many years and there are two kitchens one on each side of the house which, of course, cannot be used as residences for the servants. There is a stable and there is a very small hut by the side of the stable, which is said to be the residence of the sweeper. Where the superior servants of the two tenants live we are at a loss to conceive, unless they live in these durwan's lodges. The Judge himself shows that no durwan is required, because he says no carriages ever enter the compound. It seems to us that these two godowns are necessarily part and parcel of the building and a most important part of that building for the purpose of letting it out to gentlemen as a place of residence.

We must, therefore, set aside the order made by the learned Judge and direct that this portion of the building be not acquired unless the whole premises are acquired by the Land Acquisition Collector. The costs given against the claimant in the lower Court must be refunded, if paid, and there will be costs of this hearing in favour of the appellant.

The Rule will be made absolute for the same reasons without costs.

Appeal allowed; Rule made absolute.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—Rudra Nand, Kula Nand and Tirtha Nand were three brothers of a Musammat JANAKBATI THAKURAIN v. GAJANAND THAKUR.

Mitakshara family living joint in food and worship. It is alleged that Kula Nand separated from the joint family about twenty years before the Will, which is the subject of the case before us.

Rudra Nand died on the 11th of June 1911, leaving a Will alleged to have been executed on the 9th of June 1911. Probate of the Will was applied for by Gira Nand, and Gaja Nand, sons of Tirtha Nand, on the 6th of December 1911. On the 18th May 1912, Janakbati the widow of Rudra Nand filed an objection attacking the Will as forgery. On the 18th of August 1912 a petition alleged to have been signed by Janakbati was filed before the Court, stating that she and the propounders had agreed to divide the testator's property and praying that the application for Probate might be dismissed on compromise without decision. It appears that on the same day another petition purporting to have been signed by Janakbati was filed before the Court, stating that the petition of compromise had not in fact been signed by her.

On the 25th of May 1912 the learned District Judge framed the following issues for determination:—

1. Is the Will propounded by the plaintiffs genuine?

2. Was the testator Rudra Nand Thakur in a sound disposing state of mind when he is alleged to have executed the said Will?

3. Are the plaintiffs entitled to Probate as prayed?

But on the 19th of May 1913 he disregarded the issues framed on the 25th of May 1912 and addressed himself only to the two following issues:—

1. Can this case be disposed of in terms of the petition of compromise?

2. Did Musammat Janakbati sign the petition of compromise with full knowledge of its contents after it was written?

The learned District Judge took evidence upon the two issues abovementioned and found that inasmuch as the objectrix had with full knowledge signed the petition of compromise, she was no longer competent to resile from the same. He accordingly ordered the case to be dismissed in terms of the petition of compromise. The learned District Judge's decree is to the same effect and after reciting that the case is dismissed in accordance with the petition of compromise, it proceeds to embody in it the full terms of that compromise. The present appeal before us is preferred by the objectrix, who asks that the case should be remanded in order that the execution of the Will may be proved in solemn form.

It is quite clear, and the learned Vakil for the respondent admits, that the learned District Judge's order, as it stands, cannot be supported. In a Probate case a decree such as that passed by him is meaningless. There can be no dismissal of a Probate case in accordance with the terms of a petition of compromise. The main issue in such a case is, whether or not the Will has been proved, and as has been pointed out in several decisions in the Courts, the only effect of a compromise is to reduce a contentious proceeding into one which is not contentious; but this does not absolve the Court from the task of either granting Probate or refusing it. If a compromise has been made and the objector withdraws from the contest the Court will grant Probate in common form, but the Court cannot dismiss the case altogether and embody the terms of the compromise as if the decree was one capable of execution by him.

The learned Vakil for the respondent relies upon Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, read with section 83 of the Indian Probate and Administration Act. But these sections merely mean that in a Probate case the Civil Procedure Code so far as possible determines the procedure of the Court. These sections nowhere say that it is competent to the Court to allow the parties to divide the testator's property without proving the Will.

The cases of Kunja Lal Chowdhury v. Kailash Chandra Chowdhury (1) and Sarada Kanta Das v. Gobinda Mchan Das (2) carry the case of the respondent no further. In the first of these two cases it was, no doubt, laid down that when Probate has been given in common form upon the filing of a petition of compromise by the objector it will no longer be open to the same objector to re-open the proceedings by way of revocation. But the learned Vakil for the respondent has been unable to show any case which goes so far as to say that before Probate is given by the Court it is not open to the objector to insist upon the proof of the Will. The view of the learned lower Court appears to have been that as on the 28th of August 1912 the objectrix had agreed to a compromise, it was no longer open to her to resile from it except upon proof of fraud. In my opinion that is an erroneous proposition of law. It must always be a question of fact whether the proceedings are contentious or not. It may be that on the 28th of August 1912 the objectrix had consented to withdraw her objection, but it is quite clear that on the 19th of August 1913 she had withdrawn that petition and that she was insisting upon the trial of the issue whether the Will had been duly executed. She was not estopped from withdrawing her objection and from asking that the Will should be proved in solemn form. This being so, the order and decree of the lower Court must be set aside and the case remanded for disposal according to law. The objectrix will have a chance of contesting the genuineness of the Will and if she fails, Probate must be given in solemn form. If she withdraws her objection Probate must be given in common form, but the Court must do either one or the other of these two things. If she succeeds the application of the propounders will be dismissed. As regards the compromise alleged to have been made by the objectrix, the Court has no greater power to enforce it than any other contract made out of Court.

The appeal is decreed with costs, which will be according to scale.

Custom—Hindu Law—Succession, collateral—Distribution among sons according to number of their mothers, effect of.

In a case governed by custom, where property is distributed among the sons of a person according to the number of their mothers, the descendants of the sons of one of them cannot succeed collaterally to the property left by the descendants of another of them so long as other descendants, though lower in degree, of the same stock are alive. [p. 14, col. 2.]

The effect of such a custom is to constitute brothers by the same father and mother and their descendants persons of one stock for purposes of inheritance, and as a logical result of the custom, persons who are descended from a different mother, though nearer in degree, are not entitled to preference over descendants of the same mother. Babu Ram Chandra, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether in a case governed by custom, where property is distributed among the sons of a person according to the number of their mothers, the descendants of the sons of one of them can succeed collaterally to the property left by the descendants of another of them, so long as the other descendants, though lower in degree, of the same stock are alive. The Courts below held that the differentiation made by the custom between the sons of different mothers cannot be extended to their descendants. The wajib-ul-arz embodying the custom, is silent on the question of collateral succession, but on the finding that a custom exists by which the distribution is made according to the mothers, it does not seem equitable that the property of the descendants of one of those mothers should be allowed to go to the descendants of another, so long as the descendants of the former are alive. Hari Kishun, the common ancestor of the parties of this case, had three wives, and it is common ground that by his first wife, he had two sons, Panna and Gaini, who together got a one-third share of the estate on the death of their father. By the second wife, he had two sons, Siva and Prasad, who similarly got one-third of the estate left by their father. By the third wife, he had a son, Ichhai, who got the remaining one-third. Gur Prasad and Gaya Prasad, the sole surviving descendants of Siva, died of plague in September 1911 or thereabout. Their property is in the possession of Lachhman and Baladin, the descendants of Prasad, the full brother of Siva. The descendants of Panna, Gaini and Ichhai seek to oust them on the ground that they are higher in relationship to the deceased, Gur Prasad and Gaya Prasad. The Courts below, applying the Hindu Law, gave them a decree, but the effect of that decree is to render the above custom absolutely nugatory, for it does not allow the benefit of that custom to the descendants of the persons who derived title in pursuance of it. The effect of such a custom is to constitute brothers by the same father and mother and their descendants persons of one stock for purposes of inheritance, and as a logical result of the custom, the plaintiffs who are descended from a different mother are not entitled to preference.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiffs' claim dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order of Reference by Parlett, J.:—

In Civil Regular Suit No. 54 of 1912 U Zo sued his wife, his daughter and his son-in-law for a declaration that he was the owner of a piece of paddy land and of a house and its site, which his wife had sold to his daughter and son-in-law by registered deed on the 29th June 1910. He admitted that he had been turned out of the house three years before the suit by his daughter, who a few months before the suit had also taken possession of the paddy land. He was granted a declaration but upon appeal his suit was on the 27th October 1913 dismissed under the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, because he omitted to sue for possession. On the 9th January 1914 he filed the present suit against the same defendants to eject them from the paddy land and house and site. One of the defences raised was that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, but the Sub-Divisional Judge held that it was not barred on the authority of Ram Sewak Singh v. Nakched Singh (1), remarking that the defendant could not show any Burma ruling on the point, notwithstanding that he produced a certified copy of the judgment of this Court in Maung Shwe Tun v. Ma Me (2), which is to the contrary effect. On appeal the Divisional Judge held the suit to be barred under Order II, rule 2, but he gave no reasons and quoted no authority. The plaintiff's representatives have appealed against the decision.

There appear to be authorities that such a suit is not barred. In Jibunti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbuty (3), where a previous suit for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession of land had been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession at the time of filing the suit, a subsequent suit on the same title for recovery of possession was held not to be barred under section 43 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to Order II, rule 2, of the present Code. The decision rested upon the principle that the causes of action in the two suits were not the same, as is set out in the following passage:—"In deciding the question whether this suit is barred by the former suit, we must see if the cause of action is the same in both suits. A cause of action consists of the circumstances and facts which are alleged by the plaintiff to exist and which, if proved, will entitle him to the relief or to some part of the relief prayed for, and is to be sought for within the four corners of the plaint. The allegations in the plaint in the former suit were the death of Promotho Nath, the alleged heirship of the plaintiff to his estate, the possession by the plaintiff of that estate, and the proceedings under the Criminal Code and in the Registration Court which threatened to result in a disturbance by the defendants of the rights enjoyed by the plaintiff. These constituted the cause of action in that suit and the relief asked for was a decree declaring the plaintiff's title as heir, the effect of which would have been to quiet him in the possession of his estate. Upon such a cause of action a declaratory decree was the only remedy he could sue for. How then can it be said that he omitted to sue for any remedy in respect of that cause of action when he was entitled to no other?" In the case now under consideration there was no allegation in the plaint in the earlier suit that the plaintiff was in possession of the property: admittedly he was not and it appears to me that plaintiff having been dispossessed, the cause of action in the second suit had already arisen when the first suit was filed, and that the cause of action in the two suits was the same.

The Allahabad case referred to above [Ram Sewak Singh v. Nakched Singh (1)] also proceeded upon the lines that the causes of action in the two suits were not the same and that when the first suit was brought the plaintiff was not entitled to the remedy asked for in the second suit. At page 267 occurs the following passage:—"It only remains to be seen whether section 43 was rightly held by the lower Court to bar the claim. Now it is to be observed that the basis upon which the appellants rested their former prayer for relief was the execution of the deed of gift of the 10th December 1878, by which they declared their rights had been interfered with. They made no claim for possession of their shares, because at that time no act had been done by the respondent amounting to the assertion of a possession adverse to their title and, indeed, as will be seen from their plaint they plainly intimated that, as regards one of the villages in which they claimed a share, it was in the possession of the respondent under a lease to which they took no objection, and as to the other, that they were in joint possession with him. It is obvious, therefore, that, while at the time of the institution of the former litigation their cause of action was the deed of gift, when the present suit was brought something more had accrued by reason of the obstruction offered by the respondent to their exercising the right of proprietorship over their shares. In the one case, no possession having been asserted by the respondent, the appellants were not entitled to sue him for possession; in the other case an additional cause of action had arisen, which gave them the right to the further remedy. Under these circumstances it does not appear to me that the appellants have laid themselves under the prohibition of the third paragraph of section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code". This shows that the circumstances were different from those of the present case. As regards the remedy open to the plaintiff in the first suit, the reasons of the learned Judge for his view are to be found at pages 269 to 271 and amount, so far as I can understand, to this—section 42 of the Specific Relief Act empowers a Court to grant a mere declaratory decree, only when that is the sole relief to which the plaintiff is entitled. If the plaintiff is able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title and omits to do so, he is not entitled to a bare declaration. If, therefore, he sues for a mere declaration when he is able to seek further relief, he is not entitled to the relief of a declaration. But Order II, rule 2 (3), applies only where, there being identity of causes of action in the two suits, the plaintiff is entitled in the first suit to more than one relief; and it has no application to a case where in the first suit he is entitled to no relief at all. I find it difficult to hold that, in a case like the present, the plaintiff is not entitled at all to the relief of a declaration of his title to the property. It appears to me that if his case was true he was entitled to that relief, but he was only allowed to obtain it in a suit in which he asked also for the further relief of possession to which his cause of action also entitled him. It is significant that the word "relief" has been substituted in Order II, rule 2 (3), for the word "remedy" which appeared in section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, thereby assimilating the wording more nearly to that of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Nonoo Singh Monda v. Anand Singh Monda (4) also proceeded on the ground that the causes of action in the two suits were dissimilar. In Ambu v. Kettilamma (5) a plaintiff was held not to be debarred from filing a second suit on grounds of action of the occurrence of which the plaintiff was ignorant when the first suit was filed. This does not apply to the present case, where the plaintiff was fully aware of his dispossession when he filed his first suit.

Mohan Lal v. Bilaso (6) merely followed the earlier Calcutta case. Nathu valad Pandu v. Budhu valad Bhika (7) was also decided on the ground that the second suit was on a different cause of action from the first.

Bandey Ali v. Gokul Misir (8) followed the earlier Calcutta and Allahabad cases.

No reported decision from Burma has been quoted but the ruling in Maung Shwe Tun v. Ma Me (2) of this Court seems to be applicable to the present case. The point is important, and I think it is desirable that it should be authoritatively decided in this Province. I, therefore, refer to a Bench the question, whether a plaintiff whose suit for a declaration of title to land has been dismissed on the ground that he was not in possession at the time of filing the suit, is debarred by Order II, rule 2 (3), of the Code of Civil Procedure from bringing a subsequent suit on the same title for recovery of possession of the same land?

JUDGMENT.

FOX, C. J.—The question referred is elaborately discussed in the judgment of Karamat Husain, J., in Bandey Ali v. Gokul Misir (8). He held that a plaintiff who had sued for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from cutting down the trees in a grove, and whose suit had been dismissed on the ground that he had failed to prove his possession of the grove, could not subsequently sue for possession of the property. He founded his decision on the principle of section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, which is repeated in rule 2 of Order II in the 1st Schedule of the present Code. The Appellate Bench, however, reversed the decision in view of that Court and other High Courts having for a long time accepted the view that the dismissal of a suit for a declaratory decree on the ground that the plaintiff is not, or has not proved that he is, in possession is no bar to a subsequent suit by him for possession. In Silimar Sahib v. Bontala Haman Sahib (9) a Bench of the Madras High Court has recently adopted the same view.

The case of Jibunti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbutty (3) is a prominent case, in which it was held that a similar section in the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 did not bar a subsequent suit for possession. It is to be noted that in that case the plaintiff in his first suit for a declaratory decree alleged that he was in possession of the property. That suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession and consequently was not entitled to a declaratory decree. If he could have proved his possession a declaratory decree was all he need have asked for, so on the allegations in his plaint he did not omit to sue for any relief that he was entitled to. It is difficult to resist the reasons given for holding that in such a case the principle of rule 2 of Order II does not preclude a plaintiff from bringing a suit for possession. In order to obtain a mere declaratory decree under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act a plaintiff must allege and prove that he is in possession of the property in respect of which he seeks the declaration he asks, for if he does not do so the proviso to the section precludes the Court from making the declaration, it being manifest that if he is not in possession it is open to him to seek the further relief of a decree for possession.

White, J.'s remarks upon the difficulty in some cases of proving possession are cogent, and it certainly might work hardship to a party entitled to property who believed himself to be in possession of it, if by reason of an adverse decision on the question of possession only he were debarred from taking any further action to assert his title to the property.

It seems that in most of the cases in the Indian Courts the plaintiffs in their suits for declaratory decrees alleged that they were in possession.

In the case before this Court the plaintiff in the suit for a declaratory decree contains no allegation as to the plaintiff being in possession. In the course of his evidence he made admissions which shewed that he was not in possession, and the suit had necessarily to be dismissed. The question is, whether in such a case the plaintiff is debarred from bringing a suit for possession.

It would be anomalous if he could bring such a suit after making an untrue allegation about being in possession, but could not do so because he had said nothing at all about the possession of the property. His first suit for a declaratory decree was in fact defective, and should have been rejected under rule 2 of Order VII, because without an allegation that he was in possession it did not disclose a sufficient cause of action entitling him to the relief he claimed. The rejection of the plaint would not have precluded him from presenting a fresh plaint containing the necessary allegation that he was in possession of the property. The suit on such a plaint would have had to be dismissed at the hearing because he could not prove possession, but according to the rulings of the Indian High Courts, it would have been open to him to have brought a subsequent suit for possession.

Under the circumstances I would hold that the plaintiff was not debarred from bringing the subsequent suit for possession by reason of his not having made any allegation as to possession in his suit for a declaratory decree, and I would answer the question referred in the negative.

Before admitting a plaint for a mere declaratory decree a Court should take particular care to see that the plaint contains the allegations which must be proved before such a decree can be given. As above stated, it is necessary for a plaint for a mere declaratory decree as to any right to property to contain an allegation that the plaintiff is in possession of the property.

The costs of this reference will follow the result of the suit, three gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

(9) 20 Ind. Cas. 418; 38 M. 247; (1913) M. W. N. 554; 25 M. L. J. 125.

DIWAN SINGH v. BALDEO SINGH.

TWOMEY, J.—The answer to the question referred turns on the meaning of the term "cause of action" in Order II, rule 2. It is only if the cause of action in the two suits is the same that the rule bars the second suit.

In England the term has been defined authoritatively as "every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court": Read v Brown (10). The wide definition given by White, J., in the Calcutta case of Jibunti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbutty (3) is in conformity with the above. "A cause of action consists of the circumstances and facts which are alleged by the plaintiff to exist and which, if proved, will entitle him to the relief or to some part of the relief prayed for, and is to be sought for within the four corners of the plaint". The opinion that the cause of action is to be sought for within the four corners of the plaint has been generally followed by the Courts in India.

It would appear, therefore, that Order II, rule 2, bars a second suit only where the essential allegations in the two plaints are identical. If in one suit in respect of land the plaint is silent as to possession or if it states that the plaintiff is in possession, while in the other suit the defendant is alleged to be in possession, the two suits are to that extent based upon different causes of action. Such is the case as regards the two suits which Parlett, J., had before him and I am unable to concur in his view that the cause of action in the two suits was the same.

I agree with the learned Chief Judge in answering the question in the negative.

TWOMEY, J.—In conformity with the finding of the Bench the decree of the Divisional Court is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for decision on the merits.

A certificate will be granted entitling the appellant to a refund of the amount of Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal to this Court.

The other costs of the appeal in this Court will follow the final result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Error of law.

An error of law committed by the lower Court does not furnish any ground for interference in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Application against the order of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 18th December 1915, reversing that of the Bench of the Honorary Munsifs, Hardoi, dated the 30th July 1915.

Babu Gopal Sahai Bhargava and Pandit Brij Narain Tankha, for the Applicants.

Babu Raghuvir Sahai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed in appeal by the District Judge of Hardoi. I have perused the application and I am at a loss to understand how it can be treated as an application for revision. There is no reference in any of the grounds set out in the application to the matters which are referred to in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. What is asserted in the petition is that the learned Judge has been guilty of an error in law in coming to his decision. That may very well be, but an error of law committed by the lower Court does not furnish any ground for interference in revision under section 115 of the Code. No ground for interference has been disclosed. I dismiss the application with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Possession, physical, whether necessary, for maintainability of suit—Landlord, possession of, nature of.

When a tenant quits land the landlord's possession revives and he retains it till he passes it on to the next tenant, and if during the interval he is dispossessed by a third person he can eject the latter by means of a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

Mr. S. C. Guha, for the Applicant.

Mr. May Aung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff let out the land in suit to tenants on yearly leases for a number of years in succession. The last tenancy expired about the beginning of March 1913, when the tenant quitted the land. In June 1913 the first respondent entered upon the land and leased it to second respondent as his tenant. The plaintiff in July filed a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act to recover possession. The third respondent's name was struck off the record, and should not have appeared in the judgment and decree nor in this application. His name will be again struck off the record.

The District Court dismissed the suit on the grounds that while plaintiff's tenant was still in possession, plaintiff could not maintain a suit under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, and that after he relinquished possession and before the plaintiff put a fresh tenant in possession the plaintiff himself had not possession and could not maintain the suit. As to the first point there is authority for it: Sonaton Shome v. Sheikh Helim (1), but it does not arise as the dispossession was after the tenancy expired. As to the second it appears to me that the District Judge did not apply his mind to the law applicable, nor to the correct state of facts. The plaintiff had for several years been in possession of the land, usually no doubt through tenants whose leases ran roughly from June till March. During the currency of the leases the tenants were in actual possession, which they derived from the plaintiff. Each March when the tenant quitted the land the plaintiff's possession revived and he retained it till he passed it on to the next tenant in June. See Jagannatha Charry v. Rama Rayer (2). In this case before he so passed it on, the defendants entered upon the land and dispossessed the plaintiff, and he was entitled to a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act.

The decree of the District Court is set aside, and plaintiff is granted a decree as prayed for with costs in both Courts against the defendants. Advocate's fees in this Court two gold mohurs.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Ram Rani Kunwar, one of the defendants-respondents, took a lease of certain plots of land from the plaintiff for a period of twenty years for the purpose of constructing a house on an agreement to pay a rental of Rs. 3 per year. The allegation of the plaintiff was that he had a right to eject the lessee from the premises after the expiry of twenty years without the payment of any compensation, and he sued accordingly for possession of the said house with the site occupied by it and claimed Rs. 140 on account of arrears of rent for the entire period. The defence, so far as it is material for the purpose of this appeal, was that the plaintiff had agreed to pay Rs. 100 on account of the costs of the construction of the house besides the costs of the annual repairs, in case he wanted to take possession of the house, and that by virtue of a sale, subsequently effected by the plaintiff in respect of the site occupied by the house in 1901, the lessee became the full proprietor of the site and was not liable to ejectment. In regard to arrears of rent claimed, the defence was that the plaintiff had been paid the rent up to the date of the said sale. The house is occupied by Musammam Ram Rani Kunwar and her father Jai Gobind Lal. The Court of first instance found in favour of the defendants-respondents and the lower Appellate Court took the same view.

The main question urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that the sale set up on behalf of the defendants was unenforceable, inasmuch as the sale-deed relied on by them as evidence of the transaction was unregistered and inadmissible in evidence so as to affect immoveable property of any value within the meaning of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act.

It is unquestionably true that under that section every sale-deed is required to be registered in order that it may be operative. But in cases of tangible immoveable property of a value of less than Rs. 100 no sale-deed is required at all, and a transaction of sale can be completed, if it is accompanied by the delivery of possession. In other words, if in the case of a sale of a value below Rs. 100, the transaction is evidenced by a document which is unregistered, the vendee may fall back upon his title by delivery of possession. That title has been found in this case by both the Courts below, and the defendants are entitled to take advantage of the contract of sale in their favour, in accordance with which they continued in proprietary possession, irrespective of the sale-deed which was unregistered and insufficient to pass any title. From the date of the sale, no rent was paid to the plaintiff for a period of nearly 13 years. The statement of Jai Gobind Lal, who was acting on behalf of Musammam Ram Rani Kunwar, was believed by the Court below and that of the plaintiff disbelieved.

On behalf of the plaintiff certain statements of Jai Gobind Lal in other cases, in which he was summoned as a witness in connection with mortgages effected by the lessors, were produced to prove that Jai Gobind Lal did not set up any such purchase in the statements he made at the time. Certain judgments and decrees passed in cases to which the defendants-respondents were no parties were also produced to show that the conduct of Jai Gobind Lal was inconsistent with his having purchased the site. Those documents were rejected as irrelevant by the Court of first instance and, though the lower Appellate Court does not expressly say so, they were excluded from consideration by that Court too. The mortgages to which those documents, judgments and decrees relate were, however, made prior to 1901, and the inference which the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant suggests should be drawn from the omission of Jai Gobind Lal to refer to his purchase cannot be regarded as legitimate. The Courts below rightly refused to consider the said documents as having any relevant bearing on the question at issue.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Certain khoti lands belonging to plaintiff were sold in execution of a decree obtained by defendant against plaintiff and were purchased by the former. Plaintiff subsequently sued to recover possession of the lands on the ground that they were occupancy lands and were not transferable under section 2 of the Khoti Settlement Act:

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—We have had a very full and interesting argument upon the two points raised in this appeal, viz., whether the plaintiff's contention, which succeeded in the Courts below, is not res judicata against him, and whether his prayer to have the sale of 1912 set aside is not time-barred.

We are of opinion that this is not a case of an alleged res judicata against a Statute, and we are, therefore, not called upon to examine certain cases which have been cited to us and which, on a first view, may appear to be in conflict. What we think clearly was res judicata here was the question of fact raised again by the plaintiff in this suit and decided in his favour, viz., whether or not the lands sold at the Court-sale of 1912 were occupancy lands within the prohibition of section 9 of the Khoti Settlement Act. That was a point which the plaintiff, if he meant to rely upon it at all, was bound to take, we think, at the time the Court proposed to sell the land in suit. It is not as though it was then admitted that the lands to be sold were occupancy lands. Had that been so, no Court could have been found to sell them in the face of the direct prohibition of the Legislature. When, therefore, we find the Court selling these lands without any challenge by, or protest on behalf of, the judgment-debtor, we take it that they must have been sold on the basis of the judgment debtor having a saleable interest in them. Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta. Inferentially, then, the sale of 1912 decided as between the plaintiff and the defendant, that is to say, the judgment-debtor and judgment-creditor, that the lands sold were not occupancy lands. Here the plaintiff has brought the suit to have it established that they were, and he was allowed to raise that question of fact and the whole case has turned upon the answer to it. It is precisely that part of the plaintiff's present suit which, in our opinion, was res judicata within the language and spirit of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Much has been said here upon the applicability of certain rules in Order XXI to the case of a judgment-debtor. Mr. Shingne argued that part of the respondent's case with very great thoroughness and ability, and for my part I am very clearly of opinion that none of those rules were ever intended to apply to the judgment-debtor himself.

It is not upon that ground that we think the plea of res judicata is here established so much as upon general principle and having regard to what is in controversy, what was and is to be inquired into and what has in fact been finally determined in this case by the executing Court between the executing creditor and judgment-debtor. The present suit is really a continuation of that execution proceeding or at any rate has been treated as such in both the lower Courts. The parties are, therefore, the same and what has resulted is that a question of fact, which, as we have shown, was decided, if not explicitly yet by necessary implication, between them in 1910, has been allowed to be re-opened and investigated and adjudicated upon a second time.

That being so, we have little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the appellant's contention upon this point is sound and must prevail. It becomes, therefore, unnecessary to go into the second equally interesting point of limitation upon which the appellant has relied.

We think that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with all costs on him throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th May 1915, upholding the order of the Subordinate Judge, Babraich, dated the 31st March 1915.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Syed Shahenshah Husain Rizwi, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—On 16th April 1896 Musammal Umat-us-Sughra executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of Saiyid Muhammad Asghar for Rs. 2,000 hypothecating 71 bighas, 4 biswas, 13 biswanis in the villages of Jarwal and Rasulpur. The principal money carried no interest. On the same day Musammal Umat-us-Sughra executed a registered lease in favour of Muhammad Asghar, by which she transferred to him the whole of the property mortgaged for a rent of Rs. 180. The mortgage-deed contained a condition to the effect that, if before the expiration of six years from the date of execution the mortgagor repaid any portion of the principal money to the mortgagee, the mortgagee was to pay to the mortgagor interest at 11-1/16 per cent. per annum on the amount so repaid. Thus, while the mortgagee was to receive no interest on the principal money secured by the deed, the mortgagor was to receive interest on anything that she might choose to repay. The profits of the property hypothecated are Rs. 400 a year. The learned District Judge has concluded from the terms of the deed of mortgage and the lease and the amount of the profits of the hypothecated property that, in spite of the fact that the deed declares absolutely that no interest is to be paid on the principal money, the intention of the parties was that the principal money should bear interest and that property had been transferred in order that the profits therefrom might be enjoyed in lieu of interest.

His calculation is as follows. Rs. 2,000 had been advanced. Property producing Rs. 400 a year had been transferred. Out of Rs. 400 a year Rs. 180 were to be repaid to the mortgagor, and the remaining Rs. 220 were left to be enjoyed by the mortgagee, who thus obtained a return of Rs. 220 a year on Rs. 2,000 advanced—that is to say, a return of 11 per cent., and, as the mortgagee was obtaining 11 per cent. secured for six years, the mortgagor, if she repaid any portion of the principal money, was entitled to get an amount of practically 11 per cent. on her repayments. Musammam Umat-us-Sughra died in August 1904. When the six years for which the mortgaged property was leased by the lease of 1896 had expired, the lessee (that is to say, the mortgagee under the mortgage-deed) was ejected from the property. Subsequently, however, he was re-admitted into possession of a portion of the property.

The present suit has been brought for the recovery of Rs. 2,000. The deed, as has been stated, was executed on 16th April 1896 and the period of repayment was fixed at six years. The suit being brought on 15th April 1914 is thus within time.

The defendants' main contention was that the subsequent restoration of the mortgagee to possession of a portion of the property mortgaged constituted what is known as a patotan transaction, that is to say, that the arrangement between the parties was that the mortgagee should remain in possession of that property and enjoy the profits, crediting them to the repayment of the principal amount secured by the original deed of mortgage. The Courts below have found that it was not open to the defendants under the terms of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act to prove an oral agreement of this nature and they found that the evidence adduced to prove it was unreliable. The latter finding is a finding of fact which cannot be impugned in second appeal. The Courts further found that the deed of mortgage and the lease had together constituted one transaction, that transaction being a transaction of usufructuary mortgage, and that in those circumstances the profits of the mortgaged property which was transferred to the mortgagee by the lease must be considered to be enjoyed in lieu of interest on the principal amount, and on that finding they decreed the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 2,000.

The learned Counsel for the appellants contests the proposition that section 92 applies to the case. He has argued that it was open to his clients to prove the patotan transaction which they assert. The point is somewhat academic, as the further conclusion that the evidence in support of the patotan transaction is unreliable is a final conclusion of fact. But, in the alternative, he has urged a plea that, if section 92 stands in the way of the production of evidence by his clients to prove a transaction varying the terms of the original deed of mortgage, it also stands in the way of the plaintiff producing evidence to prove that the transaction was other than the transaction stated in the deed of mortgage, and that as a matter of fact interest was allowed although the deed itself asserts that no interest was chargeable. I am of opinion that this contention must prevail although (as I shall show later) its acceptance does not involve the success of the appeal. The Courts below were right in holding that it was not open to the defendants to prove an arrangement that varied the conditions to which the parties agreed under the original deed of mortgage. At the same time, however, they admitted proof of an arrangement in favour of the plaintiff which undoubtedly varied the terms of the deed of mortgage. The deed of mortgage must be taken as it stands. It is a deed of simple mortgage and not a deed of usufructuary mortgage. The cases on which the lower Courts relied in support of their view do not afford authority for its acceptance. In Kamla Sahai v. Babu Nandan Mian (1) a deed of mortgage was executed which apparently carried interest. The mortgagor placed the mortgagee in possession of the property under a separate lease. The Calcutta High Court found that the intention of the parties in executing the lease was to provide for the satisfaction of the amount due under the mortgage. That was undoubtedly a correct conclusion in that particular case. But here the case is quite different. The mortgage-deed stated that no interest should be paid. The plaintiff argues that there was an agreement that interest should be paid, and that the property was handed over to him in order that he might enjoy the profits in lieu of that interest. Thus there is direct contradiction between the terms of the deed and the terms of the arrangement which he endeavoured to set up. Again in Kedar Singh

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 13; 11 C. L. J. 39.

MUHAMMAD HUSAIN v. MUHAMMAD ASGHAR.

v. Sumer Singh (2) it was held that, in the case of a mortgage that carried interest, a separate agreement by which rents were assigned to provide for payment of the interest due could be proved. This is no authority for the proposition asserted on behalf of the plaintiff. The case of D. Nagardas v. Moses S. Arokee (3) is on a different point. There a transaction was made up of two parts, one of which was recorded in the form of a promissory note and the other of which was recorded in the form of an agreement allowing repayments by instalments. That case provides no authority either. The case of Sheo Ratan Singh v. Balkishan (4) referred to a transaction composed of two parts. Saiyed Muhammad Bakar v. Kedar Nath (5) refers to a similar arrangement. The same is the case in Altaf Ali Khan v. Lalta Prasad (6). The distinction is clear. In all these cases the arrangement was one for satisfaction of the terms of the deed of mortgage, not as here an arrangement in direct contravention of the terms of the deed of mortgage, and further the position of the plaintiff under the lease was only that of a lessee for six years. The case would be slightly stronger if the lease had been up till the time of the redemption of the mortgage.

The appellants' appeal must fail, however, on another point. There is nothing to show that possession was obtained after ejection of a portion of the mortgaged property, on any understanding that the mortgagee was to hold possession of the mortgaged property as a mortgagee. The evidence as to the terms under which possession was delivered is practically nil, and the learned Counsel for the appellants has relied in the main on the pleadings to establish this point. I do not consider that the pleadings afford any assistance in the matter. The plaintiff in his replication undoubtedly alleged that he had obtained possession of this property in lieu of interest due under the mortgage. As I have already decided, it was not open to him to prove that interest was due to him under the mortgage. The defendants, on the other hand, asserted that possession had been delivered in order that the profits of the property should be credited to the amount due as principal money under the deed. The lower Courts have found, and I agree with them, that it was not open to them to prove any such transactions. Thus each side put up an untenable plea, and it was not open to the defendants to try and extract from the plaintiff's plea something in support of their own case when the plea in itself is a bad plea that cannot be admitted. It is true that the plaintiff is in possession of the defendants' property. But it is not clear how he obtained possession of the property, though he apparently pays no rent for its use. That latter fact does not affect the case. The defendants rely on the provisions of section 76, Act IV of 1882, and their learned Counsel argues that this is a clear case of a mortgagee taking possession of the mortgaged property during the continuance of the mortgage and asks that sub-section (h) of that section should be applied. But in order that the provisions of this section can have application in this matter, it is necessary to find in the first instance that the mortgagee is in possession qua mortgagee, and there is absolutely no evidence to show that possession was obtained by him qua mortgagee. I am not in a position to say how possession was obtained, or what were the terms of the transaction. But there is nothing to justify a finding to the effect that the mortgagee obtained possession qua mortgagee, and in the circumstances the provisions of section 76 do not apply. In other words, the transaction by which possession was given over a portion of the mortgaged property after the mortgagee qua lessee had been ejected from the whole on the expiration of the lease, is a transaction which is completely out of the purview of this case. I can express no opinion on the materials before me as to what that transaction was or what the parties intended when they made it, and I am left with the original deed of mortgage which allows Rs. 2,000 to be recovered after a certain period. That period having elapsed, the money has become due.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is, whether a mortgage dated the 28th September 1905 which purports to be a registered document was in fact duly registered. The plaintiffs are the Chetty firm of A. M. V. and are the assignees from the mortgagees C. P. M. Their assignment is dated the 21st March 1912, and their suit on the mortgage was instituted on the 23rd March 1912. The mortgagors in their written statement, paragraph II, deny that the document was duly registered inasmuch as it was not presented for registration by C. P. M. Ramen Chetty but by some other person named Chitambaram who personated him. The endorsement on the document shows that C. P. M. Ramen Chetty presented the document for registration and that endorsement is signed by Mutu Ramen. Mutu Ramen is a clerk in the firm of C. P. M. One of the mortgagors, Reddiar, at least was at the registration office and Ramen Chetty states that he was there when the document was attested. It appears to have been written and attested at the registration office. The signatures to the document were admitted before the Registrar, and the mortgagors and the mortgagees acquiesced in the presentation for registration. Ramen Chetty, however, in his evidence on commission taken out by the plaintiffs, stated in answer to cross-interrogatories that he did not present the document for registration and that Mutu Ramen did it under a power-of-attorney from him. The Privy Council decision in Jambu Parhad v. Muhammad Nawab Aftab Ali Khan (1) shows that, although a person who can present the document for registration is present and acquiesces in the presentation, yet if he is not the person who presents the document for registration and if it is presented by a person who has no authority to do so, the registration is invalid. The question, therefore, is, are we to presume or is it proved that Mutu Ramen had an authenticated power-of-attorney authorising him to present the document for registration? The certificate of registration, no doubt, raises a strong presumption that the document was duly registered; but when on the face of the endorsement it is apparent that a different man presented it for registration from the person who signed the endorsement, the presumption that it was duly presented is very much weakened. If Mutu Ramen had an authenticated power-of-attorney that fact is a matter which would be specially within the knowledge of the plaintiffs or rather of their assignors under whom they claim; but the defendants have produced the Sub-Registrar of Toungoo Registration Office who gave evidence, which shows that no such power was authenticated in that office since 1899. The power must be authenticated at the registry where the principal resides. It is contended for the plaintiffs that there is nothing to show that the principal resides at Toungoo, but the Exhibit A (the mortgage) refers to Ramen Chetty as of Kaladan Quarter, Toungoo, and Exhibit B (the assignment) refers to Ramen Chetty as carrying on business as C. P. M. at Toungoo. The defendants could have done no more, though it is urged for the plaintiffs that the defendants should have asked Ramen Chetty where he resides and where an authenticated power-of-attorney could be found. It was an affirmative matter which, in the circumstances, lay upon the plaintiffs to prove.

Under the rules if a document is presented by an attorney the Registrar is bound to set out that fact in an endorsement, which he has not done in this case. There is, therefore, the strongest presumption that Mutu Ramen did not present a power-of-attorney to the Registrar at the time this document was presented for registration. Therefore although the plaintiffs started with the presumption arising from the certificate that it was duly registered, the endorsement on the face of it shows that there was some irregularity in its presentation which the plaintiff has to explain. He has, moreover, to overcome a very strong presumption that no power-of-attorney was produced to the Sub-Registrar at the time and the consequent presumption that there was no authenticated power-of-attorney in favour of Mutu Ramen. The statement by Ramen in his evidence on commission, that he had given a power-of-attorney to Mutu Ramen, is not enough. We dismiss the appeal with costs as against the first two respondents in their representative capacity. Mr. Aiyer appears for the minors who are the representatives of Kristna Amal deceased, one of the two mortgagors, and Mr. Doctor appears for the other mortgagor Raja Ram Reddiar. The interests of all are identical, therefore only one set of costs is allowed. As between themselves, they will share the costs equally, that is to say, the representatives of Kristna Amal and Raja Reddiar in two equal shares.

Appeal dismissed.

SARABJIT SINGH v. RAMPUR MATHRA ESTATE.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra (holding brief of Mr. G. H. Thomas), for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appeals under decision are Nos. 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95 and 96 Second Rent Appeals of 1914. They have been heard together and can be decided in one judgment. They are appeals in eight suits, in which decrees for arrears of rent have been passed by the Courts below in favour of the Court of Wards in charge of the estate of the talukdars of Rampur Mathra in respect of holdings situated in the village of Gonda Deoria. The suits in question were suits for arrears of rent for the years 1317, 1313 and 1319 Fasli. These suits were brought as though they were against ordinary tenants whose rent had been fixed and had not been paid. The case for the defendants-appellants is that they are Thakurs belonging to the same family as the talukdar of Rampur Mathra and related to him, that they had been given the lands by way of maintenance, that there had never been any contract of tenancy between the talukdar and themselves, that they had neither agreed to pay nor had paid any rent, and that they had always held the land rent-free. They asserted that no suits for arrears of rent with respect to those plots could lie against them and that the Court of Wards had as a condition precedent to realising rent to resume the holdings and to have the rents fixed.

The Courts below have found against the appellants on some of these points. They have decided that the appellants have failed in each instance to prove an exact relationship with the talukdar or to prove that the land was given in any case by way of maintenance. The foregoing findings are not questioned in second appeal. The Courts have not, however, found (except in one instance and in that instance only in respect of a portion of a holding) that rent has ever been fixed between the parties or by a competent authority or that rent has ever been paid. The finding with respect to the origin of the possession of the appellants (except with regard to one small portion of the land in question) is that they obtained possession of these holdings as trespassers and were permitted to remain in possession without rent being demanded or paid owing to previous lax management on the part of the estate. The Courts did not apply the provisions of section 127 of Act XXII of 1886, but considered that under the principles laid down in Ram Dulare v. Haidar Ali (1) they were entitled to fix a fair occupation rent and pass a decree on the basis of the rent so fixed.

Before I proceed to discuss the applicability of the principle on which they have relied, it is necessary to arrive at a finding as to whether rent has ever been fixed or not. The Courts below have decided that no such rent was fixed, but it is contested on behalf of the Court of Wards that on the evidence they should have arrived at a finding that rent was fixed. I am precluded to a considerable extent from considering this plea of the Court of Wards by the circumstance that the finding that rent was not fixed would ordinarily be a finding of fact, but I am not altogether precluded for the reason that the findings of the Courts below upon this point are far from clear. I can, however, dispose of this point very shortly upon the merits. With the exception of the portion of the plot to which I have already adverted, the only evidence as to the fixing of rent is contained in entries of a very old date in the revenue papers. These entries assert that the plots are held by ordinary tenants and in some instances that a certain rate of rent is payable by the tenants. These entries, however, afford no evidence as to whether rent was or was not fixed. They do not even raise a presumption that rent was fixed. They are of a very old date. There is nothing to show how they came to be made, and the Courts below were right in deciding that these entries in themselves are not evidence as to the fixing of rent either by a competent authority or by the action of the parties, and the Courts below have in no way acted under these entries and have not passed the decrees on the basis of the rates entered in those papers. They have assessed what they considered to be a fair occupation rent and have passed a decree on the basis of rent so fixed. Thus I find that as a matter of fact no rent was ever fixed and that the appellants have been in possession of these holdings all along without paying rent (except in one instance) and without there being an agreement to pay rent. The estate originally agreed to permit them to hold the land without payment of rent. I do not say that anything of the nature of a muafi was created. I do not intend to express an opinion on that point, as the exact status of the appellants will have to be decided in subsequent proceedings. In fact it is only for the sake of argument that I can describe the appellants as tenants. They may or may not be tenants. That is a point which has to be subsequently decided, except in the case of Dhir Singh and in his case only with regard to a portion of his holding. But, assuming that they are tenants, they are tenants who were permitted to hold the land without payment of rent and no agreement was ever arrived at as to the amount of rent that they should pay. In these circumstances I do not find that the decision in Ram Dulare v. Hardar Ali (1) and in the two connected decisions in Musammatt Raj Kuar v. Nabi Bakhsh (2) and Mohammed Hasan v. Deputy Commissioner, Bahariach (3) have any application. I discussed the effect of those rulings in a recent decision, Suraj Bakhsh Singh v. Silla Bakhsh Singh (4). There I said: "The purport of those decisions may be stated in the following words:—'Where the relationship of landholder and tenant exists and there has been an agreement to pay rent, whether the amount payable has been fixed or not, it is open to the Court to allow arrears of rent according to the rate originally fixed even if the agreement has terminated or in the case where the rent has not been fixed, to assess fair occupation rent and award arrears on that basis.' But there is nothing in those cases to support the assessment of a fair occupation rent and the awarding of arrears on that basis, where there has been no agreement to pay rent at all and where the agreement has been that the land should be held rent-free." In the same judgment I had previously noted that there is nothing in the provisions of Act XXII of 1886 to support the principle upon which the learned Counsel for the respondents relies. In these circumstances, in so far as the appellants may be tenants whose rent has never been fixed, as they were permitted to enter on the occupation of the land without payment of rent, the decree for arrears against them cannot stand. It is open to the respondent, if he desires to discontinue the indulgence and to charge rent, to avail himself of the provisions of Act XXII of 1886, Chapter VII A. I have to note, however, that in the case of Dhir Singh there is a finding of fact with which I cannot interfere, to the effect that he is a tenant of plots Nos. 327, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 359, 721, 876, and 900 at a fixed rental of Rs. 45 and the decision of his appeal will be in accordance with that finding. I have further to note with reference to Appeal No. 92 that the suit was decided against Bajrang Singh ex parte. This, however, does not prevent the success of his appeal in this Court, because it was decided against him on the basis of no evidence at all. The lower Courts conceived themselves bound to accept the evidence of entries in revenue papers because Bajrang Singh was absent, when they refused to accept similar evidence against the persons who were present. They were, of course, in error in accepting that evidence. The so-called evidence on which the ex parte decree is based is no evidence at all.

As a result I decree Appeals Nos. 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94 and 96. The suit against those appellants will be dismissed and the respondent will pay his own costs and those of the appellants in all Courts.

With regard to Appeal No. 95 I modify the decree by awarding Rs. 45 for each year under dispute with the usual interest and future interest. As the parties have succeeded roughly with respect to one-half Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 20th May 1914.

Mr. Saroshi Chandra Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baikunth Nath Mitter, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a preliminary objection is taken that the appeal has abated, and no order has been passed under Order XXII, rule 11, read with rule 9 setting aside that abatement. The appellant died on the 29th August 1915, and the application made for substitution before the Registrar was filed on the 6th March. It is patent, therefore, that when that application was made to the Registrar the appeal had actually abated and should have been struck off the file, to be restored only after proceedings in due form under rule 9 of Order XXII. The application for substitution was, therefore, made in wrong form. It appears to have been treated however, by the Registrar as an application for the restoration of the appeal upon the file; notices were issued to the respondents, and they did not put in any objection before the Registrar to the hearing of the appeal. We have, therefore, in considering this application, dealt with it as an application to set aside an order of abatement, and having regard to all the facts of the case, are satisfied that the appellant was prevented by reasonable cause from making the substitution in due time. We, therefore, direct that the abatement be set aside and the appeal heard upon its merits.

The facts of the case upon the merits are, that the appellant was the purchaser in auction-sale of a revenue-paying estate. He defaulted in payment of the revenue, and almost immediately after his purchase the estate was again brought to sale. The original owner remained on Register D as the proprietor of the estate, no attempt being made by the plaintiff to obtain substitution of his name. Taking advantage of this fact, the defendant withdrew the sale-proceeds lying in the Collectorate. The plaintiff, therefore, instituted this suit for the recovery of the money paid to the defendant by the Collector.

The plaintiff instituted his suit more than three and less than six years from the date of the payment. There has been a definite finding of fact by the lower Courts that the position of the plaintiff was such that he could not possibly have been kept out of knowledge of the payment to the defendant, and his right to sue thereon, by any fraud of the defendant. The sole question for decision is—Does Article 62 or Article 120 of the Limitation Act apply? The argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant is, that it cannot be said that money has been paid to the defendant for the use of the plaintiff, unless there was a deliberate intention on the part of the defendant to accept the money for the plaintiff's use. He contends that Article 62 is inapplicable. In putting forward this argument the learned Vakil has the whole case-law of India against him. It is not a question of the defendant's intention in taking the money. He undoubtedly intended to rob the plaintiff and intended to keep the money for his own use. But this is not the point. The point is, for whose use did the party making the payment intend the money? The greater number of the cases before us are suits upon mortgage-deeds, in which the right of the plaintiffs was known to the mortgagor paying money in redemption, and this, in fact, was the position in the case of Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Anwer (1). An attempt is made to distinguish that case and the analogous cases from the present case, on the ground that the Collector, who paid the money to the defendant, neither knew nor cared anything about the plaintiff's rights. A case actually in point is before us in Lachmi Narain v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh (2). This was a decision by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, and it is binding upon this Court until dissented from by a Full Bench. We are in entire agreement with the conclusions arrived at in that case. The Collector, though he may have been ignorant of the plaintiff's rights, paid the money to the defendant, not because he was the owner, but because under section 31, Act XI of 1859, he was bound by law to pay the money to the recorded proprietor or his heirs or representatives. The Collector must have been fully aware of the right of the owner to ultimately recover and enjoy the money. We must take it as reasonable to suppose that he handed the money to the defendant with the intention that it should be made over to the real owner, if indeed that real owner was other than the recorded proprietor.

We are of opinion, therefore, that not only is the case governed by the case that we have quoted, but also that that case is in accordance with the whole trend of case-law throughout the Courts of India, that money paid to one party with the implied intention that it should finally reach the hands of the party to whom it actually belongs, is money, within the meaning of Article 62, paid to that party for the use of the actual person in whom the right to receive it vests.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Babu Puttoo Lal, for Respondent No 4.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of moneys due on certain bonds alleged to have been executed by Kalka Prasad, the father of the defendants-respondents, in favour of Ram Dayal and Kashi Prasad, the predecessors of the plaintiffs-appellants. It appears that Ram Dayal and Kashi Prasad held a possessory mortgage of the property of Kalka Prasad and these bonds were executed to obtain further advances and were repayable at the time of the redemption of the possessory mortgage. In 1912 the defendants-respondents obtained a decree for redemption of the possessory mortgage without paying the moneys due on the bonds in suit. It was there held that the execution of these bonds was proved, but the persons seeking redemption could not be required to pay the money due on them as a condition precedent to redemption, because the bonds contained no covenant creating a charge on the mortgaged property. In the present suit, the defendants denied that Kalka Prasad had executed the bonds in suit and pleaded that the conditions and rates of interest entered therein were hard and penal and were exacted in bad faith. They further pleaded that the claim was barred by time and by Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Both the Courts below found that the execution of the bonds in suit was proved, inasmuch as the finding in the previous suit on that point operated as res judicata. In regard to the question of consideration the Court of first instance held that the payment of the consideration in regard to two of the bonds in question was proved, while the lower Appellate Court held that the payment of the consideration was not proved in regard to any of the bonds. With reference to the rate of interest claimed, the Court of first instance allowed the stipulated rate of interest but the lower Appellate Court held that it was hard and unconscionable, and that the consent of Kalka Prasad to pay that rate was obtained by undue influence. On the question of limitation, the finding of both the Courts was that the claim was not barred by limitation. As regards the applicability of Order II, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, the finding of the Court of first instance was that it did not bar the suit, and before the lower Appellate Court that point was not pressed.

The only questions pressed for consideration in these appeals are whether the onus was rightly thrown on the plaintiffs to prove the payment of the consideration moneys and whether the plaintiffs appellants were entitled to interest at the rates stipulated in the bonds in suit.

Ordinarily where a plaintiff sues for the recovery of money due on a bond and proves the execution of that bond, the onus lies on the executant to establish that he executed the bond without receipt of the consideration money: Mohammad Amir Mirza Beg v. Kedar Nath (1). The executant in this case is dead. The defendants are his sons and surviving members of the family to which he belonged. The bonds in suit have been produced by the plaintiffs, and there is no reason to think that Kalka Prasad would have executed them and handed them over to the creditors without receiving the consideration moneys specified therein. In Behari Lal v. Makhdum Bakhsh (2) it was held that the admission of the receipt of consideration contained in a mortgage-deed was admissible in evidence against a subsequent purchaser by private treaty of the interest of the original mortgagors. This case was followed in Bakhshi Ram v. Liladhar (3), where a suit was brought on a mortgage against the mortgagor, his sons who were members of the joint Hindu family with him but were not parties to the mortgage, and the purchaser at an auction sale of the equity of redemption of the interests of the mortgagor; and it was held that the admission made in the mortgage-deed and before the registering officer by the mortgagor as to the passing of the consideration was admissible in evidence. In this case no evidence was produced on behalf of the defendants to explain how the bonds in suit were made over to the creditors by Kalka Prasad without the consideration moneys, recited therein, having been paid to him. The bonds in suit were properly stamped as such. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the recovery of the moneys due on the said bonds.

As regards the rate of interest, it is not disputed that Kalka Prasad was indebted to Ram Dayal and Kashi Prasad at the time he executed the bonds in suit, and there is no reason for differing from the opinion arrived at by the learned District Judge that the creditors used that position in exacting a heavy rate of interest from Kalka Prasad on the occasion of the subsequent advances made to him from time to time. It will be proper, therefore, to reduce the rate of interest to 1 per cent. per mensem on the principal moneys specified in the bonds. The plaintiffs are thus entitled to a decree for Rs. 115 principal and Rs. 410-5-6 on account of interest.

The appeals are, therefore, allowed and the plaintiffs' claim decreed for the recovery of Rs. 525-5-6 with proportionate costs here and hitherto and future interest at 6 per cent per annum from the date of the suit till payment against the joint family property belonging to Kalka Prasad and the defendants-respondents. The defendants-respondents will, in the circumstances, bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Applications against the order of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Wadhmal Oodharam, for the Applicants.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These are applications for revision of a judgment of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, convicting the applicants Nos. 1 and 2 of keeping a common gaming house and gambling therein, and the remaining applicants of gambling in that common gaming house.

Mr. Wadhmal has argued the case fully on behalf of applicants Nos. 1 and 2, and those arguments have been adopted on behalf of the other applicants by Mr. De Verteuil.

Mr. Wadhmal has, in the first place, brought to our notice that there was an irregularity in the search warrant issued under section 6 of the Gambling Act.
It would appear that the informers Ahmad and Dewasing alleged that gambling was going on in the room described as No. 53 but that when the search party went there armed with their warrant to search that room they found the room empty, and the gambling going on not in the room No. 53 but in the adjoining room No. 52.

They accordingly searched room No. 52 and took in custody the persons there found and the instruments of gambling, purporting to be acting under the warrant issued under section 6 of the Gambling Act. It has been argued on the other side, however, that the entry of room No. 53 in the warrant was merely a false demonstration for room No. 52. But it is impossible for us to hold that that is so, as it is not a case of one room described by two different addresses as in a previous case cited, but a case of two distinct rooms with separate entrances. The search, therefore, cannot be held to have been conducted under section 6 and it is not, therefore, open to us to apply in this case the presumption which would otherwise have arisen under the Gambling Act.

Mr. Wadhmal next devoted himself to the consideration of the merits, and endeavoured to convince us that apart from the technical presumption there was no evidence justifying the conviction of the applicants. We find, on reference to the proceedings, that the direct evidence consisted of the statements of the two informers Ahmad and Dewasing, to the effect that both rooms
No. 53 mentioned in the search warrant and
No. 52 actually searched were habitually used as common gaming houses by the applicants Nos. 1 and 2 who habitually took fees, generally known as "nal", from gamblers frequenting the premises.

The other evidence was that of Inspector Sutton, Sub-Inspector Bhagwandas and Head Constable Umraosingh to the effect that when they searched the room No. 52, they found all the accused sitting there in a circle with money and dice in front of them. Mr. Wadhmal has urged us to reject the evidence of Ahmad and Dewasing because, among other reasons, their names were not mentioned in the Police challan.
But that omission would appear to us to be explained by the fact that they were informers whose names would naturally not be published unless it was absolutely necessary to do so, and by the fact that that necessity appears to have subsequently arisen upon the discovery of the imperfection of the warrant under section 6 of the Gambling Act. Mr. Wadhmal has asked us to reject the evidence of the Police officers on the ground that they took no mashirs with them to assist them in the search. That no doubt is a circumstance to be considered but it is not necessarily fatal to the acceptance of their evidence. Mr. Wadhmal has also suggested that their evidence ought to be excluded owing to illegality in the search. Now the omission to take mashirs would not have been an illegality if the search had actually been conducted under section 6 of the Gambling Act, for it would not then have been a search under Chapter 7 contemplated by the provisions of section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as was pointed out in the case of Emperor v. Ashum (1). But the omission was no doubt an illegality in the present case, as the search cannot be supported under the Gambling Act, but only under the Criminal Procedure Code. That illegality would, however, be no bar to the consideration of the evidence discovered by the search, as was pointed out by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Nazir Khan v. Proladh Dutta (2). We find on the other hand that the evidence of Ahmed and Dewasing was accepted as "perfectly true" by the learned Additional City Magistrate, who was also decidedly of opinion that there was no ground for disbelieving the evidence of the Police Officers Inspector Sutton and Sub-Inspector Bhagwandas. We do not find sufficient reasons from the arguments advanced to us or from the record for taking a different view from that of the learned Magistrate.

NRISHINHA KUMAR MUKHERJEE v. KUMUDENDU MCKHERJEE.

Mr. Wadhmal has lastly urged that the sentences passed upon the applicants Nos. 1 and 2 were unduly severe. We find, however, that applicants Nos. 1 and 2 have been stated to be notorious gamblers and the premises to be notorious gaming houses. We do not think, therefore, that, though the sentences were severe, sufficient ground has been shown to justify our interfering in this matter with the discretion of the learned Magistrate.

We reject all the applications and cancel the bail-bonds of applicants Nos. 1 and 2 and direct that they be recommitted to jail to serve the remainder of their sentence.

Applications rejected.

In a proceeding under section 107, Criminal Code, the Pleader of the 1st party having agreed to persuade his client to give an undertaking for the protection of the property in dispute in that proceeding, the opposite party withdrew from the property. The Pleader's client was willing to give the requisite undertaking but the opposite party did not accept it and filed a complaint against the Pleader under section 417, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate issued process against the Pleader:—

Held, that no prima facie case of cheating was made out against the Pleader, and the proceedings against him should be quashed. [p. 35, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Howrah, dated the 27th March 1916.

FACTS.—In proceedings under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, the petitioner was the Pleader of one party. The opposite party offered to withdraw from the property in dispute in the proceedings if the petitioner's client would give an undertaking to protect the property from sale. The petitioner having agreed to persuade his client to give the requisite undertaking, the opposite party withdrew from the property and the petitioner withdrew the proceedings under section 107. Upon petitioner's persuasion his client was willing to file the requisite undertaking but the opposite party did not accept it and consequently it was not filed. Upon this the opposite party filed a complaint against the petitioner under section 417, Indian Penal Code, for having induced him dishonestly to act in the section 107 proceedings as he had done. JUDGMENT.—In this case we have read the explanation of the Magistrate, but we are of opinion that no prima facie case of cheating has been made out against the petitioner. The proceedings against the petitioner are accordingly quashed and his bail-bond will be discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 269, 526—“Trial...shall be by Jury in any district”, meaning of—High Court, power of, to transfer a Sessions case from a Jury district to a non-Jury district.

In section 269, Criminal Procedure Code, the words “trial...shall be by Jury in any district” mean that the trial shall be by Jury in any district when so ordered by a Notification and not that the trial shall be by Jury of offences ‘committed’ in any district.

There being no legal prohibition against the trial being otherwise than by Jury if held in any other district not affected by a Notification under section 269, the High Court has power under section 526 to transfer a Sessions case from a Jury district to a non-Jury district.

Durga Charan Sanyal v. Emperor, 8 C. L. J. 59; 4 M. L. T. 148; 8 Cr. L. J. 121, referred to.

Criminal application for transfer to Kotri of the case committed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kotri, for trial in Karachi.

Mr. F. J. De Verteuil, for the Accused.

Mr. E. Raymond (Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

ORDER.—This case has been committed for trial by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kotri and the question has arisen whether it could not be more conveniently tried by the Sessions Court at Hyderabad than here in Karachi.

It appears that the scene of offence was only 14 miles or so from Kotri, which is itself within easy communication of Hyderabad and all the accused come from Hyderabad. Moreover all the accused including No. 3 Khairo represented by Mr. De Verteuil have expressed the desire that the trial should be before the Sessions Court at Hyderabad. The Public Prosecutor for Sind has no objection on the score of convenience of the parties, but has suggested for consideration the important question whether accused who would ordinarily be tried in a Jury district created by a Notification under section 269 of the Criminal Procedure Code could properly be transferred for trial in a non-Jury district by an order under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code.

It seems to me that the question must be decided by the words actually used by the Legislature, which are that the trial of offences before any Court of Session shall be “by Jury in any district when so ordered by Notification duly issued under section 269”, Criminal Procedure Code. The words are thus to the effect that the trial of the offences shall be by a Jury in any district, and not that the trial shall be by Jury of offences “committed” in any district. So there would appear to be no prohibition against the trial being otherwise than by Jury if held in any other district not affected by a Notification under section 269, Criminal Procedure Code. If that be the correct interpretation of the section, as it appears to me to be, then that section in no way limits the powers of transfer conferred on this Court by section 526, Criminal Procedure Code. My conclusion is fortified by the remarks of the learned Judges in the case of Durga Charan Sanyal v. Emperor (1) decided by the Calcutta High Court.

The particular case now before me clearly falling within clause (d) must, therefore, be transferred for trial by the Sessions Court of Hyderabad under that clause of section 526, Criminal Procedure Code.

Case transferred.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 537—Enquiry, order directing—Delay—Jurisdiction—Procedure—Irregularity, effect of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211.

Accused lodged a complaint against certain Police Officers before a Magistrate who, after examining the accused, recorded that the complaint was false and ordered the latter to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 182, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate was then transferred and his successor sent the case to another Magistrate for enquiry. Subsequently, on 6th December, the complaint was dismissed under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 4th of February following, the Magistrate, on the application of a Police Officer, ordered the prosecution of the accused under section 211, Indian Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the delay which occurred in making an order under section 476 did not deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to proceed under the section; [p. 36, col. 2; p. 37, col. 2.]

Per Atkinson, J.—If in a criminal proceeding an irregularity takes place and is allowed to pass unheeded and unnoticed, and fresh prosecution follows founded upon the irregularity and conviction follows, then after conviction the accused party cannot raise the intermediate irregularity in an antecedent proceeding as a ground for challenging the validity of the subsequent conviction. Criminal Revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Muzaffarpore, dated the 19th May 1916.

Mr. Nersu N. Singh, for the Petitioner.

The Deputy Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

KINGSFORD, J.—The petitioner on the 11th October 1915 preferred a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate against certain Police Officers. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate after examining the petitioner on the same date recorded an order to the effect that the complaint was false, and called on the petitioner to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 182. This officer was then transferred and his successor, when the petitioner appeared before him with his witnesses, referred the matter to a Subordinate Magistrate "for hearing complainant and witnesses and report." Subsequently on receipt of the report, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate recorded an order dismissing the complaint under section 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That order was passed on the 6th December. On the 4th February upon an application made by one of the Police officers the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as a result of which the petitioner has been put on his trial under section 211 and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

It is contended, in the first place, by the learned Vakil on his behalf that the order under section 476 is bad and without jurisdiction, because it was not passed at the time when the complaint was formally dismissed or shortly thereafter. In support of his contention he relies upon the rulings in Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (1) and Aiyakanna Pillai v. Emperor (2). There is, however, a later case, that of Shaikh Bahadur v. Shaikh Eradatullah Mallick (3), in which a much broader view was taken as regards the delay that might elapse before the order under section 476 was passed.

The present case must be dealt with upon its merits, and, in my opinion, having regard to the effect of the order of the 11th October, it cannot be said that the two months' delay which occurred deprived the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of jurisdiction.

The second contention advanced on behalf of the petitioner is, that the order of the Magistrate under section 476 was without jurisdiction, because the matter was not brought to his knowledge in a stage of a judicial proceeding. The basis for this contention is, that the inquiry into the case was made by another officer.

I am quite prepared to accept the contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioner to the effect that the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who received the original complaint was, in fact, an order of dismissal. The order was in the following terms:

"The story sounds highly improbable. If the daroga wished to beat him I do not see why he should have tied him up first in this manner. No motive is alleged except the ordinary one of ill-temper. I regard the complaint as false and call upon the complainant to show cause by the production of witnesses or otherwise why he should not be prosecuted under section 192."

Now if the Magistrate was unwilling to issue a process on the complaint, there were the following courses open to him under the provisions of sections 202 and 203. If he was not satisfied that the complaint was true, he might either make inquiry into it himself or direct a local investigation by some other person. On the other hand if he was satisfied that the complaint was false he might, after examining the complainant and recording his reasons, dismiss it upon the spot [Baidya Nath Singh v. Muspratt (4) and Ganesh Narayan Sathe, In re (5)]. I have no doubt at all that it was the latter of these courses which was adopted by the Magistrate. Having examined the complainant he recorded reasons for his conclusion that the complaint was false; he refused to issue process and he called upon the complainant to show cause against his prosecution. This order undoubtedly operated, and was intended to operate, as dismissal of the complaint. The subsequent order of the 6th December purporting to dismiss the complaint was a superfluity.

Thus by the order of the 11th October the Magistrate in the first place dismissed the complaint and in the second place instituted proceedings under section 476. His order calling upon the complainant to show cause obviously contemplated the preliminary inquiry referred to in that section. It may be that the procedure of his successor in referring the matter to a Subordinate Magistrate for the purpose of hearing the witnesses and for report was irregular, and that the Magistrate should have held this inquiry himself. But if this was an irregularity, it was cured by the provisions of section 537 and no prejudice was caused to the petitioner thereby.

The Magistrate did not transfer the case under the provisions of section 192. He retained seisin of it throughout. He was in the same position as his predecessor; that is to say, he constituted the Court before which the offence was committed, and he, therefore, had jurisdiction to pass the order, under section 476, of the 4th February.

In my opinion the Rule must be discharged. The petitioner should now be called on to surrender to his bail and be committed to jail to undergo the unexpired portion of his sentence.

ATKINSON, J.—I am of the same opinion. However, I desire to add that in my view the second Sub-Divisional Officer had on the 1st November seisin of the case in a judicial proceeding then pending before him, within the meaning of the case reported as Shaikh Bahadur v. Shaikh Eradatullah Mallick (3). The order of this Sub-Divisional Officer of the 1st November directing the inquiry by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate as to the validity of the cause shown by the original complainant as to why he should not be prosecuted was an error in form, but not an error going to the essence of jurisdiction; and consequently it was a mere intermediate irregularity, which, on the authority of the case reported as Hari Charan Gorai v. Srish Chandra Sadhukhan (6), could not vitiate the jurisdiction vested in the Sub-Divisional Officer to make the order he did under section 476.

The order of the 1st November directing the said inquiry was never challenged or impeached; the irregularity was allowed to pass, and a new prosecution was permitted to take place on the assumption that the order was valid; and now after conviction it is sought to rely upon the irregularity as a ground for setting aside the conviction. In my view section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code renders this argument quite untenable; and I am further of opinion that if an irregularity takes place and is allowed to pass unheeded and unnoticed, and a fresh prosecution follows founded upon the irregularity and conviction follows, then after conviction the accused party cannot raise the intermediate irregularity in an antecedent proceeding as a ground for challenging the validity of the subsequent conviction.

I agree that the order of the 6th December was a superfluity, in so far as it was intended, and did operate, as a dismissal of the original complaint. In my view it was only a judicial pronouncement that the cause shown against his prosecution by the original complaint was disallowed; and I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the Sub-Divisional Officer had jurisdiction to make the order he did under section 476, and for the reasons stated the conviction cannot now be challenged.

Revision rejected.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant Jehangir Perozshah took a mortgage in respect of a loan of Rs. 30,000 on the 7th. September 1912 from the eight accused Gangaram, Devidas, Bhojmal, sons of Naomal, Asanmal and Parsram, sons of Gangaram, Utumal, Devidas and Lilaram Asanmal of their joint family property. He took a further mortgage from them in consideration of a further loan of Rs. 61,000 on the 19th of November 1912 of the same and some other joint family property. On the 7th of February 1914, the joint family was declared insolvent and the enquiries made into the mortgage securities disclosed the unpleasant fact that out of the properties mortgaged one had never been owned by the family, two had been sold before the mortgages, and two were only owned in part by the joint family. It also appeared that other properties had been sold after the mortgages. The complainant thereupon filed a complaint on the 10th of February 1914 of criminal breach of trust against the accused. But that complaint was ultimately dismissed on the ground that the subsequent sales did not amount to criminal acts but only gave cause of action for a civil suit.

The complainant, however, filed another complaint, here under consideration, on the 11th of August 1914 of cheating in respect of the other properties discovered not to have been the absolute property of the joint family. The complainant was examined on the 10th and 24th of September and cross-examined on the 16th and 27th of October. The cross-examination and re-examination were concluded on the 28th November. Other witnesses were examined on the 30th November and on 9th, 11th and 12th of December. The case was called on again for argument on the 25th January 1915. It was, however, not heard on that date, as a de novo trial was claimed owing to the departure on leave of the trying Magistrate. It was on the 11th of February adjourned sine die for his return and then there issued a lull of nearly two months in the already sufficiently leisurely proceedings, ending only on the 6th of April 1915 in the transfer of the case from the file of the Additional City Magistrate to that of the 1st class Magistrate and City Deputy Collector.

The complainant's case was called on again after another lull of nearly two months and he was further examined on the 4th of June. He was again subjected to cross-examination on the 9th and 23rd June and on the 4th August. The accused were examined on the 9th of August. The complainant was the same day for some obscure reason once more subjected to cross-examination which was continued on the 17th of August. He was once more re-examined on the 20th of September and the same day his Counsel submitted arguments to the Magistrate. Then the complainant after some further examination of one of his witnesses on the 23rd September was himself further examined on the 15th October by the Magistrate. That at least should have been the end of these unfortunate proceedings, but on the 20th of October and the 25th of November his further cross-examination and on the 12th of December his further re-examination was permitted by the Magistrate. The complainant's Counsel at last on the 19th January 1916 submitted further arguments and the following day the accused's Counsel, who had previously threatened to apply for transfer on the ground of insufficient opportunity for cross-examination, submitted his arguments to the Magistrate. Finally on the 3rd February 1916, after a trial protracted over one year and four months, the accused were all discharged by the learned Magistrate. It is this order of discharge of which revision is now sought in this Court.

Now the complainant Jehangir's evidence which was permitted to extend nearly to two thousand lines has proved upon perusal to contain remarkably little substance directly bearing upon the essential issue, whether deliberate misrepresentations for the purpose of dishonestly obtaining the loans were actually made as to their interests in the property by each and all of the accused. (The learned Judicial Commissioner then proceeded to discuss the evidence.) His evidence amounts practically only to this that he negotiated with the accused Pamanmal alone up to the execution of the 1st mortgage, though he was careful to put categorical questions to all the other accused as to their right in the mortgaged properties on the occasion of the formal execution of the 1st mortgage; that in addition to the negotiations with the accused Pamanmal, the accused Gangaram, Utumal and apparently also Asanmal on two occasions pointed out some of the properties and that all the accused frequently came to him in connection with the 2nd mortgage and were all present at the execution of the 2nd mortgage. He called his brother-in-law Rustomji, a cashier in the Mercantile Bank, to corroborate his assertions as to these representations generally, but he refrained from calling either Munchershab, an accountant in the Punjab Banking Co. who had assisted him in bringing about the mortgage, or his Pleader Nadirshah. Several other witnesses were examined but their evidence did not bear practically on the question of the representations. The account given on the other hand by the accused No. 1 Gangaram, an old man of 61 years of age, was that he left everything to Pamanmal though he had pointed out to Pamanmal that some of the properties did not belong to the joint family which fact Pamanmal assured him had been communicated to the mortgagees. The accused No. 2 Devidas, an old man of 64 years of age, stated that he knew nothing about the transaction and that the whole matter was left in the hands of Pamanmal. The accused No. 3

JEHANGIR PEROZSHAH v. GANGARAM NAUMAL.

Bhojmal, a man of 50 years, was not examined having become paralytic; and the accused No. 4 Pamanmal, whose age was given as 26, was not examined as he had died during the proceedings. The accused No. 5 Utumal, a man of 33 years of age, who was a son of accused Devidas stated that he also knew nothing as he had left the whole matter to Pamanmal. The accused Nos. 6 and 7 Asanmal and Parsram, whose ages were given as about 25, were sons of accused Gangaram and similarly stated that everything had been left to Pamanmal. So also said accused Lilaram, a young man of 20 years of age, son of accused Asanmal. The learned Magistrate made severe remarks upon the evidence of the complainant and his witness Rustomji and held that the first mortgage had been taken entirely on accused Pamanmal's representation and that no direct representations had been proved on the part of the other accused, either with regard to the 1st or 2nd mortgage. He came to the conclusion that reliance had been placed not so much on the representation of the accused as upon the advice of Rustomji, Munchershah and the Pleader Nadirshah. Mr. Elphinston has argued on behalf of the complainant that the comments on the evidence adduced did disclose representations of absolute ownership by all the accused, that in any case the accused were bound by the recitals in the mortgage-deeds which they had signed regarding their absolute ownership and that their responsibility for their representations was in no way affected by the fact that the advice had been taken also from Munchershah, Rustomji and the Pleader Nadirshah. The Assistant Public Prosecutor has, on the other hand, urged that there was no sufficient evidence to warrant a charge being framed against the accused. And Mr. MacInerny has also been heard to the same effect on behalf of the accused.

It appears to me certainly that the comments on the evidence of the complainant and his witness Rustomji were unfair and that due consideration was not paid to the inordinately prolonged examination of the witnesses in making those comments. But even after making due allowance for this, the fact remains that all the evidence established was that the 1st mortgage was negotiated entirely with accused Pamanmal and that the 2nd mortgage was discussed also with the accused Gangaram, Utumal and Asanmal. There was nothing but somewhat vague suggestions as to any direct representations of ownership made by these other accused before the execution of the 2nd mortgage. The only other evidence was as to what happened at the execution, the allegation being that all the accused were then categorically questioned as to their absolute ownership of the properties. If that were certainly true there would, no doubt, be ground for charging the accused. But the probabilities seem to me to be against it. There may have been some causal questions put at the time of the execution, but the evidence indicated that no time was allowed by the busy mortgagee for detailed enquiries into the complicated schedules of properties. He merely came in for the formal execution of the 1st mortgage. He had left all the formalities to his friends Rustomji and Munchershah and to his Pleader Nadirshah. It is equally improbable that there was any detailed discussion of the complicated schedules at the time of execution of the 2nd mortgage. It is significant that he did not dare to call as witnesses on these matters either Munchershah or his Pleader Nadirshah. On the other hand it does not appear to me at all improbable that the negotiations were left throughout to Pamanmal, looking to the ages and relationship of the accused and to the fact that they formed a joint Hindu family. There was also evidence to show that the complicated schedules of properties had been copied from those contained in previous mortgages and might possibly through oversight have perpetuated previous errors or failed to take account of alterations since these mortgages. At all events, all these circumstances materially weaken the presumption which would otherwise properly have arisen against all the accused from their executing mortgages for large sums of money including properties not actually belonging to the joint family. Whatever might be their civil liability, sufficient evidence was, in my opinion, not forthcoming to establish criminal intention. Had there been such evidence their criminal liability would, of course, not have been affected by the fact that advice had also been taken from Rustomji, Manchershah and the Pleader Nadirshah.

No doubt there is much force in the criticisms that the case was not properly treated at the trial. Attention was not sufficiently focussed on the essential issue, whether deliberate misrepresentation had been established against each of the accused. Nor was adequate consideration given to the grave presumptions arising against all the accused by the mere execution of the mortgage-deeds. This resulted in wholly unnecessary and lengthy examination of the witnesses particularly in cross-examination, which proved upon perusal to contain many repetitions and also much irrelevant matter as to the amount of reliance placed on the advice of Rustomji, Manchershah and the Pleader Nadirshah. There were also frequent and wholly unjustifiable postponements granted merely for the convenience of the Counsel. Such protracted examinations of the witnesses and frequent adjournments amount practically to a denial of justice, and it is much regretted that such inordinate delay was permitted, delay which reflects credit neither upon the Counsel engaged nor upon the Magistrate. The protracted examinations ought to have been stopped by stricter regard to the provisions of the Evidence Act and the rules of procedure and by the exercise, where necessary, of the inherent powers vested in every Magistrate to prevent abuse of the process, i. e., the proceedings of his Court. The granting of the frequent and lengthy adjournments was a grave disregard of rule 22, Chapter V, Sind Courts Criminal Circulars, and the result was a travesty of the prompt procedure contemplated by the Criminal Procedure Code.

Nevertheless for the reasons already indicated no useful purpose would, in my opinion, be served by directing further enquiry or taking steps for a re-trial under section 437 or 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 528—Transfer of case by Magistrates of co-ordinate jurisdiction—Procedure.

Where a Magistrate acts on his own initiative in transferring a case, his order is not vitiated by the fact that another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority had refused it; but if he examines the reasons given by the co-ordinate authority and finds that that authority is wrong, his interference must be deemed to be by way of appeal which he has no jurisdiction to entertain, and the order of transfer must be set aside.

Petitions, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Tanjore, in D. Dis. No. 523 Magtl. of 1916.

Mr. S. K. Parthasaradhi Aiyangar (for Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar), for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—I must set aside the order of the District Magistrate. Unfortunately it is clearly inconsistent with the ruling in Raghunatha Pandaram v. Emperor (1). I think it is obviously an inconvenient thing that Magistrates of co-ordinate jurisdiction should interfere with each other's jurisdiction. Thaman Chetti v. Alagiri Chetti (2) points out the distinction. Where a Magistrate acts on his own initiative in transferring a case, his order is not vitiated by the fact that another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority has refused it. But if he examines the reasons given by the co-ordinate authority and finds that that authority is wrong, that is interfering by way of appeal. This case is clearly within the mischief referred to in Raghunatha Pandaram v. Emperor (1).

I must set aside the order of the Magistrate and the case will be remanded for trial to the second class Bench Court of Kumbakonam.

Petition allowed; Order set aside.

Evidence Act (I of 1972), ss. 24, 25, 28—'Person in authority', meaning of—Zemindar, whether is 'person in authority.'

Section 24 of the Evidence Act refers not to a person whom the accused may regard as being in authority but to a person who actually is in authority. [p. 46, col. 1.]

The main test as to when a person is deemed to be a 'person in authority' within the meaning of the section is, whether he stands in such relations to the accused as imply some power of control or interference in regard to his prosecution. [p. 46, col. 1.]

Reg. v. Navroji Dadabhai, 9 B. H. C. R. 358; Emperor v. Rama Dhan Powar, 31 Ind. Cas. 340; 17 Bom. L. R. 898 16 Cr. L. J. 740, referred to.

Zemindars qua zemindars are not necessarily 'persons in authority'. The question must be decided in each case upon its particular circumstances; but whenever zemindars are directly concerned in an investigation by the direction of the Police then they clearly are 'persons in authority' within the meaning of section 24 of the Evidence Act. [p. 44, col. 1.]

Mr. Kodumal Lekhraji, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. Raymond (for the Public Prosecutor for Sind), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J. C.—These are appeals against the decision of the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, convicting the appellant No. 1 of murder and sentencing him to death under section 302, Indian Penal Code, and convicting the appellant No. 2 of causing the disappearance of evidence of the murder and sentencing her to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under section 201, Indian Penal Code.

The appellant No. 1 Loung was a neighbour of the deceased man Gul Mahomed who lived with his wife Sabhai, the appellant No. 2, in a small village in the desert of Thar and Parkur.

It would appear that the appellant No. 1 had a long-standing intrigue with the appellant No. 2. That has been admitted by the appellant No. 1 and has not been seriously disputed before us. It has also been amply established by the evidence recorded at the trial. The witness Jumo was the first person to receive information about the disappearance of his brother, the deceased Gul Mahomed. He was at that time absent from his village and returned to make enquiries. He disclosed his suspicions against the two appellants to the principal men of the small village, viz., Valio and Tagio who, together with two other residents Sultan and Mahomed Khan, all four of whom appear to have been related to the appellants, proceeded to make enquiries about the disappearance of the deceased Gul Mahomed from the two appellants. It would appear from the evidence that thereupon the two appellants admitted to them that they had murdered the deceased Gul Mahomed, and indicated that the body of the unfortunate man was buried in his own house. These four men satisfied themselves by the indications on the spot that that was the case and information was then sent to the Police. Subsequently the appellants are alleged to have again pointed out the spot where the deceased man was buried and again to have confessed to the witness Ahmed and another man Sanhio that they had been concerned in the murder. Those confessions, however, appear to have been made in the presence of and in direct answers to the questions from the Policeman Jumo. Subsequently the body was dug up from the deceased's house and appellant No. 1 produced an axe and appellant No. 2 a spade and handed them over to the Police jamadar Khan Mahomed. The body was identified as the body of the deceased Gul Mahomed and was sent for examination to the Sub-Assistant Surgeon. The appellants, after further investigation, were formally arrested on the 10th of October by the Police.

Now it has been contended on behalf of the appellant No. 1, who alone has been represented in these appeals, and the same contention might equally well have been raised on behalf of the appellant No. 2, that the alleged confessions before the villagers Valio, Tagio, Mahomed Khan and Sultan were rightly rejected as irrelevant on account of their having been caused by a promise made to them by persons in authority under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, as actually held by the learned Sessions Judge. It has also been contended that the subsequent confessions to Ahmed and Sanhio ought to have been rejected as irrelevant on account of their having been made directly to a Police Officer, and that they ought to have been excluded under section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act, and ought not to have been admitted under section 28 of the Indian Evidence Act by the learned Sessions Judge. We have had to carefully consider both these confessions, as the material facts bearing upon them and the relevant authoritative decisions have not been as clearly set forth in the judgment as might have been desired. It would appear that the village in which these events took place was only a small settlement occupied at that time by no more than 8 or 10 inhabitants, though the census had previously indicated a population of a hundred. That appeared from the evidence of the Tapedar. The villagers Tagio and Valio have given their occupation as cultivation, but there is no indication in the evidence that they were particularly influential zemindars. Sultan and Mahomed Khan appear to have occupied the same position except that they, unlike the former two, have been referred to as headmen and the whole argument has been based to show that they were persons in authority. There does not, however, appear to me to be anything in the evidence to show that either of the appellants was in any way under the authority of these four witnesses. The appellants were, on the other hand, their relations and it would appear that after confessing to Valio and Tagio they repeated their confessions in the presence of all the four witnesses, and then and only then asked the four witnesses to do what they could to get them out of their difficulties. Thereupon ensued an endeavour to settle the matter by a gift of a woman to the injured party. But the negotiations were unsuccessful. It is difficult to understand in these circumstances how any one could have reasonably supposed that these four witnesses had any authority whatever in respect of the prosecution.

Certain decided cases have been referred to in support of the view of the learned Sessions Judge that zemindars must always be regarded as persons in authority in reference to prosecutions. But those authorities do not support that wide view. The first authority which we have considered is that of the Emperor v. Saini (1) in which the relevant remarks were made by Jacob, J., at page 422, where he said: "It is impossible perhaps to lay down as a proposition of law that every zemindar is a person in authority in relation to his 'hari' in respect of any offence the latter may be charged with". Then Jacob, J., proceeded to consider the particular facts of that case and held that the zemindars in that case were persons in authority inasmuch as they had been charged with the investigation by the Police. The next case is that of Emperor v. Samandar Rahimdad (2), the relevant remarks being at page 622 where Beaman, J., said: "It has been held by this Court that zamindars are persons in authority within the meaning of the section, and although in a subsequent decision of this Court some doubt has been thrown upon the soundness of that as a general proposition universally true, and it was held that zamindars qua zamindars are not persons in authority, still as a rule it is easy for the defence to show that the relations between the particular zamindar or zamindars concerned are of a kind to satisfy the ordinary definition of the term", i.e., the terms "persons in authority". And in the case of Imperator v. Dabud (3) Leggatt, A. J. C. said "The Additional Sessions Judge has rightly rejected the confession made to the zamindars. They were told by the Sub-Inspector to go and make accused confess and it seems clear that they were investigating the offence just as if they were Policemen and, therefore, they must be considered persons in authority." So that it would appear that the decisions of this Court amount to this that zamindars qua zamindars are not necessarily persons in authority and that the question must be decided in each case upon the particular circumstances; but wherever zamindars are directly concerned in the investigation by the direction of the Police, then they clearly are persons in authority within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. And the view is confirmed by a similar decision in the case of village Police Patels in the Presidency proper in the case, of Emperor v. Rama Dhum Powar (4).

Now the particular circumstances of this case are that the appellant No. 1 was a grazier and not a hari and that the four witnesses were villagers with no particular authority, so far as could be gathered, over either of the appellants; though two of them being the principal residents of the small village have been loosely termed headmen. In such circumstances there could, in my opinion, be no justification for regarding them as persons in authority. Their position differed materially from that of zamindars directly concerned in the investigation under the directions of the Police, referred to in the various authorities holding that such zamindars were persons in authority within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is in this view unnecessary to consider whether the negotiations for settlement of the case would or would not amount to an inducement within the meaning of section 24, Indian Evidence Act. For these reasons the confessions to the four villagers ought, in my opinion, to have been held relevant, and to have been considered by the learned Sessions Judge. It is, on the other hand, clear to me that the subsequent confessions or so-called confessions made to the witnesses Ahmed and Sanbio in the presence of the Policeman Jumo ought to have been rejected as irrelevant. They were, in my opinion, to all intents and purposes confessions made to the Policeman, and on that account irrelevant under section 25 of the Indian Evidence Act. In that view of the case recourse ought not to have been had to the provisions of section 28 by the learned Sessions Judge.

There were, besides the confessions, the following facts corroborative of them, namely, the production by appellant No. 1 of an axe and the production of a spade by appellant No. 2, the inference being that the axe was the axe with which the deceased Gul Mahomed was murdered, and the spade was the spade with which his body was buried, and the discovery of the corpse of the deceased man at the place indicated by the two appellants. It has been suggested on behalf of the appellants that the investigation should be regarded with suspicion owing to delay in their arrest, but it would appear that the investigating Police jamadar, Khan Mahomed, did not arrive at the scene until the 9th of October and lost no reasonable time after making such investigations as were possible in arresting the appellants on the 16th.

It appears, therefore, that apart from the grave suspicions under which the appellants laboured owing to the clear proof of intrigue between them, there was the evidence of their own confessions to the villagers corroborated by their production of the axe and the spade and the discovery of the corpse with the head severed from the body at the spot indicated by them. There was in addition as against the appellant No. 2 Sanbai the evidence of her subsequent conduct in misinforming the witness Tagio that her husband had left his house, whereas she well knew according to her own admission to the Committing Magistrate that the body of her unfortunate husband was at that very moment lying buried in his house. The appellant No. 1 Loung was, in my opinion, clearly proved by this evidence to have been guilty of the murder of Gul Mahomed and there can be no question that the proper sentence upon him was a sentence of death under section 302, Indian Penal Code. The evidence against the appellant No. 2 Sabbhai pointed to her also having taken part in the murder, but she has been given the benefit of the doubt as to the exact part taken by her, a woman, in this transaction and also has been found guilty of the lesser offence of assisting in burying the body of the deceased Gul Mahomed and so causing the disappearance of the evidence of the murder. It is not for us to consider now whether or not she did take an active part in the murder. It is sufficient to decide that she was at least proved guilty of causing the disappearance of evidence of the murder, and that she was rightly convicted under section 201, Indian Penal Code. For these reasons these appeals ought, in my opinion, to be dismissed and the convictions and sentences of both the appellants confirmed including the sentence of death under section 302, Indian Penal Code, passed by the Sessions Court.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur. In my opinion the confessions made by the two accused to Valio and Tagio when they made the first inquiry in the matter, and the circumstantial evidence which corroborates these confessions, amply suffices to prove the guilt of the accused. The learned Sessions Judge held those confessions irrelevant under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, but the reasons which he gave are very cursory and, in my opinion, entirely unsound. He says: "There is no doubt that Valio and Tagio held out a prospect of impunity in return for a full confession." Valio, however, distinctly says that he and Tagio said to the two suspects, "Do not tell us lies; tell us truth." They made no denial in my hearing. There was nothing said about giving Loung's daughter to Jumo. And in another passage he says: "We told them Gul Mahomed has disappeared. Suspicion is upon you. Both of them replied: 'We have murdered Gul Mahomed, let us now have pardon'." Neither in his cross-examination, nor elsewhere is there a single word about their having held out such a prospect of impunity as the learned Sessions Judge says they did. Tagio, who it may be noted is an uncle of the two accused as well as of Valio, says on this point that "we asked the two what they knew. The woman was the first to confess. 'This thing has been done by us', she said. Loung said the same, and they asked us, as we were their relations, to save them." In his cross-examination it is true that he qualifies this to some extent by saying that at first the two accused made denial, but then they said: "they should make a clean breast and we should not expose them". But he does not distinctly say that this is really what occurred, for he says, "It is so long ago that I cannot exactly remember". And from his reference to the offer to Jumo to take a woman in exchange it seems not unlikely that he was really referring to the subsequent occasion when these confessions are alleged to have been repeated before them and the other two villagers Sultan and Mahomed Khan. In any case his statement on the point is open to some suspicion, inasmuch as he is closely related to the two accused and would, therefore, be not disinclined to do what he could to help them. So far as the evidence of Valio and Tagio goes, it is quite clear that there is no sufficient reason for holding that, when the accused made their first confessions, any inducement of the kind referred to in section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act was made by them to the accused. Even as regards the subsequent occasion when the accused repeated their confessions, there is no clear evidence that the confessions were made under any such inducement. Sultan and Tagio no doubt admit that a proposal was made to Jumo that he should not report the matter to the Police and that he should in compensation take the girl offered to him by accused No. 1. But both at the same time admit that Jumo refused the offer, though they tried to dissuade him from reporting the matter to the Police and Sultan clearly says that Jumo gave no encouragement to the accused to expect his forgiveness. The learned Sessions Judge then says that there is no doubt that Valio and Tagio were regarded as persons in some authority. It may, however, be noted that section 24 refers not to a person whom the accused may regard as being in authority, but to a person who actually is in authority. So even if the accused did regard Valio and Tagio as persons in some authority, that would not of itself bring the case under this section. I entirely concur with my learned colleague in holding that in this case Valio and Tagio were clearly not persons in authority. It has been pointed out in the case of Reg. v. Navroji Dadubhai (5) and the subsequent case of Emperor v. Rama Dhan Powar (4) that the main test as to when a person is deemed to be a person in authority within the meaning of that section is whether he stands in such relations to the accused as imply some power of control or interference in regard to his prosecution. From this standpoint if any of these persons were persons in authority, it would be the prosecutor Jumo rather than any of the others. And the evidence distinctly shows not only that the confessions were not made in presence of Jumo, but that he never held out any inducement to the accused which could lead them to suppose that by confessing they could gain any advantage.

I concur in holding that the two accused have been rightly convicted, that no sufficient reasons have been given for our interfering in appeal, and that in the circumstances of the case the sentence of death on 1st appellant must be confirmed.

Convictions and sentences confirmed and appeals dismissed.

NISHI KANTA PAL AND OTHERS—ACCUSED — PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Obstructing Munsif to pass through accused's own property for making local inspection, whether offence.

The accused, who were no parties to a suit in which a public right of way was claimed, did not allow a Munsif, in whose Court the suit was pending, to pass in a boat through a ditch which was their private property, when the Munsif wanted to pass through it for the purpose of making a local inspection in connection with the suit:

Held, that the accused did not commit any offence under section 83, Indian Penal Code. [p. 48, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Sessions Judge of Dacca, dated the 14th February 1916.

FACTS appear from the following petition of the accused and from the extracts from the judgment of the Sessions Judge:—

“1. That in connection with title suit No. 805 of 1914, in which a public right of way was the subject in dispute, pending in the 4th Munsif's Court at Munshigunge, the trying Munsif went to make a local enquiry on the 22nd June 1915.

2. That in the course of his local inspection the learned Munsif came in his boat with other persons following him at a place which is the private property of your petitioners.

3. That your petitioners, not being party to the aforesaid civil suit, nor having any concern either with the plaintiffs or the defendants or any interest in the subject-matter of the said suit, objected to the boat passage of the learned Munsif and his suit through the gar (ditch), which is the private property of the petitioners and is solely used by them.

4. That your petitioner No. 1 Nishi Kanta Pal plainly told the learned Munsif that the said petitioner would have no objection to the passage of the learned Munsif alone that way, but he would not allow either of the parties to the suit to go by that way, lest it might be construed in future as a way through which the general public have a right to pass.

5. That upon these facts the said learned

NISHI KANTA PAL v. EMPEROR.

Munsif drew up proceedings under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against your petitioners on the ground that they have committed an offence punishable under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code.

6. That your petitioners were, therefore, put on their trial before Mr. S. Klingenstein, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunge, who convicted your petitioners under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced your petitioner Nishi Kanta Pal to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and three other petitioners to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks by his order, dated the 11th December 1915.

7. That on appeal against the said order the learned Sessions Judge of Dacca upheld the conviction of your petitioners under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code, but reduced the sentence passed on Nishi Kanta Pal to one of fine of Rs. 50 only, and the sentences on the other three petitioners were reduced to fines of Rs. 100 each, and in default of the payment of their fines, each of the accused was to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three weeks, by his order dated the 14th February 1916.

8. That being aggrieved by the said order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Munshigunge, dated the 11th December 1915, and affirmed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Dacca, by his order dated the 14th February 1916, your petitioners beg to move your Lordships for setting aside the same on the following amongst other:

Grounds. 1. For that the orders of the Courts below are not in accordance with law and liable to be set aside, inasmuch as the facts found do not constitute an offence under section 186 of the Indian Penal Code.

2. For that the whole proceeding under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is illegal and void ab initio.

3. For that the order of the Court of Appeal below is bad in law, inasmuch as the construction put upon Order XVIII, rule 18, of the Code of Civil Procedure is entirely erroneous.

5. For that the act of the Munsif in encroaching upon the private passage or property of the petitioners, who were not parties to the civil suit in question, was not justifiable in law, and the petitioners in obstructing his boat passage acted in the bona fide belief of their right of private defence of their own property.

5. For that at all events the sentences passed on the petitioners are unduly severe."

The Sessions Judge of Dacca made the following observation on the question of law involved in the case in his judgment by which he upheld the conviction of the accused but reduced their sentences:—

"In a suit in which a public right of way was claimed, there was a dispute not only as to whether the public right of way claimed existed but also as to whether there were not certain other public ways, the existence of which would discredit the plaintiffs' allegations in the suit. The Munsif trying the case decided to inspect the ways in dispute.

"The difficult questions in this case are of law. I have no doubt that the main object of the appellants and their partisans was to make it appear rightly or wrongly that there was no right of way. It has been argued that they acted in good faith, and committed no offence. None of the appellants were parties to the suit.

"It is not suggested that any kind of damage would have been done by the passage of people that way. The defence evidence itself is that it is a way for the people of a certain quarter (para), not that it is not a way at all, or that the use of it as a way was in any respect harmful to property or privacy. The only suggestion of undesirable effect or result is that if passage had been allowed, from the very fact it would have seemed or been argued that it was a public way. There was a question, about that way, and under Order XVIII, rule 18, the Munsif could "inspect anything" concerning which any question arose. In my opinion the Munsif was a public servant, and was engaged in the discharge of his public function. Also the accused did voluntarily interrupt him in his discharge of that function, and obstruct him. I do not find that they had any right to do it. He was doing nothing that he was not right to do. The accused Nishi Pal obstructed, or rather completely stopped him, most effectively by constructing a fence specially for the purpose, and then standing there with the other accused, and with them stopping the boat, and telling the Munsif that they would not let him go on. It is true that after the Munsif had taken the names of the men, and gone some distance back, Nishi Pal sought to put himself right, but he had already committed the offence. The gist of the offence lies in the interruption caused to a public servant whilst in the execution of his duties. It is clear that such interruption was caused. It was open to the accused to take the position that because the Munsif wished to inspect, they allowed the party to pass, but did not admit that there was a public way. But though they knew that he was a Munsif and merely wanted to inspect, they forcibly stopped him from doing it, because it did not suit them that he should. Either they were afraid, in their own or their friend's interests, that he would see things telling against those interests or they thought that some inference would be drawn from the fact of the people passing. * * *

* *. It, therefore, having been proved that the accused did forcibly prevent the Munsif from inspecting that way, openly and clearly saying that they would not allow him to do it and it not being shown that they acted in good faith, but rather the reverse appearing, I hold that the convictions are good. * * *

The petitioners moved the High Court for setting aside the conviction and sentence and a Rule was issued by the High Court on grounds Nos. 1, 3, 4 of the grounds set forth in the petition of the accused under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Ashitranjan Ghose, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we have read the explanation of the Magistrate, but we still adhere to our opinion that the conviction and sentences on the petitioners cannot stand on the grounds on which the Rule was granted. No offence under section 186, Indian Penal Code, appears to have been committed. The Rule is made absolute. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

July 20, 1916.*

Present:—Mr. Justice Chaudhuri.

In the matter of JEW A NATHOO AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

Emergency Legislation Continuance Act (I of 1915), whether ultra vires—Ordinances III and V of 1914—Governor-General-in-Council, power of, to pass Act embodying provisions of Ordinances—Ordinance III of 1914, s. 11, effect of—Jurisdiction of Courts to question orders of internment passed under Emergency Legislation Continuance Act—Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 67), ss. 22, 23.

Under section 23 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 67), no Ordinance can have any force of law for more than six months from its promulgation, but the power of the Governor-General-in-Council to pass an Act embodying the provisions of an Ordinance is in no manner controlled or taken away by that section. The Governor-General-in-Council has power to pass an Act like the Emergency Legislation Continuance Act (I of 1915) which embodies the provisions of Ordinances 3 and 5 of 1914. [p. 51, col. 1.]

Held, (as to the contention that inasmuch as section 11 of Ordinance No. III of 1914 which is embodied in the Emergency Legislation Continuance Act of 1915 seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts, it offends against section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861), that the Emergency Legislation Continuance Act of 1915 is not ultra vires of the Governor-General-in-Council and the High Court has not power to call in question orders passed thereunder. It is for the Governor-General-in-Council to be satisfied on the materials before them and the Court cannot call for the materials or examine them. [p. 54, col. 1.]

In England the common law rule that when an Act is repealed and the repealing Act is repealed by another which manifests no intention that the first shall continue repealed, the repeal of the second Act revives the first, does not apply to repealing Acts passed since 1850 and the last repeal does not now revive the Act or provisions before repealed unless words be added reviving them. The same principle or rule of law applies to this country. Section 3 of the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) expressly provided that for the purpose of reviving either wholly or partially a Statute, Act or Regulation repealed, it shall be necessary expressly to state such purpose, and the same is the effect of sections 6 and 7 of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897). [p. 51, col. 2.]

FACTS material for the purpose of this report will appear from Counsel's argument as also from the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Norton (with him Mr. A. A. Avetoom), for the Petitioners.—The petitioners were residents of Surat. They used to carry on business in South Africa. They were coming from South Africa by "S. S. Kathiawar" which arrived in Calcutta on the 19th June 1916 when they were arrested. No attempt has been made to place them before the Magistrate. No warrant was produced nor was any order shown to them. They were informed by the Commissioner of Police that they were arrested under section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code and under Indian Ordinances which were not specifically mentioned. It appears that five orders were made on the 26th June 1916 by the Governor of Bengal in Council under the Foreigners Ordinance, 1914 (III of 1914), and the Ingress into India Ordinance, 1914 (V of 1914), the power to make such order having been conferred on the Governor of Bengal in Council by the Notification of the Government of India, Home Department, No. 1374, dated 12th September 1914. The orders stated that the Governor-in-Council was satisfied that in order to protect the State from acts prejudicial to its interests, it was desirable to exercise the power in question in respect of those persons and directed that they should be interned temporarily to the Alipur Central Jail, 24-Parganās.

After stating the facts, Counsel argued that in the first place the Ordinances III and V of 1914 were not in force at the time of arrest. By section 23 of the Indian Councils Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67) we cannot have an Ordinance for more than six months. Act I of 1915, section 2, says that the said Ordinances should remain in force for the period of war and for six months thereafter. This was clearly ultra vires. An Act cannot keep an Ordinance in operation for more than six months.

My next point is that the Governor-General-in-Council had no power to make any Ordinance or provide any legislation which was in conflict with section 22 of the Indian Councils Act (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67). The legislation infringed the constitution of the East India Company, the allegiance of the subjects and the sovereignty of the Crown. The allegiance which the subject paid to the Crown was in return for certain privileges and protection. The Habeas Corpus Act was for the purpose of protecting the subject. In Rudolph Stallmann's case (1) Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., (1) 12 Ind. Cas. 273; 39 C. 164; 15 C. W. N. 1053; 14 C. L. J. 375; 12 Cr. L. J. 505.

said that there had been no attempt by Legislature to alter section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the section was still read in the larger sense used by Mookerjee, J.

Sir S. P. Sinha, for the Crown.—The questions before your Lordships are whether those two Ordinances are ultra vires or they had expired. Ordinances Nos. III and V of 1914 would have expired in six months' time, but for the Act I of 1915 whereby the Legislature enacted that the Ordinances should not cease but should remain on the Statute Book for the period therein mentioned. As regards the question as to whether the Habeas Corpus Act could be suspended, the question has been set at rest many years ago. [Cites In the matter of Tuckut Roy (2) and Ameer Khan's case (3)].

[CHAUDHURI, J., refers to Alte. Kaufman v. Government of Bombay (4)]

Mr. Avetoom in reply.—Having regard to what was said in Rudolph Stallmann's case (1) by Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., the point is whether the words of the section are sufficient to take away from the Court its jurisdiction and the right of any person to come there.

[CHAUDHURI, J.—If the Governor-in-Council is satisfied then I cannot question the validity of the orders. To do so is to sit as an Appeal Court over the decisions of the Governor-in-Council. That is exactly what I am precluded from doing by section 11.]

Mr. Avetoom.—Your Lordships can enquire into the reason.

JUDGMENT.

CHAUDHURI, J.—This is an application under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, on behalf of five persons, inhabitants of Surat, who state that "they had been working as traders in South Africa for some years and had lately invested all their savings in gold and sovereigns, as they considered it the most safe and convenient form of investment during the War; that they were coming from South Africa by 'S. S. Kathiawar', which arrived in Calcutta on the 19th June 1916 when they were arrested under the orders of the Commissioner of Police, with all their belongings including 58 lbs. of gold nuggets and 119 sovereigns, without any warrant being produced or read out to them." They further state that they have been continually in custody ever since their arrest; that they applied for bail to the Senior Deputy Commissioner of Police (in whose hands the case had been placed by the Commissioner of Police) on three occasions, "but that it was then said that they had been arrested under section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code and Indian Ordinances which were not specified, and that a cable had been sent to South Africa to make enquiries regarding the petitioners, and that no orders could be passed till an answer was obtained from South Africa, and that the Deputy Commissioner of Police could give them no idea as to when it was likely to be received; that failing to obtain bail they made a representation to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal and were informed that as it was an ordinary criminal case the Government would not interfere. They assert that they have committed no criminal offence. They were at first kept in the Central Police Lock-up at Lal Bazar and are now in the Alipur Central Jail, both places being within the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of this Court. They applied to me on the 3rd July 1916 that the Commissioner of Police and the Officer in charge of the Alipur Jail should be called upon to produce them before this Court to be dealt with according to law. I thereupon made an order for their production before me. On the 5th of July they were so produced, when the learned Standing Counsel appeared and stated that the petitioners had been interned under the provisions of Ordinances Nos. III and V of 1914, which had been embodied in the Emergency Legislation Continuance Act (Act I of 1915), and submitted copies of the orders passed by the Governor-in-Council under which they had been interned. The petitioners then applied that as they were not aware of the special Ordinances under which the Government had purported to act, they should be allowed time to consider the position. I directed that a return should be made on behalf of the Government and the case of the petitioners be stated both on affidavits.

I have now before me the affidavit of one

Vallub Das on behalf of the petitioners, in which he has submitted that the orders for internment are ultra vires and illegal in so far as they interfere with their personal liberty, safeguarded as the same is both by the common law and the statutory provisions of the British Parliament.

It appears from the affidavit, filed by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, F. S. R. Anley, that by Notification No. 113/2P., dated the 24th November 1914, the Governor of Bengal in Council delegated certain of the powers delegated to him by the Governor-General-in-Council to supervising officers, whereby inter alia such supervising officers were authorized to detain any person entering the Presidency of Bengal whether by sea or land after the 5th of September 1914, when it appeared to them that such person had entered the Presidency of Bengal with intent to prosecute some purpose prejudicial to the safety, interests or tranquillity of the State, and that by Notification No. 12148P., dated 10th December 1914, the said F. S. R. Anley was empowered by the Governor-in-Council to exercise the powers of such a supervising officer. By reason of certain information received by him, he arrested the petitioners on the 19th June 1916, in pursuance of the powers so vested in him pending the receipt of orders from the Local Government. He reported the matter to the Local Government through the Commissioner of Police on the 20th June 1916, and five different orders dated the 26th June 1916 were received from the Local Government, one in respect of each of the petitioners, under which the petitioners were interned in the Alipur Central Jail. All the orders are practically in the same terms, one of which is quoted below:

"Whereas by section 3 of the Foreigners' Ordinance 1914 (III of 1914), read with section 2 of the Ingress into India Ordinance 1914 (V of 1914), the entry of Foreigners into British India by sea or land can be regulated and restricted.

"And, whereas by Government of India Home Department Notification No. 1374, dated the 12th September 1914, the powers conferred by the said Ingress into India Ordinance 1914, read with the aforementioned Foreigners' Ordinance 1914, have been delegated to the Local Government.

In the matter of JEW A NATHOO.

"And, whereas the Governor-in-Council is satisfied that in order to protect the State from acts prejudicial to its interests, it is desirable to exercise the powers under the said Ordinances in respect of Kana Probhu Patel, son of Parbhoo, village Sossodhra, Police Station Jalalpur, District Surat, who entered the Presidency of Bengal by sea in the 'S. S. Kathiawar.'

"Now, therefore, the Governor-in-Council is pleased to direct that the said Kana Probhu Patel shall be interned temporarily in the Alipur Central Jail, 24-Pergunahs. The person interned under this order shall remain in the place appointed unless permitted by the Governor-in-Council to leave.

(Sd.) J. G. CUMMING,

Additional Secretary to the Government of Bengal."

Counsel for the petitioners contends that under section 23 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, (24 and 25 Vict., c. 67) no Ordinance can have any force of law for more than six months from its promulgation, and that the Governor-General has no power under that section to extend the period. The contention that an Ordinance expires after six months is correct. He argues therefrom that inasmuch as Act I of 1915 extends the period, it is ultra vires. In this he overlooks that the power of the Governor-General-in-Council to pass an Act embodying the provisions of an Ordinance is in no matter controlled or taken away by that section. It is clear that the Governor-General-in-Council has power to pass such an Act embodying the provisions of the Ordinances in question. It is not an Ordinance extended but an Act, and I hold against the above contention.

It is next argued that under section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, it is not in the power of the Governor-General-in-Council to make such laws as affect the constitution and rights of the East India Company, or any part of the unwritten laws or constitution of the United Kingdom whereon may depend in any degree the allegiance of any person to the Crown, or the sovereignty of the Crown. Counsel argues that inasmuch as section 11 of the Ordinance No. III of 1914 embodied in the present enactment seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the Courts, it offends against section 22 of the Indian Councils Act, 1861. His argument is that sections 29, 26 Geo. III, c. 57, known as the East India Company's Act, made residents in India amenable to the Courts and although that section was repealed by Act XI of 1872, the repealing Act itself was ultra vires, that inasmuch as Act XI of 1872 has again been repealed, section 29 must be considered as restored. It is correct that where an Act is repealed and the repealing enactment is repealed by another which manifests no intention that the first shall continue repealed, the common law rule was that the repeal of the second Act revived the first. But this rule does not apply to repealing Acts passed since 1850. The last repeal does not now revive the Act or provisions before repealed, unless words be added reviving them; 52 and 53 Vict., c. 63, section 11. The same principle or rule of law applies to this country. Section 3 of the General Clauses Act, Act I of 1868, expressly provided that for the purpose of reviving either wholly or partially a Statute, Act, or Regulation repealed, it shall be necessary expressly to state such purpose. The same is the effect of sections 6 and 7 of the General Clauses Act, X of 1897. Act XI of 1872 was repealed and re-enacted with modifications by Act XXI of 1879, which after various amendments was again repealed and re-enacted in a modified form by Act V of 1903. I do not find anything in these subsequent Acts reviving section 29 of 26 Geo. III, c. 57. Nor does it seem to me to have been necessary to revive the section as various Acts and Statutes had come into force making the persons mentioned in that section amenable to Courts of Justice. How we are now concerned with the constitution and rights of the East India Company, I have not been able to follow. I, therefore, hold against the said contentions. It is further argued that the present Act also offends against the allegiance of the subject and the sovereignty of the Crown which are said to be "interdependent." One branch of the argument is that the said Ordinance and Act I of 1915 have not expressly suspended the

In the matter of JEW A NATHOO.

Habeas Corpus, and no inference that it has been suspended can, therefore, be inferred, and reliance is strongly placed upon the following passages in the judgments of Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., in Rudolph Stallmann's case (1). Woodroffe, J., says as follows (see page 182*):—"It must be shown that a supreme right such as that of Habeas Corpus or to directions in the nature of the writ has been expressly, if that be possible to the Legislature, taken away." Mookerjee, J., says (see page 198*): "The burden lies very heavily upon those, who in the words of Sir Joseph Napier in Levinger v. Reg. (5) assert that a right of so much importance to the criminal, given by the common law, has been taken away by implication." The learned Judges held in that case that the English Extradition Act expressly referred to the Habeas Corpus, but the Indian Act did not; that if the Legislature had intended to withdraw the matter from the cognizance of the Indian Courts, it would have said so, but as it had not, the Court had jurisdiction under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, to enquire into the validity of the warrant under which the petitioner had been kept in custody.

Mookerjee, J., said that it was not necessary in that case to consider whether a writ of Habeas Corpus could be issued by this Court or whether the right of the Court to issue such a writ could be taken away by the Indian Legislature. The question of the prerogative of the Crown and the allegiance of the subject has been discussed in a great many cases in our Courts. Amongst them may be mentioned In the matter of Tuckut Roy (2), in which Colville, C. J., in discussing Regulation III of 1818 and Act XXXIV of 1850 expressed himself thus (see page 357): "It cannot now be contended that the Governor-General acting under the Statute (13 Geo. III, c. 33) had no power to legislate for the subjects of the British Government as was done by Regulation III of 1818, but it possibly was meant by the Statute to import some such qualification as was afterwards (5) (1877) 3 P. C. 282 at p. 239; 39 L. J. P. C. 49; 23 L. T. 362; 18 W. R. 1109.

more carefully expressed in section 43 of the Statute (3 and 4 Wm. IV, c. 85)." He thought that it certainly was rather a startling proposition that a law passed to increase the power of those who represented the Crown, and in derogation of the rights of those who had withstood that power, should be treated as affecting the prerogative, and this probably was one of those cases where confusion arose as to the meaning of a word, from a difference in its use in rhetoric and in logic. He held that by legislation of this character the prerogative is not affected. He said: "It is not for the Court to assume a power of disregarding what is made part of the law of the land. It is not our part to consider what the Legislature ought to have done, we are only to consider the law, and if we find that it has established certain principles and made certain provisions, it is our duty to obey them."

In Ameer Khan's case (3), In the matter of Tuckut Roy (2) was discussed. The discussion arose in connection with Regulation III of 1818, which was said to belong to that class of laws which authorised the infliction of penalties, the privation of liberty, even the destruction of life, with a view to the future prevention of crime, and insuring the safety and well-being of the public. Such legislation, according to Norman, J., falls within the principle salus populi suprema lex. That learned Judge held in that case that the Governor-General-in-Council had a power analogous to that which the Parliament of the United Kingdom exercised when by legislative enactment it suspended the Habeas Corpus Act. The questions now raised were elaborately discussed and it was held by him that the principles which justified the temporary suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act in England, justified the Indian Legislature in entrusting to the Governor-General-in-Council an exceptional power of placing individuals under personal restraint, when for the security of the British Dominions, etc., such a course might appear necessary to the Governor-General-in-Council. He said: "The proviso in section 22 is not that no law shall be made contrary to the Magna Charta or any other similar Statute. The unwritten constitution of England is of a flexible character. It admitted a relaxation of the rules securing private rights in times of public distress or danger, ne quid detrimenti capiat respublica."

*Pages of 39 C.—Ed.

In the matter of JEW A NATHOO.

In the Appeal Court in the same case Mr. Justice Phear, in discussing the same questions which have been raised before me, said: "The real effect of these Acts is that they create and make lawful a new cause of imprisonment and constitute the Governor-General-in-Council a Court, endowed with the fullest discretion to adjudicate such a cause."

The argument about allegiance, he thought, could be carried to the extent that "If the Regulation and Acts were void and of no legal force the subject had a right by law to disclaim allegiance to the Crown of the United Kingdom." He considered such an argument "startling" and not fit to be entertained. The other Judge in the Appeal Court, Mr. Justice Markby, said, that he saw no ground for supposing that an Act affected the prerogative of the Crown merely because it affected the liberty of the subject. If that were so, then the Indian Legislature would have no power at all to legislate in criminal matters. He held that the allegiance of a British subject in no way whatever depended upon the existence, or non-existence of such a power as was conferred on the Governor-General by the Regulation of 1818. He wholly repudiated the doctrine contended for, that the allegiance of a subject to his Sovereign could by any possibility be legally affected by the mere withdrawal from the subject of any right, privilege or immunity whatsoever. Practically the same questions were raised in Alter Kaufman v. Government of Bombay (4), in which the decision of the Calcutta Court in Ameer Khan's case (3) was quoted with approval. The Indian Legislature both before and after the passing of the Indian Councils Act, 1861, has from time to time passed similar enactments authorizing the privation of liberty in certain circumstances, and no instance has been cited to me that such Acts have been held to be ultra vires or that any of the above arguments which have been repeated from time to time have ever been accepted as correct. The general powers of the Indian Legislature has been discussed in Rex. v. Burah (6), which is the leading case on the subject. Lord Selborne has laid down in that case as follows:—"If what has been done is legislation within the general scope of the affirmative words which give the power, and if it violates no express condition or restriction by which that power is limited, it is not for any Court of Justice to enquire further or to enlarge constructively those conditions and restrictions."

The latest case, in which somewhat similar questions were raised, is that of Rex. v. Halliday (7). It was contended that it was the usual practice in England to pass an Act suspending the Habeas Corpus Act when circumstances required, the Suspension Act being always followed by an Indemnifying Act. General words, it was argued, ought not to be interpreted as taking away the fundamental rights of individuals as conferred by Statute or the Common Law but in view of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Act, 1914, it was held in the Court of Appeal that the argument was not sound.

The Ordinances in question came into existence in India in circumstances of emergency. Act I of 1915 has been enacted owing to the same emergency and is of a temporary character, it being provided that it is to remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for a period of six months thereafter.

Section 11 of Ordinance No. III of 1914 incorporated in that Act expressly provides that "No order made under section 3 shall be called in question in any Court."

It expressly ousts the jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice, that is to say, when the requirements and provisions of the Act and Ordinances are fulfilled.

The orders we are dealing with mention that the Governor-in-Council is satisfied that in order to protect the State from acts prejudicial to its interests, it is desirable to exercise the powers under the said Ordinances in respect of the petitioners and that they have accordingly been interned.

Arguments have been addressed to me,

(6) (1878) 3 A. C. 889; 5 L. A. 178.

(7) (1916) 1 K. B. 737; 85 L. J. K. B. 953; 20 C. W. N. xci.

BAGHUMAL WADHUMAL v. EMPEROR.

with which I am unable to agree, that as the orders do not recite the Act but only the Ordinances and do not say that "It is desirable to protect the State from the prosecution by the petitioners of some purpose prejudicial to its interests," the orders are bad and inoperative. The sections of the Ordinances are referred to in the orders as they are incorporated in the Act and the wording of the orders seems to me substantially to comply with the requirements of section 2 (2) of Ordinance V of 1914. I hold the Act is not ultra vires and this Court has no power to call in question the orders which have been passed thereunder. It is for the Governor-in-Council to be satisfied on the materials before them. The Court cannot call for the materials or examine them. The real effect of these Acts, to adopt the language of Phear, J., is that they create and make lawful a new cause of imprisonment and constitute the Governor-in-Council a Court endowed with the fullest discretion to adjudicate such a cause.

The usual procedure in these applications is to issue a Rule in the first instance and not to order the production of the petitioners. I departed from this practice, as it was not mentioned in this case that their detention was under the said Ordinances and as it appeared from the affidavit filed on behalf of the petitioners that they had been detained for a considerable time, without a warrant, merely on a suspicion that they had committed some unknown offence, which seemed to me prima facie illegal and high-handed. It is asserted that even now the Government has no materials upon which they have purported to take action but I have no power to enquire into that allegation, as the orders comply with the requirements of the Act.

I accordingly dismiss this application.

BAGUMAL WADHUMAL—

APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPONENT.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bom Act IV of 1887), s. 6—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 123, 125—Warrant issued under s. 6 containing direction for seizure of all money found on people in gaming house, legality of—Complaint on oath forming basis of warrant issued under s. 6, right of accused to inspection of.

A warrant issued under section 6 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act is not rendered wholly bad or illegal by reason of its containing a direction for seizure of all money found on people in the gaming house; such a direction should be regarded as mere surplusage not affecting the main purpose of the warrant. [p. 55, col. 1.]

Non-production by a Court of the complaint on oath which forms the foundation of a warrant issued under section 6, is not improper, if the object of the production is to ascertain merely the name of the informer. [p. 55, col. 2.]

Per Fawcett, A. J. C.—The Court should decline to sanction any step which would in practice almost necessarily result in the disclosure of the name of the informer, contrary to the provisions of section 123 of the Evidence Act. [p. 56, col. 1.]

Laladhar Umarsi v. Emperor, 29 Ind. Cas. 79; 8 S. L. R. 309; 16 Cr. L. J. 447, referred to.

Application against the order of the City Magistrate, Hyderabad.

Mr. Wadhupal Oodharam, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J. C.—We have heard Mr. Wadhupal at considerable length on the question of admission of this application, but have come to the conclusion after duly considering all his arguments that this is not a case for interference by revision.

BAGUMAL WADHUMAL v. EMPEROR.

Mr. Wadhupal has addressed to us a variety of arguments, including arguments upon the question of fact whether the house in question was or was not a common gaming house. That question of fact, however, can safely be left in this case to the decision of the learned Magistrate.

But Mr. Wadhupal's efforts were directed not so much to denying the fact that the house in question was a common gaming house, as to detecting flaws in the procedure by means of which his clients hoped to evade their liabilities under the law. He endeavoured to show that the search was bad because the two "mashirs" called to be present thereat were not persons living in the neighbourhood and that, therefore, the results of the search ought not to have been considered by the Magistrate. It is not necessary to decide whether the mashirs were properly selected nor whether indeed any mashirs at all were necessary, for no irregularity in the search could prevent matters actually discovered being perceived and duly considered by the Magistrate.

Mr. Wadhupal then endeavoured to show that the directions in the warrant for seizure of all money found on people in the house, not being strictly according to law, rendered the whole warrant bad. But those misdirections must, in my opinion, be regarded as mere surplusage not affecting the main purpose of the warrant or rendering it other than it purported to be, merely a warrant under section 6 of the Gambling Act.

Mr. Wadhupal then seized on the little word "for" appearing after the title of the officer signing the warrant, viz., the Assistant Superintendent of Police, and contended that the warrant was not really issued by the Assistant Superintendent of Police but by an improper delegation of duty by the officer whose title followed the word "for", namely, the Superintendent of Police. But unfortunately for this contention the Assistant Superintendent of Police himself had authority conferred on him, quite apart from the Superintendent of Police, by due notification in the Sind Official Gazette by the Commissioner-in-Sind.

But Mr. Wadhupal's main effort was directed to show that he had improperly been denied permission to peruse the complaint on oath which was the foundation of the warrant. And he has suggested that if he had been allowed to see that document he would have been able to prove that the house mentioned in the complaint was an entirely different house from that entered in the warrant. But the Assistant Superintendent of Police, who issued the warrant and was called to give evidence, does not appear to have been directly questioned whether the house mentioned in the complaint was or was not the same as the house entered in the warrant. Mr. Wadhupal has stated that he cross-examined that witness at very considerable length, and that statement may be accepted as entirely true. But Mr. Wadhupal has not filed any affidavit, and is not prepared to file an affidavit to the effect that the question mentioned was definitely put to the Assistant Superintendent of Police in the witness-box. It appears to me, therefore, that the real reason for the demand to peruse the complaint cannot really have been to ascertain whether the house mentioned in the complaint was or was not the same as that entered in the warrant, but merely to ascertain the name of the informer. And if that is so, then clearly the non-production of the complaint was not improper but was privileged under section 125 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Lastly, Mr. Wadhupal has represented to us that the sentence of 12 weeks' simple imprisonment passed on his client was unduly severe. The period is no doubt long but the Magistrate has given his reasons for passing a long sentence. There is not, in my opinion, sufficient ground for interfering with the discretion vested in the Magistrate.

There are, therefore, in my opinion, no sufficient grounds for revision and this application ought to be rejected.

FAWCETT, A. J. C.—I concur. As regards Mr. Wadhupal's main contention, I would only add that I do not think the mere allegations that the house searched differs from that mentioned in the complaint on oath under section 6 affords any ground for the compulsory production of that complaint. It is not clearly shown that this allegation was in fact made before the Magistrate. But in any case the presumption under section 114 of the Evidence Act is that the two houses agree; and in the absence of any evidence, circumstantial or direct, in support of such an allegation, I am clearly of opinion that, for reasons given in my judgment in Liladhar Umarsi v. Emperor (1), the Court should decline to sanction any step which would in practice almost necessarily result in the disclosure of the name of the informer, contrary to the provisions of section 123 of the Evidence Act.

Application rejected.

CRIMINAL REPORT No. 65 OF 1916.

UNAR GOOL AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS
versus

EMPEROR—OPONENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 413, 435, 438, construction of—Appeal, right of, when appealable, and non-appealable sentences passed in one judgment—Remedy where conviction set aside on appeal—Reference to High Court.

Section 413 of the Criminal Procedure Code declares in quite unambiguous terms that in those cases in which a Court passes only a light sentence the convicted person shall have no right of appeal. The words used in the section cannot bear the construction that no appeal lies at the instance of a convicted person, against a judgment in which no other sentence than one not exceeding one month has been passed [p. 57, cols. 1 & 2.]

Reg. v. Kalubhai Meghabhai, 7 B. H. C. R. Cr. 35; Lal Singh v. Emperor, 36 Ind. Cas. 481; 14 A. L. J. 518; 38 A. 395; 17 Cr. L. J. 513, referred to.

Consequently, where at a joint trial some accused persons are sentenced to appealable sentences and some to non-appealable sentences, the former alone can appeal. This strict interpretation might on occasions lead to apparent injustice, e. g., where on appeal by those having right of appeal, the conviction is set aside. Under the existing practice such injustice can be removed by the procedure of a reference for revision to the High Court under section 435 or 438, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 57, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

HAYWARD, J. C.—There were nine persons convicted of rioting by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Larkana. Three of these persons were sentenced to appealable sentences and their convictions have been set aside on appeal by the Sessions Judge, Larkana. The remaining six were sentenced to non-appealable sentences and their case has been referred for our revisional consideration by the learned Sessions Judge. The Public Prosecutor for Sind in support of the reference has argued a point suggested in the referring letter, namely, that the case of these persons could properly have been disposed of by way of appeal by the Sessions Judge. He has been supported by Mr. Wadhmal on behalf of applicants Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6, applicants Nos. 2 and 4 not being represented. Mr. Lalchand, on the other hand, on behalf of the complainant has contended that the case of these persons could only be considered by way of revision in this Court.

There appears to be a decision of the Chief Court of Lower Burma and another of the Punjab Chief Court in favour of the jurisdiction in such cases of the Sessions Judge. And there has also been a recent dictum of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in favour of the same view reported in the case of Lal Singh v. Emperor (1). On the other hand the case of Reg. v. Kalubhai Meghabhai (2) appears to have been consistently followed on this side of India. That practice seems to me, with deference to the other authorities, in accord with the actual wording of section 413 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The words are: "There shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only". Those words include every case in which a convicted person is sentenced to imprisonment not exceeding one month and cannot, without straining, be restricted to cases in which no other persons are tried or in which no other persons are sentenced to imprisonment exceeding one month. They apply, in my opinion, strictly interpreted, even in cases in which there are one or more persons sentenced to imprisonment not exceeding one month together with other persons sentenced to higher terms of imprisonment. That strict interpretation may certainly lead on occasions to apparent injustice, but that injustice can be and is under the existing practice remedied by reference for revision to the High Court. It is a somewhat cumbrous procedure no doubt, but that has been recognized in the Bill now under consideration to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Public Prosecutor for Sind has accordingly contended on the merits that this is a proper case for setting aside the convictions of the six applicants by way of revision. Mr. Lal Chand on behalf of the complainant has argued in favour of maintaining the convictions. We have had our attention drawn to the material parts of the evidence and have read the careful and well-considered judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and have had some hesitation in accepting the contrary views of the Sessions Judge. It is, however, clear that the evidence was far from satisfactory even in the opinion of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and that there were substantial grounds for the doubts as to the true version of the fight held by the Sessions Judge. It seems to me, therefore, that it would not be proper for us to accept with regard to these six applicants a different version of the fight from that accepted with regard to the three appellants upon a detailed hearing of the appeal by the Sessions Judge. We had at the same time some difficulty in following the argument in certain passages toward the close of the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, and it seems to me that his attention might usefully be invited to the remarks of Batchelor, J., on these kinds of cases made in Bechar Anop v. Emperor (3).

(3) 31 Ind. Cas. 372; 40 B. 105; 17 Bom. L. R. 888; 16 Cr. L. J. 772.

We ought, therefore, in my opinion, to accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge and set aside the conviction and sentences passed on the six applicants.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—I concur in the proposed order.

Section 413 cannot, I think, bear the construction that no appeal lies, at the instance of a convicted person, against a judgment in which no other sentence than one not exceeding a month is passed. If such had been the intention of the Legislature there would have been no difficulty in giving expression to it.

The appeal is against the judgment (section 404), and the judgment necessarily contains the conviction and sentence (section 365).

"Case" is not equivalent to either "judgment" or "trial". Where several accused are tried together, the "case" of each has to be treated separately, and it is usual in giving the decision to state "in the case of accused No. 1 the order is that, etc." Section 413 appears to me to declare in quite unambiguous terms that in those cases in which a Court passes a light sentence the convicted person has no appeal.

Convictions and sentences reversed.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CRIMINAL JURISDICTION.

July 20, 1916.*

Present:—Mr. Justice Chaudhuri.

In the matter of CHARU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR—PETITIONER.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 54, 491—Directions of the nature of habeas corpus—Application to be made to Judge on Original Side of High Court—S. 54, scope of—Circumstances justifying arrest—"Credible information" and "reasonable suspicion", meaning of—Discretion to be exercised by police-officer, delegation of.

An application under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, is to be made to the High Court in its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction. [p. 60, col. 2.]

The petitioner, who was the managing agent of a certain Provident Company of Calcutta, was arrested by the Calcutta Police under section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, on receipt of a letter written by an Inspector of Police in a certain district in the Bombay Presidency to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, in which it was stated that on enquiries into complaints against the Company and their local agent in Bombay it appeared, there being prima facie evidence to that effect, that the managing agent and the local agent had committed offences under sections 409 and 420, Indian Penal Code. The letter contained a request to cause the arrest of the petitioner and was forwarded by the District Magistrate with a note that the petitioner might be arrested under section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, and sent to the Magistrate, 1st class, of the District, to be tried by him. It was admitted that the officer effecting the arrest in Calcutta relied solely on the aforesaid letter and had no personal knowledge of the facts of the case:

Held, that the arrest of the petitioner under section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, was not proper. [p. 63, col. 1.]

That section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, gives wide powers to a Police Officer to make an arrest without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant only in certain circumstances limited by the provisions contained in the section and it is necessary in exercising such large powers to be cautious and circumspect. [p. 63, col. 1.]

The section gives a Police Officer personal authority and involves personal responsibility, and the "reasonable suspicion" and "credible information" must be based upon definite facts which the Police Officer must consider for himself before he acts under the section. He cannot delegate his discretion or take shelter under the belief or judgment of another Police officer. [p. 62, col. 1 p. 63, col. 1.]

In the circumstances of the case the High Court under section 491, Criminal Procedure Code, directed the release of the petitioner.

This was a Rule in the nature of a habeas corpus issued by Sanderson, C. J., under section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on an application by the petitioner above named.

FACTS as stated in the petition of the applicant were as follows:—

Charu Chandra was a member of the firm of Messrs. C. C. Mazumdar and Sons, having its place of business at Bhowanipore. This firm were the Managing Agents of the Bharat Luxmi Provident Co., Ltd., having its Head Office at No. 81, Olive Street (Calcutta). On the 26th of June last, while the petitioner was at the Head Office, two members of the Calcutta Police force took him to the Lal Bazar Police Office, where he was informed that he was under arrest on charges under sections 420 (cheating and dishonestly inducing delivery of property) and 409 (criminal breach of trust) of the Indian Penal Code as the Managing Agent of the Bharat Luxmi Provident Co., Ltd., under instructions from the District Superintendent of Police at a place called Karwar in the Presidency of Bombay. The petition stated that there was no warrant against the petitioner and that he was arrested in pursuance of a letter from some Bombay Police Officers to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta. The petitioner had moved the Deputy Commissioner of Police for bail, but the application was rejected on the ground that the Police had instructions to send the petitioner to Bombay that evening. The Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta was then moved, but with no effect. The petitioner next moved the High Court under sections 491 (for issue of directions in the nature of a habeas corpus) and 498 (for admission to bail) of the Criminal Procedure Code, whereupon the present Rule was issued and the petitioner was admitted to bail, and pending the hearing of the Rule the petitioner was ordered not to be removed to Bombay. On the above Rule coming up for hearing before Sanderson, C. J., and Walmsley, J., who were then sitting on the Criminal Revisional and Appellate Bench:

Sir S. P. Sinha (Advocate-General) appeared for the Crown and drew their Lordships' attention to the fact that in order to preserve the unanimity of practice in the Court it was necessary to consider whether the Rule should be heard by their Lordships, or one of the Judges of the Original Civil Side or by the learned Judge exercising the Original Criminal Jurisdiction. It was a very serious matter and if the Rule came on for hearing on the Original Side and if the application was refused, there was a right of appeal. If a Divisional Bench heard the application the petitioner would lose his right of appeal. From 1870 downwards the uniform practice was, with the exception of one case, that if it was a criminal case, to make the application before the Judge exercising the Original Criminal Jurisdiction, if it was a civil case, to make the application before the Judge exercising the Original Civil Jurisdiction. Section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code made it quite clear that the application should be made before the Judge exercising the Original Criminal Jurisdiction. If your Lordships would constitute yourselves into a Bench exercising the Original Jurisdiction in this Court, the

In the matter of CHARU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR.

Rule might be heard before you but that would mean that there would be no right of appeal in that case.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—This, of course, is a case within the Original Jurisdiction of this Court.]

Mr. Avetoom who appeared with Messrs. C. R. Das and R. N. Mitter.—That is so.

Their Lordships then ordered that the Rule would be heard before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri sitting on the Original Side.

On the Rule coming on before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri for hearing:

Messrs. C. R. Das and R. Mitter appeared for the Petitioner, Charu Chandra Majumdar. Mr. Avetoom represented the Bharat Luxmi Provident Company.

Sir S. P. Sinha, Advocate-General, and Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, appeared for the Commissioner of Police.

Sir S. P. Sinha said that before Mr. Das began, he ought to mention how this matter came before his Lordship. It was desirable that the procedure to be adopted should be settled definitely once for all. The application was made, because the matter was urgent and there was no other Judge available, by Mr. Avetoom, before the Chief Justice who granted a Rule, although the Rule was issued as a Rule on the Crown Side of this Court. When the matter came on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Walmsley, he (Sir S. P. Sinha) mentioned that the practice of this Court was that all these matters should be heard by a Judge on the Original Side. He being the Judge who exercised the Original Criminal Jurisdiction of this Court, it would be for his Lordship to lay down definitely the practice of the Court in this respect.

Mr. Das said that he endorsed what had fallen from the learned Advocate-General. He stated that Charu Chandra Majumdar was the Managing Agent in Calcutta of the Bharat Luxmi Insurance Company. There were certain proceedings, the exact nature of which the petitioner was not aware of, against a man named Soman, who was agent of the Company at Karwar, a place about 200 miles from Bombay.

Certain charges were being investigated by the Police at Karwar. What the foundation of the allegation against the petitioner was he did not know but a letter was sent by the District Superintendent of Police, Karwar, to the Commissioner of Police here requesting the latter to arrest the petitioner. That letter was countersigned by the District Magistrate, who expressed the opinion that the petitioner might be arrested on suspicion under section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code. On receiving that letter the Calcutta Police arrested the petitioner on June 26th in his office. He was kept in custody the whole of that day and that night, and the next day the petitioner had information that he would be sent to Karwar. On that, at half past five in the evening, the Chief Justice was moved and this Rule obtained.

Counsel then read the letter. It was to the effect that from enquiries made into the complaint against the Bharat Luxmi Provident Company and their Agent, Soman, it was found that the Managing Agent, Charu Chandra Mazumdar of Calcutta, had committed offences under sections 409 (criminal breach of trust) and 420 (cheating) and there was prima facie evidence to that effect. The Commissioner of Police here was requested to arrest Charu Chandra Majumdar and send him to Karwar for trial. His contention was that it was not a warrant of any Court. The question was whether upon this information the arrest under section 54 was a legal arrest and a proper arrest. Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code, no doubt, gave very large powers, at the same time the larger the powers so conferred the greater ought to be the caution.

[Mr. JUSTICE CHAUDHURI.—What do you contend, is it in excess of their authority?]

Mr. Das.—I contend, first, that it is in excess of the powers conferred by section 54, and, second, that in any event it is an improper arrest.

[Mr. JUSTICE CHAUDHURI.—Section 54 is rather wide.]

Mr. Das.—Yes. I contend that section 54 must be interpreted to mean that suspicion or information—whatever it is—must be based on facts. What was done immediately after this Rule was granted was that we sent a telegram to the Police at Karwar for information. The Police at Karwar said in reply they had no information to give and that we had better apply to the C. I. D. at Poona. We did so by telegram and were referred back to Karwar. On the 6th instant we sent a telegram to the District Magistrate at Karwar and on the 9th we received a reply that a complaint was being recorded not against the petitioner but against Soman.

Mr. Das then pointed out that all these Companies were regulated by the Provident Insurance Companies Act, in which elaborate provisions were made for the investigation of charges against a Company.

Sir S. P. Sinha (Advocate-General) said that the only point was whether section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code gave authority to the officer, here entrusted with the duty of arresting the petitioner, to arrest him. It was quite clear that when the officer in question effected the arrest, all he had before him was this letter dated the 22nd April of the Police Officer at Karwar. This letter was followed by a number of reminders. The question was whether the Police were justified on receipt of the information contained in this letter of the 22nd April in arresting the petitioner without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant. Although this letter was signed by the Magistrate, it was not a warrant. If this arrest was to be justified it could only be justified under the first clause of section 54, which stated that there must be a "reasonable complaint" or "credible information" or "reasonable suspicion." He did not think that the other side would contend that the Police had not acted bona fide.

[Mr. JUSTICE CHAUDHURI.—A person is entitled at the time of his arrest to know what he is arrested for.]

The Advocate-General.—The letter in question from the Police Inspector was countersigned by the District Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate. The signatures of these two superior officers could have no force or effect beyond this, that they made the information in the letter of the 22nd April more credible and more worthy to be acted upon than it would otherwise have been.

[Mr. JUSTICE CHAUDHURI.—Could the Commissioner of Police delegate his power to arrest?]

The Advocate-General.—The arrest was actually made by laying hands but the officer who really arrested was the Commissioner of Police.

There was no case exactly on the point, though the question was a very important point.

Mr. Das in reply cited Queen v. Behary Singh (1).

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code for the production of one Charu Chandra Majumdar, who was arrested under section 54 by the Calcutta Police. A Rule was issued by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Walmsley constituting the Criminal Bench; but a question having been raised as to what the proper procedure is in a case of this character, as to whether such applications ought not to be made to the Judge exercising the Ordinary Criminal Jurisdiction of this Court, the matter has been sent to me for disposal. For a great number of years all these applications have been made as a rule to the Original Side of this Court. With the exception of one case, namely, that of *Rudolph Stallmann, I do not remember any single case in which that practice was departed from. An application was made in that case to a single Judge of this Court, but the Rule was evidently heard by three Judges forming a Special Bench constituted by the Chief Justice. Having regard to the practically uniform procedure of this Court and the rules framed by the Court under section 491 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, I hold that the Original Side in its Criminal Jurisdiction is the proper Court to deal with these applications. I find that the same is the procedure in Bombay—applications being made on its Crown Side. I apprehend the application was made in Stallmann's case following the practice obtaining in England, where such an application may be made to any Judge of the Supreme Court, but such a procedure, so far as I know, has no sanction so far as we are concerned. I have made the above observations as I have been asked by both sides to deal with the question of procedure in my judgment in this matter. It is to be noticed that an order made by me in the exercise of my Original Criminal Jurisdiction is appealable under our rules, whereas an order made by the Criminal Bench is not appealable.

*The case is reported as 12 Ind. Cas. 273.—Ed.

In the matter of CHARU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR.

Now coming to the matter of the application, section 54, Criminal Procedure Code, authorises arrest without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant only in certain circumstances, limited by the provisions therein contained. I need not deal with any other proviso except the first. In this case there was no complaint before the Police officer who arrested the applicant, and the question is as to whether he had received "credible information," or whether it can be said that "reasonable suspicion" existed that the applicant was concerned in a cognizable offence. There was no information before the officer except the following letter:

THE COMMISSIONER OF POLICE, Calcutta.

SIR,

Re: enquiry into the affairs of the Bharat Luxmi Provident Company of Calcutta.

I respectfully beg to state that on enquiry made into the complaints against the above-named Bharat Luxmi Provident, Ltd., 81, Olive Street, Calcutta, and their Agent, D. R. Soman of Khanapur, Bombay Presidency, it is found out that the Managing Agent, Charu Chandra Majumdar, of Calcutta, and Agent D. R. Soman, of Bombay, have committed offences under sections 409, 420, Indian Penal Code, as there is prima facie evidence to that effect. I, therefore, request that you will kindly arrange to have the said Charu Chandra Majumdar, the Managing Agent of the Company, 81, Olive Street, Calcutta, arrested and sent to the District Magistrate, Kanara, Karwar, for trial.

I beg to remain,

The letter, it will be noticed, contains no particulars. The note made by the Magistrate is merely a recommendation, which may be neglected. It is not suggested by the Crown that it may be read as warrant or that it should be considered of any value. If the Magistrate had materials before him, he was the proper officer to issue a warrant, but if he did not feel competent to exercise his power, his recommendation is worth nothing.

A statement of an indefinite character is all that was before the Police Officer who acted upon the letter, and apparently he did so being frequently applied to by the Police Officer at Kanara. It seems clear to me that the information upon which a Police Officer may act under this section, must be such as enables him to conclude that it is credible, there must be facts before him to base his judgment upon. I do not think it can be said that a Police Officer has credible information, merely because a brother Police Officer in some remote part of the country writes a letter that he has information upon which he thinks that there is "prima facie evidence" and that action ought to be taken under this section. The discretion which is given to the officer who has to arrest, must mean discretion exercised by him upon consideration of the materials placed before him, not merely on intimation that some other Police Officer thinks that some offence or other has been committed. What the precise nature of the offence is, the letter does not state. A Police Officer acting under this section has to act on his personal responsibility. If he could act on a representation made to him as in this case by a brother Police Officer that he had some information, the responsibility could be shifted from person to person, and the provisions of section 220, Indian Penal Code, entirely nullified. Section 54 gives him personal authority and must involve personal responsibility. He has to be satisfied that he has credible information, and he has to show it.

I have next to consider the proviso about "reasonable suspicion." It may be argued that a Police Officer is justified in thinking that "reasonable suspicion" exists, when he is informed by a brother Police Officer holding a responsible position that the latter has information upon which he thinks a cognizable offence has been committed. I do not think the section can mean such suspicion. If it be so construed, it may be carried to this extent, that any officer may write to any other officer that he suspects a man of having committed a cognizable offence and cause his arrest. The section gives wide powers and ought to be rigorously construed. It is not mere suspicion, but the suspicion must be "reasonable" —reasonable according to the opinion and in the judgment of the officer called upon to arrest. I do not think the argument can be accepted that suspicion entertained by another officer, however responsible the office he may hold, is sufficient for the arresting officer to act upon, or that it is reasonable for him to entertain a suspicion because some one else suspects; as thereby he practically consigns his reason to another person, and gets rid of his personal responsibility. I think that "reasonable suspicion" means reasonable suspicion based upon facts which have been brought to the knowledge or cognizance of the officer called upon to arrest—not suspicion which may be aroused in his mind by a communication from a brother officer without particulars. I am strengthened in my opinion by the case of Queen v. Behary Singh (1), where Markby, J., says: "The widest power is that conferred by paragraph 2 of section 100 (the then corresponding section), which provides that a Police Officer may arrest without orders from a Magistrate and without warrant any person against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned in any offence specified in the schedule to the Act as offences for which Police officers may arrest without a warrant," in other words, "cognizable offences" in the words of the present Code. "What is a reasonable complaint or suspicion must depend on the circumstances of each particular case; but it must be at least founded on some definite facts tending to throw suspicion on the person arrested and not on mere vague surmise or information." This case has been cited in later cases both here and in Bombay, and been tacitly followed. The Deputy Commissioner of Police, in his affidavit in answer to the application, says that he had no information about the case except what was contained in the letter above quoted. He had no personal knowledge of the facts, but he thought that upon the letter it was a fit and proper case in which he could exercise the powers conferred upon him by section 54. He does not tell us whether he acted because he thought there was reasonable suspicion entertained by him or whether he thought he had credible information. A Magistrate's power to take cognizance of an offence under section 190 (1) (c) Criminal Procedure Code, is guarded by the words "upon his own knowledge or suspicion," and I do not think that larger powers were intended to be given to a Police Officer. It is necessary in exercising such large powers to be cautious and circumspect, and I hold that "reasonable suspicion" and "credible information" in section 54 must be based upon definite facts which the Police Officer must consider for himself before he acts under the section. He cannot delegate his discretion, or take shelter under another person's belief or judgment. Any other interpretation would tend to diminish the sense of responsibility of the officers concerned, and make the exercise of the power dangerous, possibilities which ought to be guarded against. The Crown has placed this matter before me in the fairest manner possible, and has not desired that my decision should be based upon further materials which have come to the possession of the Police Officer since the arrest was effected. The applicant has also placed certain facts he has since ascertained, but under the circumstances I am not called upon to consider them, or discuss their relevancy. I make the Rule absolute and direct that the accused be set at liberty.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 221 (7), 537—Charge, omission to set forth previous conviction in—Irregularity, whether curable—Form to be used.

Magistrates should be careful to comply with the provisions of section 221 (7), Criminal Procedure Code. An omission to do so is an irregularity curable by section 537, if it has not actually prejudiced the accused.

Where it is intended to prove a previous conviction against an accused for the purpose of affecting the punishment which a Court is competent to award, Criminal Form 79 should invariably be used.

JUDGMENT.—After reading the petition of appeal and the proceedings of the trial I see no reason to interfere with the conviction under section 374/75, Indian Penal Code, or the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for seven years and I dismiss Nga Hla's appeal summarily.

The District Magistrate's procedure was irregular. He was bound by section 221 (7), Code of Criminal Procedure, to state the fact, date and place of previous conviction on the charge and omitted to do so. The omission is, however, not material as the previous convictions were put to the accused and admitted by him before judgment was passed. It is covered by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate should be careful to comply with the provisions of the Code in future. The use of Criminal Form 80 does not dispense with the procedure laid down in section 221 (7). It is not sufficient to use Criminal Form 80 alone, except in cases of the kind described in paragraph 241, Lower Burma Courts Manual. Where it is intended to prove the previous conviction "for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court is competent to award," Criminal Form 79 should invariably be used. There is no objection to using Criminal Form 80 as a supplementary form in such cases.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 146—Disputed land under water—Recent possession, determination of, impossible—Procedure.

Where in a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate finds that none of the parties was in undisturbed possession of the land in dispute within two months preceding the date of the proceeding owing to the land remaining under water, the proper order for him to make is one under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, and not to make an order in favour of the party who was in possession during the previous year.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kutwa, dated the 27th January 1916.

FACTS.—In this case the dispute was about the possession of 24 bighas of boro land situate in a beel village. The first party claimed the land as within his boundary jama, and the second party, who was the zemindar, claimed it to be utbandi land, liable to settlement from year to year.

The land had been under water for some time, and as soon as it rose above water the first party went to cultivate it. The second party opposed the cultivation, and the Police, apprehending a breach of the peace, submitted proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

The Magistrate found that nobody had been in undisturbed possession of the land during the year in which the dispute arose, the land having remained under water till the beginning of Assin, but that possession must be presumed to have been with the party who was in possession during the previous year, and, accordingly, after a consideration of the evidence adduced by both parties, he declared that the first party was in possession of the land and was entitled to hold it until evicted from it in due course of law.

Babus Jogendra Nath Mukherjee and Atulya Charan Bose, for the Petitioners.

Babu Satis Chunder Munshi, for the Opposite Party.

On a Rule obtained by the second party against the Magistrate's order, the High Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—In this case we think that the Rule must be made absolute. The order of the Magistrate, as it stands, cannot possibly be supported on the evidence on the record and on his own findings. He states distinctly that nobody has been in undisturbed possession of the land this year. That must mean from the previous Bysakh. Later on, he says: "As there could not be any act of peaceful possession within two months of the date of the proceeding, this being impossible owing to the land remaining under water, the possession of this year is to be presumed of the man who was in possession during the previous year." This is in direct contravention of section 145 (4), Criminal Procedure Code. We think, therefore, that the proper order which the Magistrate should have made in this case was one under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, and we accordingly substitute such an order for the order now complained of. We hold that it was impossible for the Magistrate to satisfy himself as to which of the parties was in possession of the land in dispute; and the land must, therefore, be attached until a competent Court has determined the rights of the parties thereto or the persons entitled to possession thereof. The Magistrate will issue the necessary attachment on receipt of this order.

Rule made absolute.

Mortgage by co-sharer—Mortgagor tenant of mortgagee—Sale of mortgaged property to third person—Consideration, portion of, left with vendee to pay off arrears of rent—Rent, suit for arrears of, by mortgagee—Proper parties—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A co sharer in a village mortgaged his share with possession, and remained in cultivation of certain portions of the mortgaged land as tenant. Subsequently he sold his share, leaving a portion of the purchase-money with the vendee to pay up the arrears of rent due by him to the mortgagee and the lambardar. The vendee paid the whole money left with him to the lambardar alone. The mortgagee sued the lambardar, together with the vendor and the vendee, in the Civil Court, for his share of the money thus paid to the lambardar.

Held, that the mortgagee had no remedy of any kind against the vendee, but only as against the lambardar, and this too in a Rent Court. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 16th February 1916, reversing the order of the Munsif, Purwa, dated the 23rd September 1915.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Shahenshah Husain Rizwi and Pandit Pridyumna Kishen Kaul, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Jagan Nath and Suraj Bali Singh each owned an eight-annas share in the village of Ismailpur. Jagan Nath was and is still the lambardar of the village. Suraj Bali Singh mortgaged with possession his eight-annas share on 10th June 1903 to Asghar Husain, exempting 5 bighas 4 biswas of sir land which he was to cultivate rent-free, 2 bighas 12 biswas of khalsa land which he was to cultivate on a rent of Rs. 12 a year, and two groves. In addition to the exempted land Suraj Bali Singh cultivated certain land as an ordinary tenant paying rent to Jagan Nath and Asghar Husain, which was at first asserted to be Rs. 40-3-0 annually but which is actually Rs. 39-12-0. Suraj Bali Singh died before 1911 and was succeeded by his sons Ganga Bakhsh Singh, Raghunath Singh and Sardar Singh. In 1911 Jagan Nath instituted three suits for rent due against Ganga Bakhsh Singh, Raghunath Singh and Sardar Singh in respect both of the 2 bighas 12 biswas exempted by the deed of mortgage and the plot of the rental of Rs. 39-12. On 7th June 1911 Ganga Bakhsh Singh, Raghunath Singh and Sardar Singh sold the whole of their rights in the eight-annas share to a certain Pandit Beni Madho for Rs. 15,000. One item of consideration in the deed was in respect of Rs. 400 which was to be left with the vendee, for payment of the rent payable to Asghar Husain and Jagan Nath for the years 1316 to 1318 Fashi. Decrees were passed for all the rent due in those years shortly after the deed of sale was executed. One decree, Exhibit A11, dated the 12th June 1911, was for Rs. 7-9-6, another Exhibit A13, also of 12th June 1911, was for Rs. 56 7-0 and the third, Exhibit A 9, dated the 23rd June 1911, was for Rs. 188, the total amount being Rs. 252-0-6. These decrees were passed in favour of Jagan Nath as lambardar. It is to be observed that the amount of rent due was considerably less than Rs. 400 but the account was subsequently made up by Pandit Beni Madho in the following way. He paid the decretal amount due to Jagan Nath in satisfaction of the three decrees, Exhibits A11, A13 and A9. That amount came with costs to Rs. 278-15-0. He was due to pay Asghar Husain under the terms of the sale-deed on another account Rs. 178. He paid Rs. 178-14-0. He was due to pay a certain Bachehu Sahu under the terms of the sale-deed Rs. 42. He paid him Rs. 61-1-9 on account of the vendee, paying an extra amount of Rs. 19-1-9. He was due to pay to a certain Jagan Nath on account of certain decrees on behalf of the vendors under the terms of the sale-deed Rs. 925. He paid Rs. 989-0-11, making an excess of Rs. 64-0-11, and he repaid the vendors on different dates Rs. 37-4-0. He thus paid under this head of Rs. 400 Rs. 278-15-0 actually for rent and Rs. 121-4-8 partly to the vendors and partly to other persons on their behalf. He paid altogether Rs. 400-3-8.

Asghar Husain instituted a suit on 27th May 1915 in the Court of the Munsif of

BINDU BASHINI DASIA v. KESHAB LAL BASU.

Purwa, Unao District, against Pandit Beni Madho, joining Ganga Bakhsh Singh, Raghunath Singh, Sardar Singh, and Jagan Nath for half of his share of rent of the plot cultivated by Ganga Bakhsh Singh, Raghunath Singh and Sardar Singh at the rental of Rs. 39-12-0 (which he erroneously stated as Rs. 40-3-0) from 1315 to 1318 Fasli, that is to say, for Rs. 160-12-0, and also for the rent of the 2 bighas, 2 biswas at Rs. 12 a year from 1315 to 1318 Fasli, that is to say, Rs. 48.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal decreed it, on the ground that there was a trust between Asghar Husain and the vendee, for half of what he found had been actually paid to Jagan Nath, that is to say, Rs. 85-6-0, and Rs. 48, the rent of the khalsa land, total Rs. 133 6-0.

Pandit Beni Madho has come here in appeal against this decision. Asghar Husain has filed cross-objections. I am unable to accept the learned Subordinate Judge's view that there was any trust. The vendors had agreed that they would write off Rs. 400 as consideration received if the vendee satisfied all the arrears of rent due from them to Jagan Nath and Asghar Husain. They erroneously stated that amount to be Rs. 400. The amount actually due was Rs. 278-15-0. The vendee satisfied that amount. If he had done nothing further the vendors would have had a case against him for the balance of Rs. 400. But it is established that the vendee, finding that the amount due for rent was less than Rs. 400, repaid the balance partly to the vendors themselves and partly to their credit with other persons. The amount of rent due was paid to Jagan Nath and was rightly paid to Jagan Nath as lambardar on behalf both of himself and Asghar Husain. Asghar Husain has endeavoured to improve his case by producing in evidence a notice that was sent on 20th June 1911 by a certain Mr. Mathura Dutt, a Pleader of Naini Tal, asking Asghar Husain what was due to him for rent. It is sufficient to say with regard to this notice that there is a final finding of fact to the effect that Mr. Mathura Dutt had no authority to act on behalf of Pandit Beni Madho, and it is further not established what amount Asghar Husain claimed in reply to this notice. He proves that he sent a reply but there is no proof as to its contents. The point for decision is an extraordinarily simple one. The vendors owed certain rent. They agreed with the vendee that the vendee should pay that rent. They erroneously stated that they owed more rent than the amount which was actually due. But the vendee straightforwardly made up the difference and returned them the balance. Certain rent was due to Asghar Husain. He cannot possibly claim more than was due to him because the vendors had misstated the amount to the vendee. The amount of rent due to Asghar Husain was paid to Jagan Nath who was acting on his behalf as lambardar. His remedy was against Jagan Nath in a Rent Court and he has no remedy of any kind against Pandit Beni Madho.

I, therefore, allow this appeal and dismiss the cross-objections. The suit of Asghar Husain will stand dismissed. Asghar Husain will pay his own costs of the appeal and the cross-objections and those of Pandit Beni Madho in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

A first application for the execution of a decree was not made in accordance with law within three years of the passing of the decree. On a second application for execution made within three years of the first, the Court directed a writ of attachment to issue. The order-sheet showed that the order for attachment was made after service of notice upon the judgment-debtor, but the execution case was dismissed for default. On a third application for execution made within three years of the second, the judgment-debtors appeared and contended that the execution was barred:

Held, that so long as the order for attachment passed on the second application for execution stood, the judgment-debtors could not contend that the execution of the decree was barred unless they established that the order was made without notice to them. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Held, also, that in view of the entry of service of notice in the order-sheet the onus lay upon the judgment-debtors to establish that the notice was not served upon them. [p. 69, col. 1.]

Ex parte entries made in the order-sheet of a Court are not conclusive evidence of their correctness, but there is no presumption that the entries are false. [p. 68, col. 2.]

A party, therefore, who contends that they do not correctly state the events that have taken place must start his case. But the position is different where the entry affects a person who is not a party to the proceedings and he questions its correctness. [p. 68, col. 2; p. 69, col. 1.]

tion for execution of a decree. The decree was made on the 5th November 1906. The first application for execution was made on the 12th October 1909. Notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was directed to issue, as more than a year had elapsed from the date of the decree. There is an entry in the order-sheet of return of service, which states that notice was served duly. But on the 15th December 1909, the application was dismissed for default, as neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor was present. The second application for execution was made on the 15th July 1911. Notice was directed to issue on the judgment-debtors under Order XXI, rule 22. The entry in the order-sheet made on the 7th August 1911 recites that the notice had been duly served. On the 21st August 1911 the Court directed a writ of attachment to issue in respect of the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors. There is an entry in the order-sheet that the writ had been served in due course. This was followed by an order for proclamation of sale. But the proclamation was not published and the case was again dismissed for default on the 16th January 1912. The present application for execution was made on the 24th January 1913. The judgment-debtors entered appearance and contended that the application was barred by limitation. The Courts below have given effect to this objection and have dismissed the application. They have found that the application for execution made on the 12th October 1909 was defective in substance, that time was accordingly given to the decree-holder to amend and re-file the application within five days, that the application was not re-filed within the time allowed, and that, even when re-filed on the 20th November 1909, without leave obtained for extension of time, it was defective in material particulars. On these grounds the Courts have held that the application of the 12th October 1909 was not in accordance with law to the proper Court to take a step-in-aid of execution, that the subsequent application for execution made on the 10th July 1911 was consequently of no avail to the decree-holder, and that the present application was thus clearly barred by limitation. Neither of the Courts below, however, has examined in detail the proceedings on the basis of the second application for execution, and, this omission has, in our opinion, led to an error of law which vitiates their concurrent decision.

An examination of the order-sheet in the proceedings on the basis of the second application discloses that on the 21st August 1911, the Court directed a writ of attachment to issue. This was in substance a determination that the decree was on that date alive and capable of execution. So long as that determination stands, it is impossible for the judgment-debtors to contend that the present application is barred by limitation. [Mungul Pershad Dicht v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1)]. The order for attachment was, if the entries in the order-sheet are reliable, made after service of notice on the judgment-debtors under rule 22 of Order XXI of the Code, and was followed by service of the writ of attachment. Consequently, to entitle the judgment-debtors to escape from the operation of the order of the 21st August 1911, they must establish that the order was made without notice to them. The principle applicable to cases of this character, as deducible from a long line of cases, Mazzeem Hossein v. Sarat Kumari Debi (2), Mon Mohan v. Dwarka Nath (3) and Michai Mandal v. Meseruddin Mollah (4), is that an order made at one stage of execution proceedings cannot be questioned at a later stage, unless the parties sought to be bound by such order had no notice of the proceedings. Cases are by no means rare where orders have been obtained in execution proceedings without service of notice on the judgment-debtor, who has subsequently succeeded, on proof of non-service of notice upon him, in escaping from the effect of such ex parte order. Reference may, in this connection, be made to Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra Bhunjjaya (5), Narayana Pattar v. Gopalakrishna Pattar (6) and Ramasami Naik v. Ramasami

Chetti (7). This point of view does not appear to have been fully realised in either of the Courts below; as a result, the judgment-debtors have been allowed to attack the validity of the proceeding on the first application, regardless of what had taken place on the second application. But before they could reach that stage, they were bound to attack the order of the 21st August 1911 and to establish that it was not operative against them because made without previous service of notice. The judgment-debtors, however, have contended here that the burden lies upon the decree-holder to establish that the order in question is conclusive, because made after service of notice on them. In our opinion, this position is absolutely untenable. There is no presumption that the proceedings in execution in this or in other cases have been vitiated by fraud and that the entries in the order-sheet contain untrue statements of what took place in the Court below. The petition of objection of the judgment-debtors shows that they attacked the proceedings in execution as fraudulently taken. They alleged specifically that by reason of collusion between the officers of the Court and the decree-holders, the notices had been deliberately suppressed and false returns had been submitted to the Court. When fraud of this description is charged, it is incumbent upon the judgment-debtors to establish at least a prima facie case. But reference has been made to the decisions in Mir Tapurah Hossein v. Gopi Narayan (8), Radhay Koer v. Ajodhya Das (9), Ananda Kishore v. Daiji Thakurani (10) and Mahmuddin v. Pirthichand Lall (11) to show that entries in the order-sheet as to the factum of service of notice issued by the Court are not admissible in evidence. There is no room for dispute that such ex parte entries do not constitute conclusive evidence; at the same time, as we have said, there is no presumption that the entries are false. The party who contends that the entries do not correctly state the events that have taken place must start his case. The position is different where, as in the case of Mir Tapurab Hossein v. Gopi Narayn (8), where service of notice of deposit under section 61 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act was raised, or in Radhey Koor v. Ajodhya Das (9), where service of notice of annulment of incumbrance under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was in controversy, the entry affects a person who is not a party to the proceedings. The case of Ananda Kishore v. Daiji Thakurani (10) merely shows that an entry in an order-sheet of a Collector in a proceeding for partition of an estate, that possession has been delivered to one of the share-holders, is no evidence that he is in possession at a subsequent date so as to bar a suit for declaratory relief. There is also a fundamental difference between the case before us and the other cases represented by Mohiuddin v. Pirthichand Lal (11), where no right accrues against a stranger till the statutory notice has been served on him. There the service of notice is the foundation of the jurisdiction of the Court and is essential for the creation of a right in the claimant; in such a case the claimant must establish that all the statutory requirements have been strictly carried out. We feel no doubt whatever that in the case before us the burden lies upon the judgment debtors to establish that the notices were not served upon them. If that allegation is not made out, the order of the Court dated the 21st August 1911 stands unimpeached and is an effective bar against an attack on the earlier proceedings in execution.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of the Courts below discharged. The case will be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that it may, upon evidence to be adduced by both sides, determine whether the order of the 21st August 1911 was or was not made with notice to the judgment-debtors. If it is established that it was made with notice to the judgment-debtors, the objection of limitation must be overruled. If, on the other hand, it is established that the order was made without service of notice upon the judgment-debtors, the question of validity of the earlier proceedings in execution will be taken up for examination. The appellant is entitled to her cost in this Court as also in the Courts below. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs in this Court and at one gold mohur in each of the Court below. The sum payable as costs which will be specified in the decree must be deposited in the Court of first instance within one month after the arrival of the record there. If the sum is not so deposited, the objection of the judgment-debtors will stand overruled and execution will proceed forthwith at the instance of the decree-holder.

DIP NARAIN SINGH v. HARGOBIND SINGH

Babu Basdeo Lal and Mr. Mohamed Siddique, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Bangsopal and Suraj Prasad were the sons of Madho Ram Kayesth. Bangsopal had a daughter Musammatt Jagbans Kuar, who married Gopal Bakhsh. Suraj Prasad had a son named Hargobind Singh. Jagbans Kuar and Gopal Bakhsh had two sons Dip Narain and Mahip Narain. Bangsopal, having no male issue, executed on 17th April 1878 a deed of sale in favour of Gopal Bakhsh, his son-in-law, in respect of a share of four annas in the village of Bishanpur Kharehna in the Gonda District. Although the transfer purported to be by sale, it appears that no consideration passed and that Bangsopal intended to make a gift of this property to his son-in-law for the benefit of his daughter and his daughter's children. When an application was made for mutation of names with respect to this property, Hargobind Singh raised an objection in the Revenue Court to the effect that this transfer was prejudicial to his rights as a reversionary heir to the property of Bangsopal. Bangsopal, Gopal Bakhsh and Suraj Prasad then met and agreed to make an arrangement by which the interests both of the sons of Gopal Bakhsh and Hargobind Singh should be secured, and in consequence of this arrangement four documents were executed and registered on 18th January 1879.

The first of these documents (Exhibit 1) purported to secure to Hargobind Singh a four-annas share in Bodhipur after the death of the Bangsopal and the death of the wife of Bangsopal. The second document (Exhibit 2) was a Will by which Bangsopal, after the exclusion of the four-annas share in Bodhipur and the four-annas share in Bishanpur Kharehna, made provision for his wife and devised portions of his property to Dip Narain, Mahip Narain and Hargobind Singh. The third document (Exhibit 10) was an agreement by Gopal Bakhsh assenting to the above dispositions. The fourth document (Exhibit 12) was executed by Suraj Prasad on behalf of himself and Hargobind Singh who was then a minor. By this he accepted the transfer of the four-annas share in Bishanpur Kharehna to Gopal Bakhsh and withdrew all the objections made to that transfer filed on behalf of Hargobind Singh. He further accepted the arrangement made in Exhibit No. 1 and Exhibit No. 2.

Bangsopal made a subsequent Will on 13th December 1892 by which he left the whole of his property to Dip Narain and Mahip Narain, excluding the share in Bishanpur Kharehna which had already been taken possession of by Gopal Bakhsh. His wife predeceased him and he died himself on 27th July 1904. On his death Hargobind Singh applied for mutation over the property, to which he laid claim on the death of Bangsopal. Dip Narain and Mahip Narain set up a title based on the subsequent Will. They obtained mutation and possession over the whole of the property of Bangsopal on 27th September 1905.

Hargobind Singh instituted the present suit on 23rd November 1912 for possession of the four-annas share in village Bodhipur and mesne profits. He based his claim on the provisions of Exhibit No. 1. Dip Narain and Mahip Narain denied the validity of this document. They set up that it was invalid per se, and that, if it had any validity, it was valid only as a revocable testamentary disposition, and, as such, had been revoked and cancelled by the Will of 13th December 1892. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit decided against them. He found that the document Exhibit No. 1 gave title to the plaintiff to succeed to the property, and that the suit had been brought within limitation, and he gave a decree for possession and mesne profits. Against this decree the present appeal is preferred.

The decision of this appeal turns on the interpretation of Exhibit No. 1 and a consideration of its validity. This document was registered as a non-testamentary document relating to immoveable property. Bangsopal states therein: "I am giving" the four-annas share in Bodhipur to Hargobind Singh. He goes on to say that as he is giving the share to Hargobind Singh he agrees that he will not transfer the share by gift, sale, or mortgage, or encumber it or hypothecate it. But he continues that, during his lifetime and the lifetime of his wife, the share shall be enjoyed by himself during his lifetime and by his wife after his death. The words here are slightly obscure as a verb has apparently been left out. He continues that Hargobind Singh shall be owner and possessor of the share after his death and after the death of his wife. The meaning presents no difficulties. The deed transfers a vested interest by gift. It is a registered deed and it is executed on account of natural love and affection. It is not a devise and is not revocable. It is true that in Exhibit No. 2 Bansgopal has stated that if he contracts a second marriage and a son is born to him he shall have the power to revoke Exhibit No. 1. But the fact that he made this statement does not affect the case. It is admitted that the contingency therein contemplated did not arise, and that he died without having re-married or having a son born to him. It is further to be noticed that in Exhibit No. 2, which is clearly a Will and as such revocable, Bansgopal has asserted that his dispositions made therein are irrevocable. This circumstance did not make them irrevocable and the Will was as a matter of fact revoked. It is unnecessary in these circumstances to go into the other points raised in connection with the validity of this instrument, although it may be noticed that, inasmuch as Dip Narain and Mahip Narain benefited by the execution of Exhibit No. 2 and Exhibit No. 12 and inasmuch as Hargobind Singh withdrew all his objections to the transfer of the four-annas share in Bishanpur Kharebna because Exhibit No. 1 was executed in his favour, they would in any circumstances be estopped from questioning the validity of Exhibit No. 1. That point is, however, unimportant for the title on Exhibit No. 1 cannot be challenged legally. We do not consider that the decree for mesne profits is open to objection.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

CREDITOR—RESPONDENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 8 (2), 12 (1) (a), 13, 25, 26, 27, 86—“Person aggrieved by the decision”, meaning of—Benamdar of creditor, whether can prove debt in insolvency—Petitioning creditor’s claim, whether can be questioned in insolvency—Admission by attorney, effect of.

It is open to an insolvent to question the right of a person, on whose petition as a creditor the adjudication in insolvency has been made, to claim in the insolvency as a creditor, and the Official Assignee, after the insolvency, is competent to examine the claim of the petitioning creditor and if he finds that in fact there is no debt due to the petitioning creditor, he must strike out his name from the list of creditors. [p. 72, col. 1; p. 73, col. 2.]

A benamdar for the real creditor is not competent to rank as a creditor in insolvency proceedings, but the person who really advanced the money should come forward and prove his claim. [p. 73, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—Any person who makes an application to a Court for a decision or any person who is brought before the Court to submit to a decision is, if the decision goes against him, thereby a “person aggrieved by that decision” within the meaning of that expression in section 86 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The term “creditor” in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act does not include a benamdar of the creditor. [p. 73, col. 2.]

An admission of an attorney, until satisfactorily explained away, is cogent evidence against his client. [p. 74, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, in Insolvency Jurisdiction.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the adjudication in insolvency was made on the KETOKEY CHURAN v. SARAT KUMARI DABBE.

2nd of February 1912, upon the petition of Sarat Kumari Dabee. An application for the cancellation of the adjudication was made in March 1912, based, as I understand, on the ground that there was no debt due to Sarat Kumari Dabee, and this application for the cancellation of the adjudication was dismissed, and, therefore, the adjudication in insolvency stood. And, the first point taken by the learned Counsel appearing for Sarat Kumari Dabee was that inasmuch as the adjudication had been made upon her petition, it was not now open to the insolvents to question her right to claim in the insolvency as a creditor. I do not think that is a sound point, for the reason that if we look at the sections of the Second Schedule to the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, sections 25, 26 and 27, it is clear, to my mind, that after the adjudication of insolvency the Official Assignee is to examine every proof and the grounds of the debt and in writing to admit or reject it in whole or in part, or require further evidence in support of it; and, if he rejects a proof, he shall state in writing to the creditor the grounds of the rejection. In my opinion, it must be open to the Official Assignee after the insolvency to examine the claim of the petitioning creditor and if he finds that in fact there is no debt due to the petitioning creditor, he surely must say so and strike out his or her name from the list of creditors. For this reason I do not think that the first point taken by learned Counsel is a good one.

The second point which the learned Counsel for Sarat Kumari Dabee argued was that the learned Judge's judgment ought to be supported on the merits of the case. Now, it appears that the claim of the alleged creditor in the first instance was stated to be Rs. 8,000 and then subsequently it was increased to Rs. 15,641, and that appears to be the balance of an account which appears in the hatchitta which is set out in the paper-book No. 2, and we have been informed that there are entries in the firm's books, which correspond with the entries in the hatchitta. Now, the first entry in the account, page 1, is a sum of Rs. 2,487-8-6, which on the face of it appears to be due by the firm to Sarat Kumari Dabee. It is, however, admitted by the learned Counsel who appears for her that that money was advanced by her husband Surendra Nath Bannerjee, and was not her money at all. The second item which appears in that account is a sum of Rs. 14,498-13-6: that appears to have been originally a debt due from the firm to Nogendra Nath Bannerjee, brother-in-law of the lady. That item was transferred from the account of Nogendra Nath Bannerjee in January 1909 to the account of the lady, and it is not suggested that any consideration passed for that transaction, and it is now admitted that that really was money advanced by Nogendra Nath, and the lady in respect of that item was not in fact a creditor of the firm. Now, with regard to the rest of the items, when we once get it admitted that of these two items, the first represents a debt due to her husband and the second, a debt due to her brother-in-law, it makes the Court particularly careful to require proof of the remainder of the items. The lady has not been called as a witness. She has not come forward to say that she advanced those moneys. Her husband has not been called as a witness to say that the money was his wife's, and, the result is that I am led to think that this account is not an account of the lady at all; it is partly an account of her husband and partly an account of her brother-in-law. In addition to the reasons which have been given by the Official Assignee in the judgment, I think the statement of these facts is sufficient for the judgment at which I have arrived, and this is that this lady is not a creditor of the firm at all, and that her name ought to be struck out of the list of creditors. This, as I understand, does not prevent the persons who have really advanced the moneys to the firm from coming forward and substantiating their claims against the firm. It is right that the persons who really advanced the moneys should come forward and prove their claims to the Court. As between them and the firm and other creditors in the case different questions may arise than what would arise between the lady and the firm and other creditors of the firm.

There is only one other point which has been urged by the learned Counsel and that is that inasmuch as the lady, if she was in the position of a benamdar, could sue for the money, she is entitled to claim as a creditor in the insolvency.

Speaking for myself, I do not think that is so; she is not in the position of a trustee or executor, to which reference was made by learned Counsel, and in the absence of evidence as to her real position it must be assumed that the lady was simply a conduit pipe for the money being advanced, and in all probability she knew nothing of the money being advanced, and her name was taken merely as a blind for the real transaction that had taken place, and I do not think that this last contention is a good one.

For these reasons I think this appeal should be allowed and the order of the Official Assignee should be restored with costs both of this Court and the Court below, and the name of Sarat Kumari Dabee should be removed from the list of creditors.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that the order of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri cannot be supported. The appeal has been preferred by three persons who were adjudicated insolvents on the 2nd February 1912 at the instance of the respondent. An endeavour was made to have the adjudication annulled, but as the conditions imposed by the Court were not fulfilled, the attempt proved infructuous. The appeal to Chaudhuri, J., was preferred under section 86 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act against a decision by the Official Assignee that the respondent is not a creditor of the insolvents as she asserts, but a benamdar for her husband's brother who is alleged to have been a partner of the insolvents. The present appeal has been preferred under section 8, clause (2), from the order of Chaudhuri, J., who reversed the decision of the Official Assignee.

The preliminary objection taken on behalf of the respondent to the competency of this appeal has been overruled on the principle that any person who makes an application to a Court for a decision or any person who is brought before the Court to submit to a decision, is, if the decision goes against him, thereby a "a person aggrieved by that decision" within the meaning of that expression in section 86 [Official Receiver, Ex parte, Reed, Brown & Co., In re (1) and Lamb, In re, Board of Trade, In re (2)].

As regards the merits the decision of Chaudhuri, J., has been sought to be supported on three grounds:—First, that it is not now open to the appellants to assert that the respondent is not their creditor, inasmuch as an order for adjudication has already been made at her instance on the basis that she was a creditor; secondly, that even if it be found, as was held by the Official Assignee, that she was not a real creditor but a benamdar of her husband's brother, who at one time was a partner of the firm of the insolvents, she was entitled to rank as a creditor in these proceedings; and thirdly, that the evidence establishes that she was not a benamdar of her husband's brother as alleged by the insolvents.

As regards the first point, I am of opinion that the provisions of the Insolvency Act taken together indicate with reasonable certainty that it cannot possibly be supported. If the contention of the respondent were to prevail, the result would follow that when an adjudication order has been made at the instance of a person claiming to be a creditor whose debt exceeded the statutory amount, it would not be open to the Official Assignee, on the investigation to be held thereafter, to find that the amount due to the petitioning creditor was smaller than that mentioned in section 12 (1) (a). But sections 12 and 13, read with the provisions contained in the Second Schedule for investigation and proof of the claim of a creditor, make it obvious that this was not intended by the Legislature. I hold, accordingly, that the Official Assignee was competent to come to the conclusion he did, namely, that nothing was due to the respondent as a creditor of the insolvents.

As regards the second point, I am of opinion that the term "creditor" in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act does not include a benamdar of the creditor. The respondent has argued that as it has been ruled by the Judicial Committee [Gopeekrist Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (3)] that a benamdar for the real creditor can maintain a suit for recovery of the money, he is equally competent to pose as a creditor in insolvency proceedings. I am clearly of opinion that we should not accept this contention. The ordinary meaning of the term "creditor" is that he is a person to whom a debt is payable. No doubt, it is open to a benamdar to maintain a suit on a money-bond in his own name, although the money may have been advanced really by some one else and by the application of the doctrine of estoppel, the act of the benamdar, when a suit is so instituted, may conclude the real creditor; but this does not justify the contention that the term "creditor," as used in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, includes the benamdar of a creditor. A benamdar is merely a name-lender, a mask for the real owner, and is, undoubtedly, not in the position of a trustee; the view cannot consequently be maintained that, although the money is established to be not really payable to the person who pretends to be a creditor of the insolvent, yet such person should be allowed to rank as a creditor in insolvency proceedings, merely because the transaction took place in his name.

As regards the third point, there is no room for reasonable doubt that the respondent is not a creditor of the insolvents. Our attention has been drawn to the circumstance that an account was opened in the name of the respondent as early as the 18th March 1906, and that, so far as the evidence goes, a sum of Rs. 2,487-8-6 was advanced by her to the partnership concern. It has not been maintained, however, that this was her own money, for it has been conceded on her behalf that the money really belonged to her husband, Surendra Nath Bannerjee.

Another sum of Rs. 14,233-13-6, it is plain from the accounts placed before us, originally constituted a debt payable by the partnership concern to Nogendra Nath Bannerjee. On the 10th January 1909, this sum was transferred to the account of the respondent. There is no reasonable doubt that this was a mere paper transfer and in no sense a real transaction; indeed, the attorney for the respondent admitted before the Official Assignee that no consideration passed as between Nogendra Nath Bannerjee and his sister-in-law, the present respondent, Mr. Bose fully appreciated the effect of such admission, which, until satisfactorily explained away, furnished cogent evidence against the respondent [Slatterie v. Pooley (4) and Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpal Singh (5)]; he was consequently constrained to present her case before us on the basis that this transfer was a benami transaction, and that in respect of this sum, which ultimately found its way into the account of the respondent, she was a benamdar for her brother-in-law. He argued, however, that in the absence of evidence to show the source of the subsequent advances to the partnership firm, the inference should be drawn that they were the moneys of the respondent in the sense that they were the moneys of her husband. In my opinion this inference cannot legitimately be drawn in favour of the respondent. The essence of the matter is that her account opens with two sums, Rs. 2,487-8-6 and Rs. 14,233-13-6 respectively; in respect of one of these sums, the lady was a benamdar of her husband, while in respect of the other, she was a benamdar of her brother-in-law. True it is that there is no evidence of the source of the subsequent advances, but in the absence of tangible proof, we cannot assume that those sums belonged rather to her husband than to her brother-in-law. There is a further significant admission by Nogendra Nath Bannerjee that he and his brother Surendra Nath Bannerjee are joint, and this account may lend some support to a possible theory that both the brothers used the name of the respondent as their benamdar. But whatever the real state of affairs may be, one cardinal fact is established beyond controversy, namely, that the respondent is not a creditor of the insolvents. How much of the sum which stands in her name is her husband's money and how much thereof is her brother-in-law's money, we do not know; but if she be not a creditor of the insolvents, as I hold she is not, the conclusion is irresistible that her name must be removed from the category of the creditors of the insolvents in these proceedings. This, it may be added, will not debar either Nogendra or Surendra from taking such steps as they may be advised to adopt for the establishment of their claims, if any, as against the insolvents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's claim was treated by the Judge of the Small Cause Court of Rangoon as two-fold, first, for the return of property given her by the defendant and then resumed by her, and secondly, as administratrix of her son's estate for the possession of moveable property belonging to the estate in the hands of the defendant. The first part of the claim he held not proved on the evidence, and the second as not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. The latter view is contested by the plaintiff in this Court and defendant's Counsel does not uphold it. There is authority to the contrary, Kapalee Bewa v. Keshram Kooch (1) and Khursedji Rustomji Colah v. Pestonji Cowasji Bucha (2), and I am of opinion that the claim was

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 22, 46
—Appeal—Claim against insolvent's estate—Creditors, rights and duties of—Party, who can be—'Person aggrieved', meaning of—Estate, representation of—Receiver, right of—Receiver not appointed—Procedure, proper.

One creditor out of the general body of creditors has no locus standi in an application in the Insolvency Court made, against the estate of the insolvent represented by the Receiver, by a person claiming adversely to the insolvent's estate and has no right of appeal against a decision in such an application. [p. 76, col. 2.]

Unless the Receiver has refused to move and so given a decision by which each of the general body of creditors has been aggrieved, a creditor cannot apply to the Insolvency Court for the attachment of any property as being the property of the insolvent. The proper course is to apply to the Receiver to set him in motion and if the Receiver declines to move, the creditor can apply to the Court under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act against the act or decision of the Receiver. [p. 76, col. 2; p. 77, col. 1.]

The Receiver ought to be made a party to any proceedings under section 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and all questions which arise between the insolvent and a person who is either a creditor or a stranger to the insolvency must be decided between such person and the Receiver as representing the estate. [p. 77, col. 1.]

Creditors have a right to prove for their own claims, a right to supply the Receiver with information relating to claims which the insolvent's estate may have against other persons, and a right to bring the Receiver's conduct and decisions before the Court if he declines to act or neglects his duties; but they have no legal interest in the insolvent's estate and no title to represent it. The proper course, if a creditor is desirous of starting the Receiver and securing a decision in his favour, is to attend the Court to watch the proceedings or to obtain the permission of the Court to intervene as an amicus curiæ. [p. 77, cols. 1 & 2.]

No one of the creditors can intervene except through the Receiver. If he is not a proper party to an application, he clearly has no right of appeal except in the event of an order for costs being made against him which ought not to have been made. He is not a 'person aggrieved' within the meaning of section 46 of the Act. [p. 77, col. 2.]

The words 'a person aggrieved' do not mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made.

He must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something. [p. 77, col. 2.]

Where no Receiver has been appointed and the Judge is acting as Receiver under the provisions of the Act, the better course in such a case, when a dispute arises, is for the Judge to make an order appointing a particular creditor to represent the interests of the general body of creditors. First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 1st December 1915.

Mr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—The question raised by this appeal is, whether one creditor out of the general body of creditors has a locus standi in an application in the Insolvency Court made, against the estate of the insolvent represented by the Receiver, by a person claiming adversely to the insolvent's estate. In our opinion he has no locus standi and no right of appeal to this Court against a decision in such an application.

The question is of some practical importance and inasmuch as there is no authority in this Court, it seems desirable to set out the grounds of our decision at some length. The appellant before us Jhabba Lal was petitioning creditor in an insolvency petition against Jetha Mal, the result of which petition was that Jetha Mal was adjudicated insolvent and the Court Nazir was appointed Receiver.

About the 19th of July 1915, the appellant applied to the Insolvency Court for the attachment of the property now in dispute as being the property of the insolvent. Whether he had any right to do so unless the Receiver had declined to interfere is immaterial, but the Insolvency Court made an order on the 23rd of August 1915 that the Receiver should attach the property, and on the 6th and 7th of September following it was duly attached. We think, however, that unless the Receiver has refused to move and so given a decision by which each of the general body of creditors has been aggrieved, there is no provision in the Act which enables a creditor to make such an application to the Insolvency Court, and that his proper course is to apply to the Receiver to set him in motion. If the Receiver declines to move, then the creditor can apply to the Court under section 22 against the act or decision of the Receiver. On the 11th of September 1915 an application was made out of which the present appeal arises. It was made by two persons, Shib Charan Dass and Har Charan Dass, a minor by his next friend, sons of the insolvent. It was called an objection and was in form an objection to the attachment and was a claim by these two persons, who were not creditors and who were, therefore, strangers to the insolvency, that the property was theirs and not the property of the insolvent. That was clearly an application allowed by section 22. By the application the Receiver was made a party to it. That was right and indeed necessary. The Court ought to insist upon the Receiver being made a party to any proceedings under section 22.

The petitioning creditor, the present appellant, was also made a party. That was clearly wrong. From the moment of attachment and the appointment of a Receiver the property of the insolvent rests in the Receiver. All questions which would otherwise arise between the insolvent and a person who is either a creditor or a stranger to the insolvency, must be decided between such person and the Receiver as representing the estate.

Creditors have a right to prove, for their own claims, a right to supply the Receiver with information relating to claims which the insolvent's estate may have against other persons; and they have a right to bring the Receiver's conduct and decisions before the Court if he declines to act or neglects his duties, but they have no legal interest in the insolvent's estate and no title to represent it. If they want the Receiver to litigate the question, they can supply him with funds or indemnify him against the costs in the event of failure, if he is unable to proceed for want of funds, but it would be contrary to the whole scheme of the Insolvency Act if any one out of a large number of creditors was at liberty to start all kinds of questions and set the law in motion independently of the Receiver. The proper course, if a creditor is desirous of starting the Receiver and securing a decision in his favour, is to attend the Court to watch the proceedings or obtain the permission of the Court to intervene as an amicus curiæ.

In this case we note that the present appellant was not only made a party, but the applicant or objector, as he called himself, asked for costs against him. His attendance, therefore, to resist any order for costs being made against him, was necessary and proper and the Court ought to have dealt with him on that footing and dismissed him from the application giving him his costs. The Court passed a decree partly in favour of the two applicants. From that decision the present appeal is brought not by the Receiver but by the petitioning creditor. We are of opinion that such a person has no right of appeal at all. If he was not a proper party to the application, he clearly could not appeal except, of course, in the event of an order for costs being made against him which ought not to have been made. He is not a "person aggrieved" under section 46. He has no interest of his own in the property in dispute which, if it belonged to the insolvent, is vested in the Receiver. This question is well settled by the decisions in England. In Sidebotham, Ex parte Sidebrtham, In re (1) Lord Justice James giving judgment in the Court of Appeal in a case which is precisely in point laid down the law as follows: "It is said that any person aggrieved by any order of the Court is entitled to appeal. But the words 'person aggrieved' do not really mean a man who is disappointed of a benefit which he might have received if some other order had been made. A 'person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something". This observation applies precisely to the position of the present appellant. Again, "if there has been any misfeasance on the part of the trustee, the bankrupt or any creditor has a right under section 20 to apply to the Court".

The person who made such an application (1) (1830) 14 Ch. D. 458; 49 L. J. Bk. 41; 42 L. T. 783; 28 W. R. 715.

would be in the position of a litigant and would have a right of appeal from any order which the Court might make. That applies precisely to the position of a creditor who under section 22 complains against an act of the Receiver. Reliance was sought to be placed upon a decision of my brother Piggott and myself in Balli v. Nand Lal (2). In that case leave was necessary and had not been obtained. We looked into the merits and declined to grant leave. The question now before us did not arise. Furthermore in that case no Receiver had been appointed. It is perhaps as well to point out that where no Receiver has been appointed and the Judge is acting as Receiver under the provisions of the Act, the better course in such a case where a dispute arises is for the Judge to make an order appointing a particular creditor to represent the interests of the general body of creditors. There is nothing in the Act providing for such a case, but it is obvious that the general body of creditors have to be represented and it is difficult to say how the Judge, who has to determine the dispute, can do it himself.

In Ketokey Churan Banerjee v. Sreemutty Sarat Kumari Dabee (3) there is a dictum of Mookerjee, J., apparently in favour of the appellant. We say apparently, because if the learned Judge meant to refer to a person who had already made a proper application or had been properly brought before the Court, we agree with him and the English authorities cited by him bear out that proposition but they have no bearing upon the case before us. The appeal in that case was an appeal against the decision of the Official Assignee or Receiver.

An attempt was made before us to justify the position of the appellant here as being that of "a person aggrieved by any act or decision of the Receiver". He clearly was nothing of the kind. The attachment had been ordered by the Court and the Receiver had carried out the order. The applicants alleged themselves to be aggrieved by that and the present appellant supported the act of the Receiver.

If the Receiver fails to appeal when he ought, a creditor may clearly apply to the Court under section 22, but the appeal if brought by the order of the Court must be an appeal by the Receiver.

There are strong reasons upon grounds of public policy for maintaining this view, even if the Act were not clear upon the point. To hold otherwise would enable any creditor to harass and delay the winding-up by frivolous and irresponsible appeals, and would enable the insolvent by scheduling a fictitious creditor with a trivial claim, which had no real existence, to provide himself with a tame litigant who could raise questions and get them decided adversely to the general body of creditors. Decisions in such matters must be passed against somebody representing the estate and must be such as will bind the estate in law.

Fortunately no harm can be done by dismissing this appeal upon this purely technical but important question. The applicants have appealed in another appeal against the order on the merits which was passed in their favour. That appeal has been returned to the Insolvency Court for re-hearing and we have pointed out to the Insolvency Court that the Receiver is a necessary party to the litigation, which at the re-hearing can be determined on the merits in favour of either one party or the other.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 70, O. XXI, rr. 62, 63—Rules framed under s. 70, r. 3—Execution—Objections to sale of property—Court, power of, to amend application—Date of application—Construction of document—Decree, interpretation of—Res judicata—Burden of proof—Costs—Mortgagor and mortgagee.

Objections were taken to the sale of proprietary rights in certain plots in execution of a decree, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no proprietary title to the plots but simply a right to collect and appropriate their revenue. The Court took action under rule 3 framed by the U. P. Government under section 70, Civil Procedure Code, and notified in

—1—38, dated 7th October 1911, and referred to in paragraph 181 of the Oudh Civil Digest, Volume I. It considered the objections, without waiting for the result of a petition taking certain objections to the sale that appeared to have in the meantime been sent by one of the objectors to the Local Government, and found that the objections were sound and amended the decree-holder's application so as to confine it to the sale of the right to receive revenue and to omit all reference to full proprietary title:

Held, (1) that the Court was right in not waiting for the result of the petition sent to the Local Government; [p. 81, col. 2.]

(2) that the Court had authority to amend the application under the provisions of the above-mentioned rule 3; [p. 81, col. 2.]

(3) that the date of the application must be taken to be the one on which it had been originally presented to the Court, and not the one on which the Court subsequently amended it, inasmuch as there was no new application, but simply an application made for the whole was reduced to an application for a part. [p. 82, col. 2.]

A mortgagee got a decree on the basis of a mortgage-deed which described the mortgaged property as a "rent-free jagir" in a village. It appeared that the mortgagor held a settlement decree in his favour, which did not clearly describe his rights in the village. But the entries in the revenue papers showed that these rights were confined to the assignment of land revenue, so that he obtained no land in the village except the right to collect a portion of the land revenue from the zamindars:

Held, that the mortgagor must be taken to have mortgaged all the rights that he possessed under the settlement decree, and that, therefore, the right to receive land revenue, although not mentioned in the deed as having been mortgaged, was affected by the decree obtained by the mortgagee. [p. 81, col. 2; p. 82, col. 1.]

The subsequent mortgagees got a decree for sale of the mortgaged property against the mortgagor alone. Later on the prior mortgagee obtained a similar decree against both the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee. In execution of the former decree the prior mortgagee applied under section 282, Civil Procedure Code, (1882), [= Order XXI, rule 62, Civil Procedure Code (1908)] for a declaration of his mortgage encumbrance. The Court dismissed the application, holding that the prior mortgage and the decree obtained on its basis did not relate to the same property as was covered by the subsequent mortgage:

Held, that the above finding that the prior and the subsequent mortgages did not include one and the same property, did not operate as res judicata between the prior and the subsequent mortgagees, inasmuch as the point was not one that could be decided under the provisions of section 282, Civil Procedure Code (1882) [= Order XXI, rule 62, Civil Procedure Code (1908)]; and that, therefore, the prior mortgagee was under no disability under the provisions of section 283, Civil Procedure Code (1882), [= Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, (1908)]. [p. 82, col. 1.]

The burden of proving that a purchase of the subsequent mortgagee's rights under a decree obtained by him against the mortgagor alone, was made prior to a later decree obtained by the prior mortgagee against both the mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagees, lies on the purchaser asserting that he is not bound by the latter decree. [p. 82, col. 1.]

An objector who impugns the decree-holder's title to the whole property cannot, in case his objections are disallowed, avoid payment of full costs incurred by the decree-holder, on the ground that he claimed only half the property. [p. 83, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 7th September 1914.

Pandits Manmohan Nath Chak and Jagmohan Nath Chak, for the Appellant.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Jiban Krishna Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 16th February 1864 a. decree was passed by the Settlement Officer of Lucknow with reference to the village of Gaurbhit in the Lucknow District. The Settlement Officer decided that two persons Pitam Singh and Nihal Chand were proprietors of the village and that they held their proprietary title subject to the rights of a certain Anis-ud-daula, jagirdar, over an area of 216 bighas odd out of the whole village area. The decision ends with the words, "I therefore decree proprietary title in Gaurbhit to Pitam Singh Mulhans and Nihal Chand Kaet, the lambardars of 1858 A. D., subject to the lien of overproprietary title of Anis-ud-daula jagirdar as by the terms of the sanad for the portion measured to her (sic) as jagir." The settlement for decree does not clearly describe the rights of Anis-ud-daula, but the revenue papers on the record of this case show that these rights were confined to the assignment of land-revenue with regard to this particular area. Anis-ud-daula obtained no land in the village Gaurbhit. He obtained the right to collect a portion of the land revenue from the zamindars. He died and was succeeded by his son Mirza Muhammad Husain who resided in Calcutta. On the 7th July 1896 Muhammad Husain executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Amar Chand Pal. This mortgage secured amongst other properties the property in Gaurbhit, the words of the mortgage being, "and also all that rent-free jagir in Lucknow, tahsil Lucknow, thana Lucknow, registration District Lucknow, containing villages Gaurbhit....."

We interpret this portion of the deed to mean that Muhammad Husain mortgaged thereby all the rights that he possessed under the Settlement Court decree of 16th February 1864. On the 20th March 1897, Muhammad Husain executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam, by which he secured amongst other property "wa nankar jagir mauza Gaurbhit." We interpret this portion of the deed to mean that he again mortgaged the whole of the rights that he possessed in the village of Gaurbhit under the Settlement Court decree dated 16th February 1864. On the 23rd August 1899, Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam brought a suit on the foot of the deed of mortgage dated 30th March 1897 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow. They first joined Amar Chand Pal as a party to the suit, but subsequently withdrew his name from the array of parties on the ground that he had given up all his rights under the deed of the 7th July 1896 and obtained a simple money-decree in lieu thereof. Amar Chand Pal was not a party to the suit. There is no evidence on the record to show whether he did or did not bring a suit for a simple money-decree on the cause of action created by the mortgage of 7th July 1896. Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam obtained a decree on the foot of the mortgage of 30th March 1897 in this suit on the 19th of February 1900. On the 22nd April 1901 Amar Chand Pal brought a suit on the foot of the deed of mortgage dated 7th July 1896 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Alipur. That mortgage affected property in the city of Calcutta in addition to property in Oudh. In this suit he joined as defendants Muhammad Husain, Musammât Khurshed Laka Begam and Musammât Husaini Begam and obtained a decree on the 25th February 1902.

We may here dispose of one point raised in the appeal as to whether the present appellant's predecessor-in-interest was or was not a party to this suit.

Khurshed Laka Begam sold her rights under the decree of 19th February 1900 to Muhammad Bahadur, who is now represented by Syed Sarfaraz Husain the appellant. But there is nothing to show that Khurshed Laka Begam transferred her rights to Muhammad Bahadur before the 25th of February 1902. The assignment by Khurshed Laka Begam to Muhammad Bahadur is first mentioned in an application dated May 1902 in the file of the execution of the decree of the 19th February 1900. When execution was taken out of the decree of 19th February 1900, Amar Chand Pal applied to have notice of his rights under the mortgage of 7th July 1896 declared. Objection was taken and the following decision was arrived at on the 5th March 1903:—

"Amar Chand Pal vs. { Husaini Begam and Khurshed Laka Begam.
"Application under section 282,
"Civil Procedure Code.

"Musammât Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam hold a decree here on Muhammad Husain; in execution thereof the assignee of Musammât Khurshed Laka Begam has put to sale the cash nankar or the annuities which the judgment-debtor receives from certain persons. The objector holds a mortgage decree dated 25th February 1902 against the same judgment-debtor and Musammât Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam, and applies here for the declaration of his mortgage encumbrance. Mirza Muhammad Bahadur assignee of Musammât Khurshed Laka Begam objects.

"Issues—

"1. Has the applicant mortgage encumbrance on the property which has been put to sale here (sic) ?

SARFARAZ HUSAIN V. AMAR CHAND PAL.

"2. Is Mirza Muhammad Bahadur bound by the decree of 25th February 1902 obtained against Khurshed Laka Begam ?

"The objector's mortgage-deed and his decree of 25th February 1902 show that the rent-free jagir comprising Gaurbhit and other villages is mortgaged to him, not the nankar or cash allowance which the judgment-debtor receives from certain persons and which have been put to sale here (Exhibits Nos. 1 and 3 of the objector). Therefore I find Issue No. 1 in the negative. Issue No. 2 requires no finding. The objector's application is dismissed with costs.

"(Sd.) SURAJ NARAIN BAHADUR, "SUBORDINATE JUDGE.
"5th March 1906."

According to our finding to the effect that exactly the same property was mortgaged in the mortgages of 7th July 1896 and 30th March 1897 this decision is erroneous. We shall subsequently consider whether it operates to make the point res judicata. If it does so operate, it will be immaterial whether it is erroneous or not. On the 28th June 1904, in execution of the decree of 19th February 1900, Muhammad Bahadur and Husaini Begam bought Muhammad Husain's interest. The sale was confirmed on 21st September 1904 and a certificate was issued on 27th January 1905.

Amar Chand Pal applied on 21st July 1913 for the sale of certain specified plots of an aggregate area of 281 bighas odd in Gaurbhit and other property not now in dispute in execution of the decree of 25th February 1902. The Civil Court, by a rubkar dated 21st October 1913, directed the Deputy Commissioner to sell the property and the Deputy Commissioner issued a notice for the sale of the plots in question. The zamindars apparently objected in the Civil Court that property was being brought to sale which did not belong to the judgment-debtor, as he possessed an assignment of revenue and no proprietary title. Under the rules made by a Notification No. ¹⁸⁸⁷₁₋₂₃₈, dated 7th October 1911, under section 70 of Act V of 1908, to which reference is made in paragraph 181 of the Oudh Civil Digest, Volume I, the Subordinate Judge considered this objection under the authority of the third rule. The present appellant appears to have sent a petition to the Lieutenant-Governor through the Deputy Commissioner taking certain objections to the sale. We are not concerned with that petition. The Subordinate Judge with the consent of all parties considered the objections, and by a Court order amended the application so as to confine it to the sale of the right to receive revenue and to omit all reference to full proprietary title. It was then for the Deputy Commissioner to sell the right to receive the revenue, but objections were taken to the sale of that right. These objections were determined by Pandit Suraj Narain Bahadur, Subordinate Judge, on the 7th September 1914. He dismissed them and directed the sale to proceed. The present appeal is preferred against the dismissal of those objections.

We proceed to take up the grounds of appeal in order. The first ground of appeal questions the right of the Subordinate Judge to take up the matter in view of the petition to the Lieutenant-Governor. It is suggested that as a petition had been filed to the Lieutenant-Governor it was only open to the Subordinate Judge to stop the sale. This plea is untenable. The matter was entirely for the Subordinate Judge to settle, and the circumstance that a petition had been sent to the Lieutenant-Governor could have no effect of any kind.

The second point taken is that, inasmuch as the application for execution was for the sale of certain plots of land, it was not open to the Subordinate Judge to amend the application so as to make it refer to the sale of the right to receive the revenue. As has already been noted, the learned Subordinate Judge had authority to amend the application under the provisions of the third rule of the rules contained in the Government Notification of 1911.

The third ground is to the effect that the right to receive Government revenue was not mortgaged by the mortgage of 17th July 1893, and that that right is not affected by the decree of the 25th of February 1902. We have already decided that the rights possessed by Muhammad Husain in Gaurbhit under the settlement decree of 16th February 1864 were mortgaged by the mortgage of 7th July 1896 and were covered by the decree of 25th February 1902.

The fourth ground raises the plea that the decision of the Subordinate Judge of 5th March 1903 prevents Amar Chand Pal now suggesting that the right to receive land revenue can be sold in execution of his decree, as that point was decided against him in the decision of 1903 and cannot be re-opened as the matter is res judicata between parties. It will be noted that the application in question was, as stated in the decision, an application under section 282 of Act XIV of 1882, the Code of Civil Procedure, which was then in force. The procedure under that section refers to the sale of property attached and contemplates a claim made by a person holding a mortgage or having a lien upon attached property to set aside the attachment or to have the mortgage or lien declared with respect to it. That section does not provide for the determination of the point as to whether property ordered to be sold in execution of a mortgage decree is subject to a decree obtained on a prior mortgage. It would not have been possible under that section to determine whether the right of the decree-holders under the decree of the 19th February 1900 was merely a right of puisne mortgagees to redeem a prior mortgage or something greater. Such an order could not operate to set aside the decree of the 25th February 1902 or to deprive Amar Chand Pal of his lien. Amar Chand Pal was not a party to the proceedings that terminated in the decree of 19th February 1900. But Khurshed Laka Begam and Husaini Begam were parties to the proceedings that terminated in the decree of 25th February 1902. This order does not operate to make the point res judicata.

The fifth point taken is that the sale to Muhammad Bahadur and Husaini Begam of Muhammad Husain's interest, which took place on the 28th June 1904, prevents the present objection being filed. This point was not argued and we decide against the plea. We do not see how the fact that this sale took place can affect the rights of Amar Chand Pal.

The sixth point proceeds on the assumption that Muhammad Bahadur was not a party to the decree of 25th February 1902. As we have already found, Khurshed Laka Begam was a party to that decree and there is nothing to show that Khurshed Laka Begam had assigned her rights under the decree of 19th February 1900 to Muhammad Bahadur until a date subsequent to 25th February 1902. It was for the appellant to prove the date of the assignment, and he has not proved that it was prior to the 25th of February 1902. We, therefore, decide this point against the appellant.

The seventh point is that the application of Amar Chand Pal is barred by limitation. It is urged that it is barred by limitation under the provisions of section 283 of Act XIV of 1882, because Amar Chand Pal did not bring a suit within one year of the 5th March 1903. But we have already decided that the decision does not bind Amar Chand Pal. The point in dispute was not a point that could be decided under the provisions of section 282. Thus Amar Chand Pal was under no disability under the provisions of section 283. There is, however, another point raised. The decree was dated the 25th February 1902, and this application for execution was made on the 16th July 1913. The application was within limitation. But the learned Counsel for the appellant argues that that application is not now being executed but that another application, which he urges was dated the 27th August 1914, is the application under execution. We find, however, that the application is one and the same. On the 16th July 1913 Amar Chand Pal made an application for the sale of full proprietary rights of revenue-free land. On the 27th August 1914 the Subordinate Judge, under the authority which he possessed, reduced the sale to a sale of a portion of the rights in the land. He did not alter the application of the 16th July 1913 to make it refer to a different subject-matter but he abstracted a portion of the subject-matter, directed the sale of that and refused to allow the sale of the remainder. There was no new application. The application made for the whole was reduced to an application for a part. Thus the application is not barred by limitation.

AMMOTTI v. SANKARAN ADIODI.

The eighth ground takes a point that Amar Chand Pal had obtained a simple money-decree on the basis of his mortgage of 7th July 1896, that in those circumstances he was rightly excluded as a party from the suit brought on 23rd August 1899, and that he had no right to obtain a subsequent decree on the foot of the mortgage. There is no evidence as to his having obtained a simple money-decree. It was for the appellant to produce evidence on this point. He has not done so. We, therefore, find that he fails on this point also.

The ninth ground taken is that, as the appellant only claims half the property, he should not be made to pay the fees on the total value of the right to receive land revenue. We find that although he claims half he has impugned Amar Chand Pal's title to the whole, and that, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly fixed the amount of costs. This concludes all the points taken in the memorandum of appeal.

We dismiss this appeal. The appellant will pay his own costs and those of Babu Amar Chand Pal.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 110, 116—Rent, suit for—Kanom, expiry of—Accrual of rent after expiry—Limitation.

A suit for rent on the expiry of a kanom is governed by Article 116 and not by Article 110 of the Limitation Act. A kanom tenure involving the taking of an account for the whole period of the kanomdar's occupation is not subject to the legal incidents of a lease in this respect.

Seydarakath Kakkachi v. Valiarath Muhamad Kutti, 6 Ind. Cas. 754; (1910) M. W. N. 186, distinguished.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 658 of 1911, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Badagara, in Original Suit No. 369 of 1911.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, as the assignee from the jeremi, brought the present suit for the recovery of arrears of michavaram due under a kanom document executed by the defendant. The defendant pleaded that a claim for arrears of michavaram for more than three years was barred by limitation under Article 110 of the Limitation Act, the kanom having expired more than three years before suit. Both the lower Courts disallowed the plea, on the ground that a kanom was a mortgage and the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued till redemption. In that view both the lower Courts held that the michavaram was due under the registered kanom deed and that Article 116 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applied to the case. As the plaintiff claimed arrears for only about 5½ years the plaintiff's suit was decreed in full.

The decree of the Primary Court being confirmed on appeal, the 1st defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. S. Venku Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The second appeal is argued only on the plea of limitation. It is urged with reference to Seydarakath Kakkachi v. Valiarath Muhamad Kutti (1) that Article 110, not Article 116, of the Limitation Act is applicable. In that case, however, the question was of a tenant holding over after the expiration of an ordinary lease. Here it is of a kanomdar; and the kanom tenure, involving the taking of an account for the whole period of the kanomdar's occupation, is not, in our opinion, subject to the legal incidents of a lease in this respect.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

A suit by a landlord against his agent (ziladar and mukhtar) for the recovery principally of money collected as rent of shops, and of price of certain grain realised as bazar dues, lies in a Civil and not in a Rent Court, inasmuch as it does not fall within the purview of section 108 (5) of the Oudh Rent Act, and consequently it is not subject to the period of limitation prescribed by the said Act. Babu Kismat Rai Jagdhari, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent Rani Jagannath Kuar against three defendants Mir Ehsan Ali, Musammât Piyari and Abdul Ali Khan. The first defendant is the son of one Enayet Ali deceased, while the second defendant is Enayet Ali's widow. It was alleged in the plaint that Mir Enayet Ali had been employed by the plaintiff rani as a ziladar and mukhtar and it was stated in the first paragraph of the plaint that besides collecting rents of tenants of the estate, he used also to collect on behalf of the plaintiff the rent of certain shops and also of certain bazar dues in respect of a bazar named Harbansganj. It was alleged in the second paragraph of the plaint that by reason of Mir Enayet Ali not having deposited certain sums which he had collected on the plaintiff's behalf, he was placed under suspension on the 26th of September 1913. Enayet Ali died on the 25th of November 1913 and the present suit was brought against the defendants to recover a sum of Rs. 639 odd, which was alleged to be due by Enayet Ali on account of money received by him on behalf of the plaintiff. The first and second defendants were impleaded as the legal representatives of Enayet Ali. The third defendant Abdul Ali Khan was impleaded as Enayet Ali's surety, he having executed a surety bond in favour of the plaintiff for the due discharge of his duties by Enayet Ali. Various pleas were raised by way of defence; one of them was to the effect that the suit did not lie in the Civil Court. The Court of first instance overruled this plea and held that the suit was entertainable in a Civil Court, inasmuch as it was a suit against the legal representatives of Mir Enayet Ali and could not, therefore, be treated as a suit under section 108, clause 5, of the Oudh Rent Act. A plea of limitation which was also raised by the defendants was accepted by the Court of first instance. The Munsif held, on the strength of a ruling of this Court reported as Dhara Singh v. Seth Jai Dayal (1), that although the suit was entertainable in the Civil Court the period of limitation prescribed by the Rent Act applied. The suit was dismissed accordingly. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has overruled the decision of the Court of first instance and remanded the suit for disposal on the merits under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendants appeal to this Court and the first two points raised in the memorandum of appeal relate to the issues of limitation and jurisdiction. With regard to the plea of jurisdiction I am satisfied that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The suit as it was framed was not a suit within the purview of section 108, clause 5, of the Oudh Rent Act. That clause relates to suits against an agent employed in the management of land or collection of revenue or rent for money received or accounts kept by the agent in the course of his employment as aforesaid. A reference to the items contained in the account which is attached to the plaint, shows that the sum which was claimed in this suit was made up principally of two items, namely, Rs. 450 alleged to have been collected as rent of shops and Rs. 378 odd being the price of certain grain which had been realised by Enayet Ali as bazar dues. A claim of this nature was not entertainable in the Rent Court and was rightly brought in the Civil Court. Then as to the question of limitation it appears to me also that the decision of the Court below is correct and that the ruling in Dhara Singh v. Seth Jai Dayal (1), upon which reliance was placed by the Court of first instance, does not apply. If, as I hold, the suit was one which was not at any time entertainable in a Rent Court, it follows that no special period of limitation prescribed in the Oudh Rent Act could apply so as to bar the entertainment of the suit by a Civil Court. The only other point which has been raised in appeal here is with reference to a certain order passed by the lower Appellate Court in the matter of the production of certain documentary evidence. I am inclined to doubt whether any appeal is open to the appellants with regard to this matter. This is an appeal against an order passed under Order XLI, rule 23, and Order XLIII does not appear to contemplate the filing of any appeal against an order refusing or accepting documentary evidence which has been tendered. However, assuming that an appeal is competent with regard to this matter, I think the order of the lower Court should be maintained. It seems that the case came up in the Court of the Munsif for the first hearing on the 18th of December 1914. Up to that time the plaintiff had not produced any documentary evidence, except a surety bond which had been executed by the third defendant. On the 18th of December issues were framed and the case was fixed for the 27th of January for the reception of evidence. On this latter date an application which the plaintiff had presented at the previous hearing, that is to say on the 18th of December 1914, was taken up and considered by the Munsif. The application of the 18th of December 1914 was to the effect that as the third defendant had totally denied the accounts as set out in the plaint and as it was necessary to produce certain registers, account books and receipts in order to prove the accounts and as the plaintiff's mukhtar had been on tour and had not been able to get these documents from the head-quarter office and further as no list of the documents had been prepared, a date might be fixed to allow the filing of the documentary evidence. When this petition was presented on the 18th of December the Munsif passed no order regarding it. The only endorsement on the application is that it is to remain with the record. When the case came up for hearing again on the 27th of January 1915, an affidavit was put in on behalf of the plaintiff asking for leave to put in documentary evidence on that day. The ground set out in the affidavit was that the first defendant had led the plaintiff's agent to believe that he would confess judgment and that afterwards it had become apparent that the first defendant was denying the claim. The Munsif referred to the provisions of Order VII, rules 14 and 18, and also to the provisions of Order XIII, rule 1, and refused to allow the documents to be put in. The Subordinate Judge thought, and in my opinion, rightly, that the order of the Munsif could not be supported. It was the business of the Munsif to decide on the 18th of December 1914 what was to be done with reference to the application made by the plaintiff for the reception of documentary evidence. The 18th of December being the first date fixed for hearing it is possible, as the learned Subordinate Judge observes, that the plaintiff might have on that date been able to put in certain documentary evidence which he would have had a right to put in under the provisions of Order XIII, rule 1. No doubt the action of the plaintiff in the matter of putting forward this documentary evidence was irregular and not in strict accordance with the provisions of the Code; at the same time it would, I think, for the reasons just given, be unfair to the plaintiff to uphold the order of the first Court refusing to receive the evidence, that order having been passed long after the first hearing of the case, although there was before the Munsif an application at the first hearing in this connection which it was his duty to decide then. I may also remark with reference to one of the reasons given by the Munsif for the rejection of the plaintiff's documents that it does not appear to have any force in it. Certain account-books were tendered by the plaintiff regarding which the Munsif has remarked that the accounts contained in them do not appear to have been regularly kept in the course of business. The plaintiff's reply to this is that the account-books were the books kept not by her but by her deceased agent Enayet Ali, against whose legal representatives and surety the present suit has been brought. I see no reason for interfering with the order of the Court below and, I therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

First appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh.*

Mr. Gulzari Lal (with him Mr. Pauna Lal), for the Appellant.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji (with him Mr. Braj Nath Vyas), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the appeal of Khawani Singh, who was a defendant in a suit brought by Chet Ram and others for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that a certain document, dated 7th February 1914 and registered on 10th February 1914, and which was executed by Musammam Uda Kuar in favour of Khawani Singh, is null and void and ineffectual as against them after the death of Musammam Uda Kuar. It appears from a pedigree, which is to be found in the first paragraph of the plaint, that one Mansa Ram had four sons, Badam Singh, Lalji, Bakhti and Khushali. Musammam Uda Kuar, the lady who executed the document which forms the subject-matter of this suit, is the widow of Lalji. Khawani Singh who is the appellant in the present case is the son of Badam Singh, and, therefore, nephew of Uda Kuar's deceased husband. The plaintiffs in the case are the descendants of Bakhti and Khushali, the other two sons of Mansa Ram. The case set out in the plaint was to the effect that Lalji, the husband of Musammam Uda Kuar, had died about thirty years before the suit leaving Musammam Uda Kuar in possession of his estate as a Hindu widow. It was claimed, therefore, that having this estate she had no right to make the transfer of the property which was evidenced by the document referred to in the plaint. It was further stated in the plaint that all the declarations made by Musammam Uda Kuar in this document of transfer were untrue statements. It appears from the document itself that Musammam Uda Kuar declared that the property which she was purporting to dispose of had been joint property held by her deceased husband and the father of Khawani Singh. The plaintiffs' case was that this property was the separate property of Lalji, which was held by his widow as a limited estate which a Hindu widow possesses. The defence raised by Khawani Singh was that the plaintiffs could not maintain the suit. In the eleventh paragraph of the written statement a further plea was taken that Khawani Singh and his father had been living jointly with Lalji, husband of Musammāt Uda Kuar. In the 12th paragraph of this written statement it was pleaded that the property in suit had been bought by Lalji in his own name out of the joint family funds. Fourteenth paragraph of the same document sets out that the plaintiffs were not reversioners. In the last paragraph of the written statement a ground is taken that even if Badam Singh and Lalji were found to be separate in estate, the deed of relinquishment simply operated as an acceleration of the succession in favour of Khawani Singh. There can be no doubt on the pedigree set up in the plaint that on the assumption that Lalji was a separate owner of the property in suit Khawani Singh is at the present time a nearer reversioner of Lalji than any of the plaintiffs.

The principal matter to be considered is that of the interpretation of the deed of 7th February 1914 printed at page 1 A. According to the construction put upon this document by the Court below there was no transfer at all on the part of Musammāt Uda Kuar. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that as a matter of fact Lalji, the husband of Musammāt Uda Kuar, had been separate from the rest of his family, and this finding, we may say, is not contested here in appeal. He went on to point out that in drawing up this document Musammāt Uda Kuar professes to be dealing with joint family property. She did not profess to deal with it as having been the separate estate of her deceased husband and so the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the document would not operate as transfer of any interest in favour of Khawani Singh; for if the property, as has been declared to be in the said document, was joint property there could be no transfer of it made by this lady Uda Kuar. The consequence was that the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. In appeal here it is contended that the Court below has placed a wrong interpretation upon the terms of this document. According to the argument of the learned Counsel who supports the case for the appellant, this document amounts in one view to a total surrender of the interests of Musammāt Uda Kuar in this property. We must take it now for the purpose of disposing of the case that the property was in fact the separate property of Lalji. Unfortunately, however, for this argument of the appellant, we find that in this document of transfer executed by Musammāt Uda Kuar a certain area consisting of 21 bighas 10 biswas of land was reserved from the operation of the deed. It is not for us to inquire where the property so reserved has since gone to. We have only to look to the deed as we find it on the record. It being found that a portion of the property was reserved from the operation of the deed, the clear inference is that Musammāt Uda Kuar did not surrender the whole of the widow's estate in favour of Khawani Singh. The doctrine of surrender has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir Gayawal (1). It is true that since that case has been decided, the various Courts in India have taken different views as to what is meant by a particular passage in the judgment of Lord Morris in which he has laid down the principle that there must be a surrender of the entire estate. The Calcutta High Court has taken the view that the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council means nothing more than that the widow is bound to divest herself of all her interest in the particular portion of the estate which she is transferring. Other High Courts on the contrary have held that the judgment of the Privy Council intends to lay down a much wider rule, namely, that the widow is bound to withdraw from the entire estate which she holds so as to accelerate succession in favour of the nearest reversioner. In this connection we may refer to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Pilu Appa Nalvade v. Babaji Naru Manj (2) and the judgment of the Madras High Court in the case of Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai (3). A similar view, we may observe, has been taken in the Punjab Chief Court. The balance of authority is certainly in favour of the proposition that there must be complete surrender of the widow's estate in order to accelerate the vesting of the estate in the nearest reversioner. Accepting this view, we hold that in the present instance there not having been a complete withdrawal from the estate of Lalji by Musammatt Uda Kuar, the document in suit cannot be said to have vested the estate of Lalji in the appellant Khawani Singh. Then it has been contended that Khawani Singh being the nearest reversioner, this transfer will take effect on the principle which is laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Bajrangji Singh v. Manokarnika Bakhsh Singh (4), namely, that a transfer made with the consent of the nearest reversioner will take effect as against the more remote reversioner. That rule, as we understand, is applicable to cases of transfer for consideration. It has not been extended, so far as we are aware, to a case where a transfer has been made by way of gift. Further, if the transfer be with the consent of the nearest reversioner, it takes effect because it affords evidence of the propriety of the transaction; in other words, it justifies the transaction on the ground of legal necessity. It cannot, we think, be said that the consent of the beneficiary himself is such a consent as would give rise to any such presumption. In either of these views it appears to us that the appellant here is not entitled to rely upon this document as being a transfer in his favour and to claim that the estate of the deceased Lalji has vested in him. We are of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration sought, and we, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A. S. PINTO—RESPONDENT.

British subject, who is—'Alien enemy,' meaning of.

Persons born within the allegiance of the British Crown include every one who is born within the dominions of the Crown, whatever may be the nationality of either or both of his parents; unless he is either (a) a child of a foreign sovereign or any foreign state's ambassador, or, possibly, of any other foreign diplomatic agent or (b) a child born in British territory of alien parents, if the territory was in the occupation of a foreign army at the time of his birth. [p. 89, col. 1.]

The term alien enemy includes not only the subjects of a state at war with Great Britain but also British subjects and subjects of a neutral state who are voluntarily residing in a hostile country. [p. 89, col. 1.]

Kreglinger v. Samuel, (1915) 31 T. R. 162, followed.

Mr. Xavier, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hancock, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit and this application were, no doubt, intended to be those of Marcus Moses Greenberg, executor of Moses (otherwise Maurice) Greenberg, but through the carelessness of the Advocates concerned the plaint was instituted in the name of S. Greenberg, the Attorney of M. M. Greenberg, residing at 36, Soolay Pagoda Road, and the application is that of S. Greenberg without even the addition of "Attorney of M. M. Greenberg." The plaint and application deserve to be dismissed on this ground alone. S. Greenberg, who is Solomon Greenberg, has no right of suit personally, but he may have a right to institute a suit in the name and on behalf of Marcus Moses Greenberg, executor of Moses Maurice Greenberg.

The Judge took no notice of the objection taken in the written statement that the plaint was defective in form, and I have not been pressed to dismiss the application on the ground that Solomon Greenberg has no locus standi, consequently I will deal with it.

The suit was for rent or possibly it might be taken to be one for use and occupation of three rooms in a house. It was instituted on the 19th August 1914, that is, after war had commenced between the British and German Empires but before war had been declared between Great Britain and Turkey.

Moses (Maurice) Greenberg was a German subject by birth but he became a naturalized British subject in India in 1866. There appears to me to be sufficient evidence to show that his son Marcus Moses Greenberg was born in Calcutta in 1861, although no

RAM CHANDAR v. GANGA SARAN.

British birth certificate was produced to show this. •

If he was born in Calcutta, he was a natural born British subject although his father was at the time of his birth a German subject.

Persons born within the allegiance of the British Crown include every one who is born within the dominions of the Crown, whatever may be the nationality of either or both of his parents, unless he is either (a) a child of a foreign sovereign or any foreign state's ambassador, or possibly of any other foreign diplomatic agent or (b) a child born in British territory of alien parents, if the territory was in the occupation of a foreign army at the time of his birth. See Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 1, page 303.

There was sufficient evidence before the Court on which to hold that Marcus Moses Greenberg is a British subject, and the discussion as to whether he became such by reason of his father having become a naturalized British subject was not in point.

A British subject may, however, have to be treated during a war in which Great Britain is engaged as an alien enemy.

In the recent case of Kreglinger v. Samuel (1), the Court of Appeal in England accepted the following statement by Professor Dicey as correct: "Under the term alien enemies are included not only the subjects of any State at war with us, but also any British subjects and subjects of any neutral State voluntarily resident in a hostile country."

The affidavits filed in the case show that Marcus Moses Greenberg lived for many years in Rangoon, but he went to Beyrouth which is in Turkish territory in 1911, and was resident there certainly up to the 14th June 1914, since when nothing has been heard from him apparently. In a letter written on that date from Beyrouth he states that he intended to leave for Rangoon about the end of October, but he has not appeared here so far. Possibly he may be dead, in which case Solomon Greenberg would have no right to institute a suit as his Attorney. If, however, he is still alive the only reasonable conclusion to draw is that he is still in Turkish territory. There can be no question as to his having voluntarily resided in Beyrouth. Consequently when war between Great Britain and Turkey was declared he, although a British subject, became an alien enemy of Great Britain as long as he was and is in Turkish territory during the continuance of the war.

The case above referred to shows that any suit of his in a British Court cannot be proceeded with during such period.

The application is dismissed with costs. Two gold mohurs allowed as Advocate's fee.

Application dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 39, 40, 42—Declaration, suit for, that an endorsement on a document is a forgery, nature of—Endorsement, whether document.

An endorsement on a document is by itself a document and is similar to the several parts of a document indicated in section 40 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 90, col. 1.]

A suit for a declaration that an endorsement on a mortgage-deed is a forgery is really a suit for cancellation of an instrument and is of the nature indicated in section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. Section 42 is not applicable to such a case. [p. 90, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Judge, Aligarh.

Mr. Nihal Chand (with him Mr. B. E. O'Connor), for the Appellant.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondent.
JUDGMENT.

SUNDER LAL, J.—This is a suit by the plaintiff, who is the mortgagee under a document dated the 17th of February 1913. The mortgage was for a term of ten years. The plaintiff's case is that under the circumstances mentioned in the plaint the defendant got hold of the original document from the plaintiff's custody and fraudulently endorsed the following note on the document;—

RAM CHANDAR v. GANGA SARAN.

Received Rs. 1,200 the 17th February 1913 up to the 19th of June 1913.

	Rs.	A.	P.
Interest ...	56	4	0

The endorsement purports to bear the signature of Ram Chandar, plaintiff, by the pen of Afzal Khan and his thumb impression. The Court of first instance tried the case and held that the endorsement was a forgery and that no payment has been made in fact, and decreed the suit. The plea under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act was raised in the Court of first instance, which that Court overruled for the reasons given in its judgment. The defendant appealed to the learned Judge, who without going into the merits of the case has held that the suit is barred by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiff could have brought a suit for the recovery of the amount due on the mortgage in which the question of payment and the genuineness of the endorsement could have been tried. The plaintiff appealed to this Court and after hearing both the parties Mr. Nihal Chand, who appeared for the plaintiff-appellant, was granted leave to apply for the amendment of the plaint. Mr. Nihal Chand has applied for the amendment of the plaint. It is now after the amendment really a suit for cancellation of the endorsement fraudulently put upon the mortgage-deed by the defendant. The suit is of the nature indicated in section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. The endorsement by itself is a document and it is similar to the several parts of a document indicated in section 40 of the Act. In any case the provisions of the Specific Relief Act under which a plaintiff may sue for the cancellation of the document are not exhaustive. I think that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not applicable to this case. I would set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with directions to restore the appeal to the file of pending cases and to hear and dispose of the same according to law under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

WALSH, J.—I agree, I am glad that we have been able to come to the conclusion that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply because the second sub-section, if it had applied, undoubtedly created a difficulty. And it seems to me that the law would be in an unsatisfactory state if a person could commit such a gross trespass, as is alleged in this case, and then force the victim of it to a remedy which he was not otherwise disposed to take. Inasmuch as the appellant has taken a reasonable course and amended what undoubtedly was an unsatisfactory plaint, it is not necessary for us to decide anything beyond the circumstances of the particular case. But for my own part I am not prepared to hold that, although such a claim is unusual and possibly unparalleled in any reported case, a man who has suffered an injury like the endorsement is alleged to be in this case as a result of a tort, could not get it removed through the machinery of a declaration, with the addition of a consequential relief for its cancellation. There are many instances to be found in the recognised books of pleading where the main cause of action is a tort like forgery, and the prayer for relief is wound up by a claim for the delivery up of the document or its destruction. However, it is not necessary to decide this and it may be that it is desirable before giving a final opinion upon it to hear further argument. I agree with my learned brother.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below is set aside, and the case is remanded to the Court below under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Civil Procedure Code with directions to restore the appeal to the file of pending cases and to hear and dispose of the same according to law. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

The test for determining whether a document is a mortgage or a sale is, whether the relation of creditor and debtor subsists between the parties after execution of the document. If it does, the document is a mortgage.

Ma Hnin U v. Osman Gani, 15 Ind. Cas. 423; 5 Bur. L. T. 99, followed.

An option to purchase is not an interest in land and a document creating an option to purchase does not require registration under section 17 of the Registration Act.

Where plaintiff sued to redeem a mortgage, but it was found that the document sued on was in effect a sale-deed with an option to re-purchase, and the plaintiff sought to be allowed to ask for specific performance of the agreement to re-sell:

Held, that, the facts and the relief sought being in effect the same, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint.

Mr. Palit, for the Appellants.

Mr. May Oung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for redemption of three plots of land. On the 4th April 1910 the plaintiffs executed a document of sale, Exhibit C, in favour of the defendants which was registered, and on the same day the defendants executed an agreement, Exhibit D, under which they were to lease the lands to the plaintiffs for a period of three years, and not to lease to anybody else during that period, and to re-sell the lands to the plaintiffs for the price paid by the plaintiffs plus Rs. 50, if the plaintiffs wish to re-purchase within the three years. That document was not registered. Both the lower Courts have held that the transaction was a mortgage and that the agreement, Exhibit D, should have been registered as it formed part of the mortgage transaction. The written documents clearly show a sale and an option of re-purchase within three years, which period had not expired when the suit was brought. The relation of debtor and creditor no longer existed after the execution of these documents. The fact that the purchaser leased out the lands to the vendor and undertook to re-sell the lands within a certain period at a certain price if the plaintiffs wished to re-purchase, is not inconsistent with an outright sale. The case of Ma Hnin U v. Osman Gani (1) is very similar to the present one. The agreement, Exhibit D, does not confer an interest in land; it merely gives an option of re-purchase to the vendor and is an agreement to lease agricultural land which does not require registration (vide section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act). The agreement is in Burmese, and uses the Burmese word "Ywe" for redemption, but that should not be taken necessarily in its English technical meaning as applicable only to the case of a mortgage. It means no more than the right to buy back. In the plaint the suit is framed as one for redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiff now asks for leave to amend his plaint by asking for specific performance of the agreement to re-sell. The relief sought is in effect the same, and the facts are in no way different. We think the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint accordingly, in order that he should obtain the relief which is applicable to the facts stated in the plaint, his suit really being based on the two documents of the 4th April 1910. Mr. May Aung for the defendants states as to costs that if the suit had been framed as a claim for specific performance of a contract to re-sell, it is possible his client might have admitted the claim and so avoided litigation. The case is remanded under Order XLI, rule 23, to be re-admitted and determined on its merits. If the defendant admits the claim as amended, each party will bear their own costs throughout; otherwise the costs throughout will abide the ultimate result. A certificate will be granted for a refund of the Court-fees under section 13 of the Court Fees Act.

Small Cause suit heard as a regular suit—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Revision.

Where a Small Cause suit, instituted in the Court of a Munsif invested with Small Cause Court powers, is heard and decided by the Munsif as a regular suit and not summarily, his decree is not appealable. But if appealed from and reversed, the High Court is bound to set aside the appellate decree on revision as passed without jurisdiction.

Kollipara Seetpaty v. Kankipaty Subbaya, 1 Ind. Cas. 543; 33 M. 323; 20 M. L. J. 718, followed.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar, for the Applicant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad (with him Mr. Binode Behari), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 11-12-0 as his share of some trees which, he said, had been cut and appropriated by defendant No. 1 on some abadi land. The nature of the suit was undoubtedly such as was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and the value of the subject-matter was also within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes. As a matter of fact the suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court, and it was tried by the Munsif who was invested with Small Cause Court powers. Somehow or other, and it is not explained how, the case was not heard summarily but heard after the fashion of a regular suit and it was dismissed. The reason why it was dismissed was that the plaintiff had not proved that he had been in possession. An appeal was filed from the decision of the Munsif and it was heard by the Additional Judge of Gorakhpore, who gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 7-2-8, as the price of the tamarind and the bamboo trees. The defendant comes here in revision, and the first ground taken is that no appeal lay to the District Judge who had no jurisdiction to try the appeal. The learned Vakil who appears for the applicant called my attention to the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Kollipara Seetpaty

BAL MAKUND v. MAQSUD ALI.

v. Kankipaty Subbaya (1). The view taken by the learned Judges of the Madras High Court in a similar case was that where a Small Cause suit is tried by a Munsif on the Original Side and his decision is reversed in appeal by the subordinate Court the High Court is bound to set aside the decree in appeal as having been passed without jurisdiction. It is in no way advisable that a Small Cause Court suit should be prolonged. If there is any value in the work of the Small Cause Court, it is that speedy justice is done and the parties get an early decision on the matter in dispute between them. The present case is a very good instance of the way in which petty litigation is prolonged and carried to an undue extent. I set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court as a decision passed without jurisdiction and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58 to 62—Operative order—Investigation, however little, sufficient—Second appeal—Findings of mixed law and fact.

The findings that there was no proper investigation of a claim preferred under Order XXI, rule 53, Civil Procedure Code, and that, therefore, no operative order could be passed against the claimant under Order XXI, rule 61, Civil Procedure Code, are findings of mixed law and fact, which can be questioned in second appeal. [p. 93, col. 2; p. 94, col. 1]

An order passed under Order XXI, rules 60 to 62, Civil Procedure Code, is not an operative order only if there has been no investigation whatever under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, but it is an operative order if there has been some investigation, whether perfunctory or satisfactory. For example, an order passed to the effect that a deed produced by a claimant or objector is not genuine, although it may be open to criticism on the ground that it is based upon the mere examination of the deed, without a fair opportunity of proving it having been given to the claimant, is nevertheless an operative order. Appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated the 10th November 1915, confirming the order of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 26th July 1915.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Syed Zahur Ahmad, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Ashfaq Husain was the owner of a four-annas seven-pies share in Mahal Agha Ali Khan in the village of Amraudha in the Cawnpore District and of a share in a certain house in Banjari Tola, Lucknow City. On 10th April 1911 Muhammad Ashfaq Husain executed a deed of simple mortgage for Rs. 2,000 in favour of Saiyid Maqsd Ali by which he hypothecated both properties. Before this deed of mortgage had been executed, a simple money-decree was passed in favour of Jagan Nath against Muhammad Ashfaq Husain. In execution of the decree he attached the four-annas seven-pies share in Mahal Agha Ali Khan in village Amraudha belonging to the judgment-debtor. The execution was in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore. Maqsd Ali put in two petitions in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore on 8th May 1911 and 22nd November 1911 setting up the deed of mortgage dated the 10th April 1911, and asking that the existence of this mortgage should be notified in the sale-proclamation. On 22nd November 1911 the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore entered the application, and issued notices to parties to appear on 16th December 1911. On 16th December 1911 the application came on for hearing but no proceedings were taken, as the record of the case was in the Appellate Court. On 19th December 1911, the record having in the meanwhile been returned from the Appellate Court, the Subordinate Judge took up the matter in the presence of the Pleader for Maqsd Ali and finding that there was no evidence to support the genuineness of the mortgage of 10th April 1911, he refused to notify the existence of the mortgage and dismissed the application.

The decree had been transferred to Bal Makund alias Kanhaiya Lal; he was given permission to purchase the property and purchased it on 20th December 1911.

On the 11th May 1915 Maqsd Ali instituted a suit on the basis of the mortgage of 10th April 1911 against Muhammad Ashfaq Husain, Bal Makund and Baldeo Prasad. Bal Makund took an objection (amongst others) that, inasmuch as the application of Maqsd Ali under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, had been dismissed, Maqsd Ali could not bring a claim upon the deed of mortgage under the provisions of the Limitation Act. He contended that Maqsd Ali's only remedy was to institute a suit according to the terms of Order XXI, rule 63, and that as he had not brought a suit within a year of the dismissal of his application, his claim was time-barred. Both the Courts below having rejected this contention, Bal Makund comes here in second appeal.

On the face of it, Maqsd Ali had made a claim to have his mortgage notified under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, and that claim was dismissed and thus prima facie the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, had operation and under the law of limitation the present suit would be time-barred. But the lower Courts have held that the provisions of Order XXI, rules 58 to 63, have no application, inasmuch as there had been no proper investigation of Maqsd Ali's claim, and no operative order had been passed against him. The learned Counsel for the contesting respondent urges that these findings of the lower Courts are findings of fact with which this Court cannot interfere in second appeal. I do not accept this contention. I consider that these findings are findings of mixed law and fact, and that it is open to me to decide whether the order passed against Maqsud Ali in those proceedings was or was not operative.

The provisions of the rules in question reproduce to all intents and purposes the provisions of the old law on the subject, and the decisions which have been passed by competent Courts under the provisions of the old law apply mutatis mutandis to the law as it now stands.

The most important of these decisions is contained in a pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (1). At page 525 their Lordships say:—

"The other reason assigned is that section 280 does not contemplate that any order shall be made until after an investigation which is directed by section 278. The answer to that is that in the first place we do not know what took place before the Subordinate Judge who made this order. It may have been that the parties who were before him agreed so far upon facts that he was enabled to deliver his opinion off hand. But besides that, the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go; and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question, in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Subordinate Judge at the time, leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows to him. However that may be (and their Lordships do not desire to pronounce any opinion as to the extent of the investigation which is required under the Code), in this case the order was made; and it was an order within the jurisdiction of the Court that made it. It is not conclusive; a suit may be brought to claim the property, notwithstanding the order; but then the Law of Limitation says that the plaintiff must be prompt in bringing his suit. The policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales, and for that reason a year is fixed as the time within which the suit must be brought."

(1) 15 O. 521; 15 I. A. 123; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 172; 21 Ind. Jur. 210; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 931.

The question has been before every High Court in India and there is a very large number of decisions upon it. It is not necessary for me to do more than refer to some of them. I refer to Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (2), Karsan v. Ganpatram (3), Lachmi Narain v. H. C. Martindell (4) and a recent decision of the Madras High Court in Kurada Venkatchalapathi Row v. Gudivada Pedd Veeraswami (5). I refer in particular to a decision of Mr. Chamier in Gayadin v. Musammatt Baij Nathi (6).

According to my reading of these decisions, all the above Courts are in substantial agreement as to the requisites of an operative order. There must be some investigation. If there is no investigation of any kind, if in other words the Judge in the execution department ignores the application of a third party, there can be no operative order against such party and the bar of one year's limitation does not apply to the case of such a third party because there is no order against him. There is what purports to be an order but it is not an order. The Judge having taken no cognizance of the complaint, the order has in effect been passed without jurisdiction, and is neither operative nor legal. It is an order in name and not in reality. But I can find no authority of weight in support of a proposition that, where a Judge has passed an order after a perfunctory investigation, such an order is not an operative order. There is nothing, in my opinion, to support an interpretation of the plain words of the law to the effect that an order can only be operative, if the investigation has been satisfactory. The order is equally operative whether the investigation has been satisfactory or unsatisfactory. The contention of the learned Counsel for the contesting respondent which found favour with the Courts below is that, where on the face of it the Judge in the execution department has failed to give the objector a fair opportunity of proving his case, the order is inoperative. I cannot find support for that contention in the words of the law or in the mass of the authorities quoted.

I have now to examine exactly what happened in this case. Maqsd Ali put forward a mortgage. The Judge would have been wrong if he had accepted that mortgage until it was established that it was a good mortgage.

Maqsd Ali was ordered to support his application on 16th December 1911 and, as far as he knew at that time, the application would be taken up on that date and it was for him to be ready to prove the genuineness of the deed by producing evidence. It is true that on 16th December 1911 the application was not taken up. It was not taken up for the very good reason that the record had not been then returned from the Appellate Court.

But this did not relieve Maqsd Ali from the necessity of having his evidence ready. From the record it appears that he did not have his evidence ready and that he called no witnesses. When the record arrived, the Subordinate Judge called on the Pleader of Maqsd Ali and asked him whether he was in a position to prove the genuineness of the deed. The Pleader replied that he was not in a position to do so. The Judge then decided that he would wait no longer. He had, in my opinion, made an investigation, he had examined the deed, and he had given a date on which the deed could be proved. No evidence had been produced and he was in a position to say that, as the genuineness of the deed had not been proved, he would not regard it as valid. That was the position which he took up. Maqsd Ali has undoubtedly a right to say that he was hurried in the matter, that he was not given very much time within which to produce his evidence, and that, if circumstances had been more favourable, he might have been able to satisfy the Court that his deed was a genuine one. But these are not objections to the effect that no investigation took place. They are objections to the effect that an investigation took place, but that the investigation was badly conducted and, as I understand the law, an objection (even if it be a good objection) to the effect that the investigation has been badly conducted in no way goes to show that the order passed was inoperative. I take the order to be an operative order passed after an investigation which was open to criticism. The law then allowed Maqsd Ali a remedy, but that remedy was subject to the condition that he should bring his suit within a year. As he failed to bring the suit within a year he has no remedy left. This, as I understand it, is the view that was taken by Mr. Chamier in Gayadin v. Musammatt Baij Nathi (6); and it is the view which appears correct to me.

I, therefore, allow this appeal and direct that the suit stand dismissed and that Maqsd Ali pay his own costs and those of the appellant in all three Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Mortgage—Redemption—Interest, covenant as to payment of, construction of.

A mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee would remain in possession of the mortgaged property and would receive the profits thereof in lieu of interest, the mortgagor being entitled to redeem the property on payment of the principal sum. In case of a deficiency of profits the mortgagor covenanted to make it up from his own pocket.

Held, that there being no covenant on the part of the mortgagor that the deficiency in the profits should be added to the principal or that it should be paid at the time of redemption, he was entitled to redeem the mortgaged property on payment of the principal sum only. [p. 96, col. 1.]

KSHETRA MOHAN GHOSH v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem the mortgage upon payment of Rs. 200. It is contended in support of the decision of the Court below that if there was a deficiency of profits, that is to say, when the profits did not reach Rs. 48 the mortgagee was entitled to add this amount to the principal, and that the property could not be redeemed otherwise. The deed itself expressly says that the property can be redeemed upon payment of Rs. 200. True it is that a personal liability was undertaken to pay year by year the deficiency in the profits. The decision of the Privy Council in Jawahir Singh v. Someshwar Dat (1) relied upon by the respondent is distinguishable, as the document in that case was quite different. There it was expressly stipulated not only that the deficiency should be made good by the mortgagor, but that if it was not paid, it should be paid at the time of redemption. We allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and in lieu thereof decree the plaintiff's claim for redemption upon payment of Rs. 200. The money must be paid within three months from this date. If it is not paid within this time, the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts. The appellants will have their costs in the Courts below and in this Court, provided the mortgage is redeemed.

Appeal allowed.

THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899), s. 286—Highway or drain, vesting of, in Municipality, effect of —Municipality, powers of—Owner of land covered by drain, rights of—Injunction—Declaration.

A house-drain alongside a public street made by the owner of the adjoining premises, to which the land covered by the drain appertains, for the outlet of water therefrom is excluded from the operation of section 286 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. [p. 97, col. 2.]

The legal effect of the statutory vesting of a street or a drain in a Municipality is not to transfer to the Municipality the ownership in the site or soil over which the street or the drain exists; but only the surface and so much of the air-space above and so much of the soil below the surface vest in and belong to the Municipality as may reasonably be required for its control, protection and maintenance as a highway or drain for the use of the public; and to this extent only, the owner of the land covered by the street or drain is divested of his property. [p. 98, col. 1.]

In construing an Act like the Calcutta Municipal Act, Courts will not presume that the intention of the Legislature was to confiscate private property and vest it in a public Corporation without compensation granted to the proprietor, but the reasonable inference should be that the right of the owner was intended to be abridged only to the extent necessary for the discharge of the statutory duties imposed on the Corporation for the benefit of the public. [p. 98, col. 2.]

When a highway vests under a Statute in a local authority, the property of the local authority concerned does not extend further than is necessary for the maintenance and user of the highway as a highway and subject to this qualification the original owner's rights and property remain, and if the highway ceases to be a highway, the owner becomes entitled to full and unabridged rights of ownership in the property. [p. 99, col. 1.]

English, American and Indian Case-Law considered.

The plaintiffs' land, covered by a drain that had vested in the Calcutta Corporation under section 286 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, having been included within the boundaries of the Municipal land, they brought a suit for a perpetual injunction against the Corporation and for a declaration of their title to the land:

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled not only to a declaration of title but also to a perpetual injunction restraining the Corporation and its officials and servants, from interfering with the exercise by the plaintiffs of their right of ownership in the disputed land, except in so far as such interference might reasonably be required for the control, protection and maintenance of the drain thereon for the use of the public. [p. 99, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 20th September 1911, modifying that of the 2nd Munsif, Alipore, dated the 27th July 1907.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bhudeb Chandra Roy, for the Appellants.—The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the land in dispute belongs to me. But it says that as there is a road-side drain on the land, it has "vested" in the defendant Corporation by reason of section 286 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. I submit section 286 does not give the defendant the ownership of the disputed property. The drain is vested "as a drain." As to the effect of "vesting" see the cases of Sundaram Ayyar v. Municipal Council of Madura (1), Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (2), Finchley Electric Light Co. v. Finchley Urban District Council (3), Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird (4) and Judicial Committee in Sydney Municipal Council v. Young (5).

KSHETRA MOHAN GHOSH v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

As to how the defendant Corporation can use the drain, Coccardale v. Charlton (6) is an authority on the point.

Babu Debendra Chandra Mullick, for the Respondent.—By section 286, the drain is vested in the defendant Corporation and that includes the ownership of the drain and the land under it. The plaintiffs' rights are extinguished and the suit must fail.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title to land and for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendant Corporation from interference with them in the exercise of their rights as proprietors. The case for the plaintiffs is that the disputed land appertains to their premises 13/3, Circular Garden Reach Road, that their predecessor constructed a drain thereon for the outlet of water from the premises, and that on the 22th May 1903 two of the officers of the Corporation had caused the land to be included within the boundaries of the adjoining street. The plaintiffs assert that such unlawful action on the part of the Corporation had rendered it necessary for them to obtain a declaration of their title and an injunction so as to secure them from future interference. The defendant Corporation resisted the claim on the ground that the land was not the property of the plaintiffs, that the drain was a part and parcel of the public street and that it was in any event a public street within the meaning of section 335 of Act III of 1899 B. C. and had become vested in the Corporation and was their property. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiffs on the question of title, and granted them a perpetual injunction. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision and dismissed the suit. On second appeal to this Court, the case was remanded for re-consideration with special reference to an amalnama produced by the plaintiffs in proof of their alleged title to the land in controversy. The Subordinate Judge, after remand, has declared the title of the plaintiffs to the site of the drain but has refused the injunction on the ground that as the drain had vested in the Corporation, the right of the plaintiffs had been extinguished. The decree as drawn up is possibly not in exact conformity with the judgment. The plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court, and have pressed their claim for an injunction; there is no cross-appeal by the Corporation upon the question of title. Consequently, we must proceed on the assumption that the land in suit covered by the drain appertains to the premises owned by the plaintiffs.

Section 286 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1899, provides that all public drains and all drains in, alongside or under any public street, whether made at the charge of Municipal funds or otherwise, and all works, materials and things appertaining thereto, shall vest in the Corporation. The drain which passes over the land in suit is not a public drain within the meaning of this section, but is a drain alongside a public street. Section 3, clause 16, shows that the term drain includes a house drain; consequently, the fact that the drain is a house drain made by the owner of the adjoining premises for the outlet of water therefrom does not exclude it from the operation of section 286. What then is the precise effect when, under section 286, a drain vests in the Corporation; does the Corporation thereby become the proprietor of the soil? The question is by no means of first impression. It has been ruled in a long series of decisions that when a road or a drain vests in the Municipality, the effect is not to confer the full proprietary right in the soil itself covered by the road or the drain on the Commissioners. [Chairman of the Naihati Municipality v. Kishori Lal Goswami (7), Modhu Sudan Kundu v. Promoda Nath Roy (8), Chairman of Howrah Municipality v. Khetra Krishna Mitter (9), Nihal Chand v. Azmat Ali Khan (10), Nagar Valab Narsi v. Municipality of Dhandhuka (11)], though possibly a different view was taken in Municipal Commissioners of Madras v. Sarangapani Mudaliar (12). The principle applicable to cases of this character was elaborately examined by Sir V. Bhashyam Ayyangar in Sundaram Ayyar v. Municipal Council of Madura (1), which was followed in Madathapu Ramaya v. Secretary of State (2). It was pointed out that the legal effect of the statutory vesting of a street in a Municipality is not to transfer to the Municipality the ownership in the site or soil over which the street exists; the street, qua street, vests in the Municipality, that is, the surface and so much of the air-space above and so much of the soil below the surface as is reasonably necessary to enable the Municipality adequately to maintain and manage the street as a street, was vested in and belonged to the Municipality. This conclusion is in conformity with what has been recognised as settled law in England and America. In England, the effect of a statutory provision whereby a road or drain is made to vest in a County Council or County Borough, is, not to transfer the freehold to the authority concerned, but merely to vest in them the property in the surface of the street, road or drain and in so much of the actual soil below and air above as may reasonably be required for its control, protection and maintenance as a highway or drain for the use of the public; to this extent only the owner is divested of his property. The Courts will not presume that the intention of the Legislature was to confiscate private property and vest it in a public Corporation without compensation granted to the proprietor. The reasonable inference, on the other hand, is that the right of the owner was intended to be abridged, only to the extent necessary for the discharge of the statutory duties imposed on the Corporation for the benefit of the public. Reference may usefully be made to the decision of the House of Lords in Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird (4) and of the Judicial Committee in Sydney Municipal Council v. Young (5). In the former case, Lord Halsbury held that the street, qua street, and so much of the actual soil of the street as might be necessary for the purpose of preserving, maintaining and using it as a street, had vested in the Corporation. Lord Herschell, added that the vesting of the street vested in urban authority such property and such property only as was necessary for the control, protection and maintenance of the street as a highway for public use. In the latter case, Lord Morris observed that the vesting of a street vested no property in the Municipality, beyond the surface of the street and such portion as might be absolutely necessarily incidental to the repairing and proper management of the street; it did not vest the soil or the land in them as owners, that is, the street vested in them qua street and not as general property. The doctrine thus formulated has been recognised and applied in a variety of cases: Bagshaw v. Buxton Local Board (13), Rolls v. Saint George Southwark Vestry (14), Wandsworth Board of Works v. L. & S. W. Ry. Co., (15), Finchley Electric Light Co. v. Finchley Urban District Council (3), Coverdale v. Charlton (6), Poplar Corporation v. Millwall Dock Co. (16), Hyde Corporation v. London & North Western Railway Company (23), Lord Provost of Glasgow v. Glasgow & South Western Railway Company (24). No useful purpose would be served by a minute analysis of the varying circumstances of these decisions; but the general principle deducible may be summarised to be that the property of the local authority concerned does not extend further than is necessary for the maintenance and user of the highway as a highway, that, subject to this qualification, the original owner's rights and property remain, and that if the highway ceases to be a highway, the owner becomes entitled to full and unabridged rights of ownership in the property. A similar view has been adopted in the Courts of the United States, where the question of the precise interest taken by the Municipal Corporation has sometimes arisen in relation to title to underground minerals or alluvial accretions. The doctrine has been adopted that the property or estate vested in the Municipality is such only as is necessary for street purposes and is in trust for public uses and not for purposes of profit and emoluments [Dillon on Municipal Corporations] 1911, Volume III, page 1691, Banks v. Ogden (25), Thomas v. Hunt (26), Donovan v. Allert (27), Leadville v. Bohm Mining Co. (28)]. In some of these cases, reference was made with approval to the decisions in Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird (4), Coverdale v. Charlton (6), Wednesbury Corporation v. Lodge Hole Colliery Co. (29), Lodge H. C. Co., v. Wednesbury Corporation (20) in support of the view that the intent and purpose of a Municipal Statute is to clothe the city in its governmental capacity with the entire title to the streets, as such, for public use and not for the profit or emolument of the city, in other words, the interest or estate thus conferred upon the Corporation is limited and not absolute, limited by the purposes which the Legislature had in view when the Corporation was created.

In the light of these principles it is obvious that there was no foundation for the claim of the Corporation to include the disputed land within the boundaries of Municipal land. The plaintiffs are accordingly entitled not merely to a declaration of their title, which has been unsuccessfully contested by the Corporation, but also to a perpetual injunction. The injunction will restrain the Corporation, its officers and servants from interfering with the exercise, by the plaintiffs, of their right of ownership in the disputed land, except in so far as such interference may reasonably be required for the control, protection and maintenance of the drain thereon for the use of the public.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside in so far as it dismisses the claim for a perpetual injunction. In supersession of the decree of the Subordinate Judge a decree will be made to the following effect: "The title of the plaintiffs is declared to the disputed land; it is further declared that the drain thereon has vested in the Municipality as a drain. The defendant Corporation, its officers and servants are hereby perpetually restrained from interfering with the plaintiffs in the exercise of their rights as proprietors of the disputed land, except where such interference may reasonably be required for the control, protection and maintenance of the drain for the use of the public."

Musummat SURJA KUAR AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Foreclosure, decree nisi for, against mortgagor—Mortgagor, death of, before decree absolute—Heirs, one of several, brought on record, effect of—Execution—Sale—Interest of other heirs, whether could be sold.

A Hindu widow, who was in possession of a certain share of her husband's property upon partition made among her sons and who lived jointly with one of the latter, mortgaged her share to pay off her husband's debt. The mortgagee obtained a decree nisi on the mortgage against the widow, but the latter died before the decree could be made absolute. The son, who had lived jointly with the widow, was alone brought on the record as her representative, and the property was brought to sale in execution of the decree and was purchased by plaintiffs, who sued all the heirs of the widow for possession:

Held, that the order absolute having been obtained against one out of several heirs of the widow, there was not in existence any decree under which the interests of the other heirs could be sold. [p. 103, col. 2.]

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Tudball, modifying a decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following judgment of Tudball, J.:—

"The facts out of which this second appeal has arisen are as follows:—One Lakhmi, the owner of certain property in the village of Ametha, died leaving three sons, Baldeo, Gulab and Kesri. The three sons mortgaged this property to one Jasram, who on 20th September 1900 got a decree for sale in execution of which the property was sold. Baldeo and Kesri each paid $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the debt and the sale of their shares was set aside.

Gulab Singh had died leaving a widow and five sons, Ganga Prasad, Pitambar, Chokhe Singh, Kunjal and Sher Singh. The widow was Musummat Rukmin.

The sons partitioned the estate of Gulab and by reason thereof each of them and the widow got a one-sixth in Gulab Singh's share of the Mauza Ametha.

This was the state of affairs when the property was sold. Baldeo and Kesri rescued their one-third shares from the sale as stated above.

Gulab's eldest son Ganga Prasad and his widow Rukmin borrowed Rs. 1,700 from one Bhura Singh on 8th October 1900, giving him a simple mortgage of the two one-sixth shares held by them in Gulab's share of Ametha. With the money thus borrowed they paid up the remainder of Jasram's decree and the sale of Gulab's share was also set aside.

The other four sons of Gulab contributed nothing to the rescue of the share from the sale.

Bhura Singh on 15th September 1906 brought a suit for sale on the basis of his mortgage against Ganga Prasad and Musummat Rukmin. He also impleaded two prior mortgagees. He obtained a preliminary decree for sale on 17th January 1907 conditional on his paying off the prior mortgages.

On 26th March 1903 he assigned his decree to the present plaintiffs, whose names were brought on the record as decree-holders on 12th July 1909. Then Musummat Rukmin died and the case was continued against Ganga Prasad alone, apparently on the ground that he and his mother were living jointly. At any rate the other sons of Gulab were not made parties to the suit. Of these four sons one Pitambar had also died prior to the death of Rukmin. On 8th February 1910 the plaintiffs obtained an order absolute for sale. They paid off the prior mortgagees as directed by the decree. On 20th September 1910 the mortgaged property (i.e., the shares of Ganga Prasad and Musummat Rukmin) was put to sale and purchased by the plaintiffs. They then applied for mutation of names after obtaining formal delivery of possession.

They were opposed by the other sons of Musummat Rukmin, who pleaded that there had been no partition in the family; that the name of Rukmin had been entered for her consolation after the death of Gulab; that she had no share and no legal power to mortgage any share.

The Revenue Court granted mutation in respect only of the one-sixth share of Ganga Prasad and refused it in respect to the one-sixth share which had stood in the name of Rukmin.

The plaintiffs then brought the present suit for possession of the share of Rukmin. They impleaded all the living members of the family, including the widow of Pitambar and also a transferee Durjan Singh, who had purchased the rights of Chokhe Singh (son of Gulab Singh) including the share he had inherited from Rukmin.

They pleaded that after the partition between the sons and widow of Gulab Singh, the widow and Ganga Prasad continued to live jointly and that on her death Ganga Prasad alone inherited her one-sixth share.

In defence it was pleaded that there had been no partition, that Rukmin's name had been recorded for consolation and she had no power to mortgage, and that her other sons were not liable to pay the debt which she had contracted. That in any case they were not bound by the order absolute as they had not been made parties to the suit.

Durjan Singh also pleaded that he had purchased Chokhe Singh's property under a decree on a mortgage prior to that under which the plaintiffs had purchased.

The Court of first instance held

(1) That Rukmin was the owner of the share which stood in her name and that it was her stridhan, it having come to her on partition between the sons;

(2) that she had power to mortgage;

(3) that she and Ganga Prasad were not joint;

(4) that the other sons of Gulab not having been made parties to the suit on Rukmin's death were not bound by the decree and the suit, therefore, must fail.

It passed no decision on the 2nd and 3rd issues framed by it and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed and pleaded

(1) that the decree in execution of which the property had been sold was based on a bond executed in lieu of a debt due from

Gulab Singh for the payment of which all the heirs of Gulab Singh were liable;

(2) that after the partition Ganga Prasad and Rukmin lived jointly;

(3) that Rukmin's share was not her stridhan nor was it inherited by her sons on her death;

(4) that the property having been sold to satisfy an ancestral debt, the other heirs of Gulab Singh were bound by the sale and could not now object and the plaintiffs were entitled to possession.

It was pointed out that the first Court had not decided two of the issues. The lower Appellate Court states in its judgment that the first Court had held the partition not proved. This appears to be an error. The first Court's judgment is not very good, but it clearly held in favour of the partition for it held that Rukmin's share became her stridhan. It held it not proved that after the partition Rukmin and Ganga Prasad remained joint and held jointly. The lower Appellate Court held that there had been a partition and that after that the widow and Ganga Prasad remained joint, that the estate which the widow got, in the absence of all evidence to show that she got an absolute estate with the consent of the sons, was an ordinary widow's estate which on her death went to the reversioners of her husband. The Court then concluded its judgment in the following words: "It is complained that the lower Court has not decided the suit on its merits. This is not so; he has held rightly, though he does not give his authority, that Musammat Rukmin was not empowered to mortgage and has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on this ground. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

Here the Appellate Court has again erred. The first Court's decision on the first issue is as follows: "Rukmin's name is recorded in the revenue papers over one-sixth of Gulab's estate. I think she owned and possessed that share and was authorised to mortgage it." The first Court dismissed the suit simply on the ground that the other heirs of Gulab not having been made parties to the suit were not bound by the decree (or rather the order absolute).

The plaintiffs come here on second appeal. They accept the finding that the estate which

KUNDAN SINGH v. SURJA KUAR.

Rukmin took on partition was that of a Hindu widow with limited powers, there being no evidence to show that at the time of partition an absolute estate was granted to her.

It is urged (1) that on the facts found all that the defendants (other than Ganga Prasad) are entitled to, is an opportunity to redeem because they were not made parties to the suit of Bhure Singh on the death of Musammāt Rukmin as they ought to have been.

(2) That in any case Ganga Prasad was bound by the decree and he took one-fourth of Rukmin's share on her death, being one of the four surviving sons, one Pitambar having died beforehand leaving only a widow, and that the plaintiffs are entitled at least to recover one-fourth of the share in dispute.

One point is clear. In so far as the one-fourth share which Ganga Prasad took in Rukmin's one-sixth share is concerned, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to a decree for possession. There remain the rights of the other sons and the question is, whether in the circumstances the plaintiffs are entitled to any relief and if so, to what relief as against them. The second issue framed by the Court of first instance requires no decision, for if Durjan Singh purchased at a sale under a mortgage prior to that which Musammāt Rukmin created, then that mortgage could not cover Musammāt Rukmin's share which is the property now in dispute, a share which only came to Chokhe Singh on Rukmin's death. Moreover Rukmin's mortgage was made to save the estate of Gulab Singh which had been put up to sale under a mortgage created by Gulab Singh himself. It seems to me clear that as regards three-fourths of the property now in suit the plaintiffs' case must fail. No suit could now be brought to enforce the mortgage against the other sons of Gulab as it is apparently barred by time. The order absolute which was obtained against Ganga Prasad alone cannot bind the other three sons who were not made parties. My attention has been called to that decision.

The problem for solution may, shorn of all unnecessary facts, be briefly stated as follows:—

A Hindu (Gulab Singh) mortgaged his property (one-third of Ametha). He then died leaving five sons and a widow. The sons partitioned the estate and each got a one-sixth share, and a one-sixth went to the widow (Rukmin). The widow and one son continued to live together.

The mortgagee sued the widow and all the sons and got a decree for sale and the property was actually sold. The widow and one son (Ganga Prasad) then mortgaged their own shares, obtained money thereby, paid it into Court and the sale of all six shares was set aside.

The widow clearly mortgaged her share to pay off a debt which was legally binding on the estate and on all her sons, who were reversioners to the share which she had taken on partition and also were co-judgment-debtors of hers. There was thus clear binding necessity.

A decree for sale was obtained against her. She then died and only one of her sons, Ganga Prasad (out of the four who survived her), was made a party as her heir. The order absolute was made as against him and the property has been sold and purchased by the plaintiffs.

As for Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (1), on the basis of which it is pleaded that the decree against Ganga Prasad binds the other heirs of Musammāt Rukmin, with all due deference to the learned Judges who decided that case, I cannot agree with them. It is not shown to me that that decision has been followed by the Madras or any other High Court. That decision goes so far as to hold that if on the death of a defendant, on the application of the plaintiff the name of anybody be brought upon the record, though such person may be only one of several legal representatives or may not be the true legal representative, the decree will be binding and good as against legal representatives who have not been made parties, in the absence of fraud. It is possible for a true legal representative to have no knowledge of the suit and if not made a party, he may have no opportunity of redeeming a mortgage before execution and final sale of the property.

Prior to the present Civil Procedure Code, under the rulings of this Court, an application for an order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act was held to be an application in execution of the decree for sale and had to be made within three years of the decree. No such application could be made now as against the three other sons of Gulab. Rukmin and Gulab were both dead when the application was made in the present case. The sons of Gulab were the owners of the property in suit. Proceedings ought to have been taken against them all. As regards the rights of those who were not made parties the order absolute and the sale are of no effect. I cannot hold that Ganga Prasad represented their interests. They were separate from him in every way.

The share of Ganga Prasad, however, clearly passed to the present plaintiffs and they are entitled to possession thereof. The result is that I admit the appeal to this extent. I grant the plaintiffs a decree for possession of one-fourth of Musammāt Rukmin's one-sixth share. They will recover their proportionate costs in all Courts as against Ganga Prasad. Their claim in regard to the remaining three-fourths must fail and in regard thereto I uphold the decrees of the Courts below.

In the circumstances of the case, however, I direct the defendants to bear their own costs in all Courts."

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts connected with this appeal are fully stated in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court and it is unnecessary to repeat them. Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, on behalf of the appellants, strongly relies upon the ruling in Malkarjun v. Narhari (2). In the present case the plaintiffs sued for possession. Their title depends upon an auction-sale in the execution of a mortgage-decree. In the case relied upon the defendant was in possession. In the present case the plaintiff is not in possession but seeks possession and he must succeed upon the strength of his own title. Furthermore there is this great distinction between the two cases. In the case relied upon the property had been sold in execution of a simple money-decree which had been obtained during the lifetime of the judgment-debtor. In the present case only a decree nisi (as it was then called) had been obtained during the lifetime of Musammāt Rukmin. It was not until after her death and in the absence of her heirs except one that the order absolute was obtained. It seems to us, therefore, that there was not in existence any decree under which the interests of the other heirs could be sold. We think, therefore, that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court was correct and should be affirmed. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 26th November 1914, confirming that of the Munsif, Khamgaon, dated the 4th October 1911.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. R. Dixit, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lal Mohan Vivian Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant has been the victim of his friends. A decree was passed against him by the Munsif of Khamgaon on the 4th October 1911. An application for copies of the judgment and decree was made on the 30th October 1911, and the copies were prepared and delivered on the 19th December 1911. Mr. G. V. Karnik, a Pleader of Berar, was retained by the appellant, and he prepared the memorandum of appeal and signed it on the 25th January 1912. On the same date a power-of-attorney was executed in his favour and accepted and signed by him. Thereafter instead of doing his work and presenting the appeal, he appears to have delegated that duty to another Pleader, Mr. R. M. Gupte, who irregularly added his signature to Mr. Karnik's power-of-attorney, and, on the same day, persuaded an ill-informed or careless clerk to accept the appeal. The clerk's endorsement reads:—

"Presented by Mr. R. M. Gupte, Pleader, beyond time and duly stamped."

The appeal was then 32 days beyond time, and was rejected by the lower Appellate Court on the 31st January 1912. On the 7th June 1912 the appellant appealed to this Court (Second Appeal No. 144-B of 1912), and, on the 18th January 1913, Hallifax, A. J. C., directed the lower Appellate Court to consider whether there was sufficient cause for the delay in presenting the appeal to justify an extension of time. After due inquiry the lower Appellate Court extended time, and, on the 14th August 1913, admitted the appeal for hearing. The hearing was fixed for the 27th January 1914, but the appeal was adjourned unheard by two consecutive Judges until it came before a third on the 16th November 1914, when objection was taken that the appeal had not been duly presented. This objection prevailed, and, on the 26th November 1914, the learned Additional District Judge, following the decision in Muhammad Ali Khan v. Sukhu (1) [which was confirmed in appeal Mohammad Ali Khan v. Jasram (2)], dismissed the appeal. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court [following an earlier decision of the same tribunal cited as Pokhpal Singh v. Damber Singh (3), which I have been unable to find] held that a Pleader whose name is omitted from the body of the vakalatnamah is not a duly appointed Pleader, and an appeal presented by him is not properly presented, even though the omission might be only due to an oversight. It was also held that the fact that no objection was taken till a very late stage would not validate the appointment of a Pleader which was not made properly.

From the above decree the present appeal was made 125 days later, and it is only brought just within time by allowing 36 days as requisite for obtaining copies.

It is obvious that the appellant has no locus standi. From such experience as I have had of Berar, a practice appears to me to be growing up among Pleaders of orally delegating their duties to one another. This is a form of laxity which cannot be recognized because it is distinctly illegal, as was pointed out in Shivdayal Ramcharan v. Khetu Gangu (4). It is also obviously irregular; and when it goes, as it did in this case, to the extent of delegating the important duty of presenting a memorandum of appeal to a Pleader not appointed by the appellant, who signs a power not given to him, the procedure borders upon professional misconduct. We do not find here, as was the case before the Allahabad Judges, a belated objection to a mere inadvertent omission from the body of the vakalatnamah of the name of a Pleader whom the appellant desired to appoint. Here there was no power at all in favour of the Pleader who presented the appeal, but his unauthorized and improper signature on a power given to another Pleader; and objection was taken at the first hearing, inter partes. I concur in the views of the learned Judges in the Allahabad and Bombay cases above cited. It makes no difference that Mr. Gupte professedly appeared for the appellant on the 31st January 1912 by himself, and on the 27th January 1914 and 22nd June 1914 with Mr. Karnik. It is obvious that these appearances were equally without authority. But even if they had been duly authorized by a power-of-attorney subsequently obtained from the appellant, that could not have validated the presentation of the appeal. The provisions of Order III, rule 4, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, are clear and imperative, and the Courts have no power to relax them. An act or appearance by any Pleader, not duly appointed by the person for whom he is to act, is no act or appearance in law. I do not say that where a Pleader is expressly empowered to employ a colleague to act for or with him he may not make the appointment. But if he does so, he must obey Order III, rule 4 (1), of the Civil Procedure Code. The only exception is that provided by clause (3) of the same rule. Where a Pleader, duly authorized by a power-of-attorney to act in this behalf, appoints a legal practitioner of the classes described in clause (3) to act for him, the latter is of course not under any obligation to produce written authority. But if the Pleader appointing him has no express written authority to appoint a Barrister or Advocate, the latter cannot legally appear for him. It will be well if the Bar will give special attention to these provisions of the law, and regulate their practice accordingly, so as to avoid such failures of duty and loss to parties as the unauthorized delegation of work must involve.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaratory suit—Consequential relief—Mahant, suit for removal of, and declaration of plaintiff's right to nominate successor, maintainability of.

A suit lies for removal of a mahant and for a declaration that plaintiff has the right to nominate a new mahant, without asking any further relief. In such a suit the prayer for removal of the defendant from the office does not imply his physical dispossession, all that is sought being a decree which would enable the successor on appointment to enforce his own right to take possession of the property. JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case is as to the mahantship of the institution known as "Murti Ram Wali" Dharamsala situated in Katra Nihal Singh, Amritsar.

The late Mahant Tulsi Ram died shortly before the institution of this suit. Defendant is Tulsi Ram's elder brother. Just before he died Tulsi Ram executed a Will in favour of defendant, describing him as his chela and leaving everything to him subject to the control of one Bhai Dyal Singh. Defendant has now taken possession, and plaintiff who claims to have the right to nominate a successor to the mahantship sues to have defendant removed and to have it declared that plaintiff has the right to nominate a new mahant. According to plaintiff Tulsi Ram left no chela, and plaintiff bases his claim to appoint a successor on two grounds, (1) that he is spiritually related to Tulsi Ram (see the tree on page 8 of the paper-book) and (2) that he is the mahant of the parent shrine.

The first Court dismissed the suit. The Divisional Judge on appeal held that the Will, though executed by Tulsi Ram while in his full senses, incorrectly described defendant as chela. The learned Divisional Judge disbelieved the oral evidence as to defendant having been appointed a chela, and held that the mere execution of the Will gave defendant no right to succeed, and that plaintiff, as mahant of the parent institution, had a right to nominate a successor subject to the confirmation of the fraternity. So the Divisional Judge gave a decree declaring that plaintiff had a right to nominate a successor to the mahantship subject to the confirmation of the fraternity and to remove defendant from the office of mahant.

Defendant appeals, and the first ground of appeal is that the suit in its present form does not lie as a suit for possession could be brought. Rai Sahib Mul Chand cites Abdul Kadar v. Mahomed (1), Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Srinivasa Swami (2) and Srinivasa Swami v. Ramanuja Chariar (3). The first of those rulings is distinguishable, as in the present case plaintiff does not claim that he is entitled to succeed to the mahantship himself nor does he seek possession for himself. In Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Srinivasa Swami (2) the claim was brought by three of the disciples of a mutt, asking (1) for a declaration that defendant was not the duly appointed successor of the late head of the mutt and (2) that the Court should fill up the vacancy by appointing a successor. The suit failed as it was held that plaintiffs could have asked further that the mutt and its properties should be handed over to the person appointed as successor and the defendant should be ejected. In Srinivasa Swami v. Ramanuja Ohariar (3) a somewhat similar suit was thrown out, it being held that it would be for the disciples to appoint a successor and that the defendant might take objection to the person appointed and then another suit would be necessary, whereas if an appointment was first made and the person appointed brought a suit everything could be settled in the one suit. These rulings seem to be in defendant's favour.

Butin Bawa Mangal Das v. Mahant Narinjan Das (4), a suit in which certain plaintiffs sued to eject a mahant for misconduct and for a declaration that they were entitled to nominate a successor, it was held that plaintiffs were not seeking possession for themselves, that the prayer for removal of defendant from the office did not imply his physical dispossession, and that all that was sought was a decree which would enable the successor on appointment to enforce his own right to take possession of the property. This ruling seems to us a good guide, and we prefer to follow it rather than the Madras ruling. Heretoo a decree for removal from the post of mahant does not necessarily mean defendant's physical removal from the property. When a successor is duly appointed he can eject defendant from possession of the property, bringing a suit if necessary. But there cannot be two mahants, and until defendant is removed from the office and the office thus becomes vacant, how can any successor be appointed? It is a good thing to avoid multiplicity of suits as far as possible, but it is the successor, and not plaintiff, who will have a right to claim physical possession, and so long as defendant remains mahant no successor can be appointed.

It may be said that defendant is not really the mahant, but he is at least de facto mahant, at present. Granting that he is only a trespasser and that his presence is no bar to the appointment of a mahant, and that the person so appointed will be able to sue for possession, the mere fact that in the future another person will be entitled to sue for physical possession seems to us no legal bar to giving plaintiff a declaratory decree in the present case.

The finding that defendant is not a chela of Tulsi Ram is one of fact, and cannot be disputed in second appeal. That the mahant could not nominate an outsider as his successor merely by Will is a point on which we have no doubt whatever.

But it is urged on behalf of defendant that the lower Appellate Court has found that plaintiff is entitled to nominate on a ground which plaintiff never advanced in the pleadings in the first Court, viz., that plaintiff is the mahant of the parent institution. It is denied that plaintiff is the mahant of a parent institution, and it is pointed out that there is no evidence to justify a finding that he is. Further it is urged that plaintiff as an Arya Samajist is disqualified from right of appointment. All this is, however, of little real consequence and to order further enquiry would be useless trouble, for any nomination, whether by the plaintiff or by any one else, is subject to the confirmation of the fraternity, so it is really the fraternity who will have the last say in the matter. Each party before us claimed to have the support of the bhek behind it. Recognizing that the bhek have the last word in the matter, and that without their confirmation plaintiff is powerless, Rai Sahib Mul Chand withdrew opposition to the lower Appellate Court's decree, provided that it was added that defendant should not be dispossessed from the property till a successor had been nominated and the nomination had been duly confirmed.

This is a reasonable settlement of the whole case. If plaintiff has not the support of the bhek he is powerless and it is useless for him to move in the matter. If he has the support of the bhek, the sooner he nominates a successor and gets his nomination confirmed by the bhek the better.

We accept the appeal only to this extent that we add to the decree of the learned Divisional Judge a condition that defendant shall not be deprived of the physical possession of the dharamsala and of any property which may belong to the dharamsala until a successor has been duly appointed and the appointment has been confirmed by the fraternity. The plaintiff, if he wished to succeed on the score of being mahant of the parent institution, should have stated this clearly in the pleadings, so that proper enquiry on this point might have been made. We, therefore, decline to allow him costs. The parties will bear their own costs in all Courts.

Appeal accepted.

RESPONDENT.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), s. 65A—'Protected' gaontia, whether can surrender tenure—Gaontia, power of, to confer permanent rights—Adverse possession, nature and commencement of.

Plaintiff's ancestor, who was zemindar of the village in dispute, granted a lease of it in gaontia tenure to one D, and fresh leases were in succession granted to his son and grandson, the last named becoming a 'protected' gaontia under section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881. On his death in 1900, his second son K was recorded as gaontia, and in 1907 the latter surrendered the tenure to the plaintiff. In 1911 plaintiff sued defendants for possession of the lands, and the latter, all of whom belonged to the family of the gaontia, resisted the zemindar's claim on the grounds that K had no power to surrender the tenure to the plaintiff, that they had been in adverse possession of the lands both as against the gaontia and as against the zemindar and that the suit was barred by limitation:

Held, (1) that there was nothing in the incidents of the tenure of a "protected" gaontia, as set out in section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, which in any way suggested that a gaontia was not entitled to relinquish his rights; [p. 109, col. 1.]

(2) that the suit was not barred by limitation as possession could not be adverse to a person who was not himself entitled to claim present possession, and so long as the gaontia tenure subsisted, the zemindar was not entitled to actual possession of any portion of the village and the possession of the defendants did not become adverse to the plaintiff until the tenure was relinquished in 1907. [p. 109, col. 2; p. 109, col. 1.]

LAL NARUPRAJA SINGH v. BHABANI TELI.

A gaontia cannot confer rights of a permanent character in the village which would be binding upon the zemindar after the gaontia tenure ceases to exist. [p. 109, col. 1.]

Mr. Priyanath Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—This appeal is connected with Second Appeals Nos. 2879 and 2880 of 1914 and this judgment will govern all three appeals.

The appellant brought the three suits out of which these appeals have arisen for the possession of plots of land in Mouza Sargipali, of which the appellant is the zemindar. The facts are that in 1845 an ancestor of the appellant leased the village in gaontia tenure to one Dhunda. Fresh leases were given in succession to the latter's son Gajadhar and grandson Karuna. The last-named, who became a "protected" gaontia under section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, died in 1900, leaving three sons of whom Mohan was the eldest. Mohan would have succeeded in the ordinary course to the position of gaontia, but he resigned in favour of the second son Kuber who was then recorded as gaontia. In 1907 Kuber surrendered the tenure to the zemindar. The respondent in Second Appeal No. 2878 is a younger brother of Karuna, the respondent in Second Appeal No. 2879 is a nephew of Karuna, and the respondent in Second Appeal No. 2880 is a cousin of Karuna. All three are, therefore, closely related to the men who have held the village as gaontia. The plots held by the respondents are part of the bhogra land of the village. Here it may be explained that the rent payable by a gaontia to his zemindar was usually the sum which the gaontia was expected to collect from the tenants. His profit or remuneration for collecting the rents was what he could get out of the bhogra lands, which appear to be not unlike what are known elsewhere as sir lands. Many years ago, it is not known when, the bhogra lands were divided up amongst the members of the gaontia's family, probably in order to supply them with separate maintenance. When Kuber relinquished the tenure in 1907, the zemindar obtained possession of the bhogra plots held by other members of the family, but the respondents to these appeals refused to give up the plots held by them.

The questions for decision are (i) whether the respondents were bound to give the plots up to the zemindar and (ii) if so, whether these suits were brought within limitation. The learned District Judge has answered the first question in the affirmative, but the second in the negative.

The learned Vakil for the respondents concedes that a gaontia of the kind now in question was, before the passing of Act XII of 1898, by which section 65A was inserted in the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881, no more than a thikadar or farmer of the village. This is in accordance with the opinion expressed by Mr. Nethersole in his Settlement Report. I have had no experience of cases relating to the tenures of a gaontia of this kind, but I assume that the learned Vakil is right in saying that a gaontia was before 1898 no more than a thikadar.

Section 65A provides that the Settlement Officer may in certain circumstances declare a gaontia to be "protected" for the purpose of that section, or give him the right of an occupancy tenant in respect of the whole or part of the land in his cultivation. The Settlement Officer may also fix the jama payable by the gaontia. The incidents of the tenure of a "protected" gaontia are set out, namely, that the tenure is heritable but not transferable and descends to a single heir in accordance with certain rules. It is common ground that formerly, at all events, a gaontia of this kind could not sublet his rights, and it is clear that he could not create in the village any tenure of a permanent character which would hold good after his lease came to an end.

The respondents say that they have been in possession of the lands in suit for a great many years (an assertion which is not disputed) and that their possession has been adverse not only to the gaontia for the time being, but also to the zemindar.

But possession cannot be adverse to a person who is not himself entitled to claim present possession. So long as the gaontia tenure subsisted, the zemindar was not entitled to actual possession of any portion of the village. The possession of the respondents did not become adverse to the appellant till the tenure was relinquished in 1907. The presentsuits were instituted in 1911 and were, therefore, within time.

The first Court found that the relinquishment was a collusive transaction and a sham, but the lower Appellate Court found that it was a reality and valid. It was contended before us that a "protected" gaontia is unable to relinquish his rights. No authority was cited in support of this contention, and I can discover nothing in the incidents of the tenure of a "protected" gaontia as set out in section 65A of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act which in any way suggests that a gaontia is not entitled to relinquish his rights. The land held by the respondents seems to have come into their possession even before Karuna became gaontia. Karuna and after him Kuber seem to have held under independent leases. If so, it cannot be said that by relinquishing the tenure Kuber was acting against the interests of his own grantees or the grantees of any person through whom he claimed. This point, however, is not of any importance, for as already stated, a gaontia could not confer rights of a permanent character in the village which would be binding upon the zemindar after the gaontia's tenure ceases to exist.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the respondents are not entitled to retain the lands in suit and these suits are not barred by limitation. I would allow these appeals and decree the claims in these suits with costs in all three Courts. The amount of mesne profit claimed will be ascertained by the Court of first instance.

Insolvency proceedings—Creditor setting up debtor's

Where a debtor applied to be declared an insolvent and one of the creditors objected, asserting that the debtor and his sons formed a joint Hindu family owning considerable property not notified in the schedule:

Held, that an order of adjudication should not be passed in favour of the debtor merely on his statement as to the non-existence of the joint family, without giving an opportunity to the creditor of proving his assertion.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge Gonda, dated the 18th December 1915.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Ram Lal applied to be declared an insolvent. An order of adjudication has been made by the learned District Judge declaring him to be an insolvent. One of the creditors objected, asserting that Ram Lal and his sons were joint and that the joint family owned considerable property which had not been notified in the schedule. The learned District Judge took the statement of Ram Lal and on that statement decided that he was not joint with his sons. The objecting creditor appeals. I find that the objecting creditor was not given an opportunity of proving that Ram Lal was joint with his sons. While it may be taken that the presumption in favour of a jointness of the Hindu family was removed by the statement of Ram Lal, the objecting creditor should have been given an opportunity of adducing evidence to the contrary.

I accordingly set aside the order of the learned District Judge declaring Ram Lal to be an insolvent, and direct that proceedings be re-opened and that inquiry be made as to whether Ram Lal is or is not a member of the joint Hindu family with his sons and whether that joint family possesses property. Both parties will be permitted to adduce such evidence as they may wish upon the point. Ram Lal will pay his own costs in these proceedings and those of the appellant.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), s. 56, order under—Land Acquisition Judge's power to disregard order—Jurisdiction.

An order of the District Judge in his lunacy jurisdiction that a certain sum of money, which was in deposit with the Land Acquisition Judge to the credit of a lunatic, should be paid out to his natural guardian who was maintaining the lunatic and his family, is in accordance with section 56 of Act IV of 1912, and the Land Acquisition Judge has no jurisdiction to refuse to pay out the particular sum as directed by the order. [p. 111, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Special Land Acquisition Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 1st June 1915.

FACTS appear from the following extracts from the verified petition of the natural guardian of the lunatic and from the orders of the District Judge and of the Land Acquisition Judge:—

(PETITION OF LUNATIC'S GUARDIAN.)

1. That your petitioner is the brother and natural guardian of Babu Jnanendra Nath Dey, a lunatic, who is at present residing in the Lunatic Asylum at Berhampur.

2. That your petitioner has been maintaining the said lunatic and his family at your petitioner's expense and is now finding it difficult to meet the just expenses incurred on those accounts.

3. That the Land Acquisition Collector of Alipur acquired the ancestral dwelling-house of your petitioner and of the said lunatic and made in favour of the lunatic an award of Rs. 592-0-7, being the share of the compensation money due to the said lunatic, and deposited the same with the Land Acquisition Judge of Alipur to the credit of the lunatic.

4. That on the 15th of September 1914, your petitioner applied to the District Judge of 24-Pargannas in lunacy jurisdiction praying for an order that the money deposited with the Land Acquisition Judge might be paid to your petitioner in order to enable your petitioner to meet the expenses of maintaining the said lunatic and his family, and filed receipts from the Lunatic Asylum for sums actually paid by your petitioner for the maintenance of lunatic.

5. That the learned District Judge granted the said prayer ordering that the sum of Rs. 200 might be paid out to your petitioner for the present, and gave liberty to your petitioner to apply for further sums in future with receipts from the Asylum. A copy of the said order is annexed to this petition and marked A.

6. That thereupon your petitioner applied to the learned Land Acquisition Judge praying for an order allowing your petitioner to withdraw the sum of Rs. 200, all the reversioners of the lunatic joining in the prayer. But the learned Land Acquisition Judge rejected the application, holding that your petitioner was not entitled to withdraw the money inasmuch as your petitioner had not been appointed guardian of the lunatic by the Court, and directed on the 1st of January 1913 that the sum in deposit should be invested in $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Government promissory notes. A copy of this order is annexed hereto and marked B.

(ORDER ON PETITION BY THE DISTRICT JUDGE, DATED THE 15TH SEPTEMBER 1914.)

A.

I am not prepared to pay over the whole sum to the applicant without some guarantee, although it appears that he has been supporting the lunatic for some months. I allow him to draw Rs. 200 and when he wants more he may apply again with receipts from the Asylum.

(ORDER OF LAND ACQUISITION JUDGE, DATED THE 17TH APRIL 1915.)

B.

To-day the Pleader for Babu Satyendra Nath Dey renewed his application verbally for orders on his petition of the 18th December 1914. The sum due to the lunatic has now been received. The money can be dealt with under the Lunatic Asylums Act, and I cannot hold that this Court which is a Court of Special Jurisdiction and Subordinate only to the High Court can act contrary to that Act. The only use that can be put with the money is by investing it in land or securities. I will hear the Pleader again on the 24th.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Petitioner.

RAMADHIN v. BISHESHAR DAYAL.

Babu Atul Chandra Dutt, for Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The order of the District Judge appears to be in accordance with section 56 of Act IV of 1912, the provisions of which are the same as section 20 of Act XXXV of 1858 on which the learned Judge relies. The Land Acquisition Judge, therefore, has no jurisdiction to refuse to pay out the particular sum directed by the District Judge to be applied by the petitioner for the maintenance of the lunatic or his family. The Rule is, therefore, made absolute and the order complained of is set aside. There will be no order for costs as the Secretary of State leaves the matter in the hands of the Court and does not oppose.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66—Hindu Law—Joint Hindu family, separated members of, suit between—Applicability of s. 66—Appeal, plea of law, whether can be taken for first time in—Law prohibiting institution of certain suits—Partition, what constitutes.

A division of rights between the members of a joint Hindu family is sufficient to constitute a partition without actual physical division of the property itself. [p. 113, col. 1.]

If the law prohibits the institution of certain suits, effect must be given at any stage of a suit to the plea that the suit falls within such prohibition. Thus, a plea to the effect that a suit is barred by the provisions of section 66, Civil Procedure Code, can be raised for the first time in appeal. [p. 112, col. 2.]

The terms of section 66, Civil Procedure Code, do not apply to the case of a suit brought by one member of a joint Hindu family against another, inasmuch as such members are entitled, by operation of law and not by virtue of any private agreement or understanding, to treat as part of common property an acquisition made out of joint family funds. [p. 112, col. 2; p. 113, col. 1.]

But the section applies to a suit between the separated members of a joint Hindu family, irrespective of the fact that when separation took place, certain property belonging to the joint family was not actually divided. [p. 113, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 28th January 1915.

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Appellants.
Mr. Mohammad Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by three plaintiffs Ramadhin, Rameshar and Ram Sukh for the purpose of obtaining a declaration as to their title in certain items of immoveable property mentioned in the plaint. In appeal here we are concerned only with two of these items of property, one being a share in a village called Dharmapur and the other a share in a village named Dhanka. The defendants are related to the plaintiffs in the following way. One Bhagwandin had five sons, namely Ram Dayal, Ram Sukh, Ramadhin, Rameshar and Bisheshar Dayal. Of these Bisheshar Dayal is the first defendant in the case whilst Ramadhin, Rameshar and Ram Sukh are respectively plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The other brother Ram Dayal is now dead and has left four sons who are the second, third, fourth and fifth defendants in the case. The sixth defendant Gajraj is a son of the third plaintiff Ram Sukh. In paragraph 2 of the plaint it was alleged that the joint family to which these parties once belonged separated in the year 1894. It was said that a partition was effected in that year and that most of the joint family property was divided. It was further alleged that certain debts owing to the joint family were retained as joint property, the debts amounting in all to a sum of Rs. 6,000. It was further stated that from time to time certain of these debts had been realised and had been divided among the separated members of the family in accordance with their shares. Seven deeds of mortgage and of further charge were, however, specified in paragraph 2 of the plaint, in regard to which it was said that they still constituted property to which all the members of the family were entitled according to their shares. In the third paragraph of the plaint the case regarding the Dharmapur property was stated. It was alleged that this property had been purchased at a Court sale in the month of April 1897 by the plaintiffs, the first defendant and Ram Dayal, who was the father of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The date of the purchase was not specified in the plaint. It was said that these parties had contributed the money which was deposited in Court for the purchase of the property, and it is said that the money had been so deposited by the first defendant Bisheshar Dayal as representing the whole of the family and that accordingly the sale-certificate issued in the name of the defendant No. 1 alone. It was further alleged that this Dharmapur property was subject to a mortgage and two deeds of further charge which were mentioned in paragraph 2 of the plaint as still constituting property which had not been divided between the separated members of the family. So far as this Dharmapur property was concerned, Bisheshar Dayal the auction-purchaser set up a plea that he had purchased it out of his own money. The Court of first instance, after considering the documentary and oral evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that any money belonging to them had been devoted to the purchase of this Dharmapur property at the time of the auction-sale. The Subordinate Judge held that Bisheshar Dayal was the purchaser and owner of the property in question. At a previous hearing of the suit I held that it was necessary in the interest of justice to admit certain fresh evidence in the case and accordingly the case was adjourned, in order that the original record of the execution proceedings in the course of which the Dharmapur property was sold might be produced before the Court.

I have examined this record carefully and it appears to me that if the learned Judge of the Court below had this evidence before him, his findings of fact would probably have been different from what they are. It seems now that Dharmapur, instead of being purchased on the 20th of April 1897 as stated in the sale-certificate, was as a matter of fact knocked down to Bisheshar Dayal on the 28th of April. It was further proved by a reference to this file that one-fourth of the purchase-money, that is to say, Rs. 250 was deposited by Bisheshar Dayal in the Treasury on the 29th of April 1897. The balance of the purchase-money was paid into the Treasury on the 17th of May in the same year. It had been the case for the plaintiffs that they had contributed to this purchase money and they put forward a bond which was executed on the 28th of April 1897 for the purpose of raising the Rs. 250 which was deposited in Court on the 29th of that month. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the story about the borrowing of this money and the execution of the bond, on the ground that as the sale had taken place on the 20th of April it was impossible to suppose that the first instalment of the purchase-money could have been raised by loan on the 28th of April, that is to say, some eight days after the sale. The conclusions of the Subordinate Judge on this point are shown to be altogether erroneous by what is forthcoming from the record of the execution proceedings. I do not, however, propose to discuss the merits of the plaintiffs' case regarding this property, for it seems to me that the suit must fail in view of the plea which has been raised on behalf of the respondents to the effect that the suit in so far as it related to this Dharmapur property was absolutely barred by the provisions of section 63 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section lays down that no suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed, on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. The learned Counsel for the appellants has pointed out that this plea was not raised in the Courts below and he has, therefore, asked me not to allow it to be raised for the first time in appeal. It seems to me, however, that a plea of this kind cannot be ignored merely because it is put forward for the first time in appeal. If the law prohibits the institution of certain suits, I think that if it is made to appear at any stage that the suit in question falls within the prohibition effect must be given to the plea of law. I have, therefore, to examine whether this plea is sufficient to defeat the present suit in so far as it relates to this property which was purchased at the auction-sale. It has, of course, been held and is well established that the terms of section 66 do not apply to the case of a suit brought by one member of a Hindu joint family against another. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have held that the section does not affect the rights of members of a joint family who by operation of law, and not by virtue of any private agreement or understanding, are entitled to treat as part of common property an acquisition which has been made out of joint family funds. It is not possible for the plaintiffs to withdraw the present case from the purview of section 66 on the ground that the family was a joint Hindu family, for from what is stated in the pleadings it is the common case of both parties that the joint family broke up in the year 1894. It may be a fact that when the separation took place, certain property belonging to the joint family in the shape of debts secured by mortgage and otherwise was not actually divided, but be that as it may, it is perfectly clear that the family after the year 1894 was no longer a joint Hindu family. A division of rights between the members of a joint Hindu family is sufficient to constitute a partition without actual physical division of the property itself. It is not pretended in the plaint that the Dharmapur property was bought with money belonging to a common joint family fund, for there was no such fund in existence. On the contrary, the allegation was that the money which was applied to the purchase of this property was raised by the plaintiffs and by the father of the defendants Nos. 2 to 5, in short that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiffs by the defendant No. 1 with money a portion of which they, the plaintiffs, supplied. On this statement of the facts it is quite clear to me that section 66 does apply to this case and bars the suit. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs pointed out that had the plea been taken in the Court below, it might have been possible for him to establish the existence of facts which would have rendered this section inapplicable. But it appears to me that on the pleadings it would not have been possible for the plaintiffs to make out that this case was one other than a suit which was being brought for a declaration against the holder of the sale-certificate on the ground that the purchase had been made on behalf of the plaintiffs; that, and no other, is the case which was set out in the plaint. I am satisfied, therefore, that the suit as regards this Dharmapur property must fail.

The second item of property which is in dispute consists of a share in a village called Dhanka. According to the evidence this property was purchased in the year 1903 along with certain other property from a Pleader named Babu Shiam Lal. Three separate sale-deeds were executed in respect of three items of property consisting of shares in three villages named Suhela, Kalohra and Dhanka. The plaintiffs' case was that they and the defendants had contributed the money for the purchase of these properties in equal shares. The sale-deed of the share in Dhanka was executed in the name of the first defendant Bisheshar Dayal and of the sixth defendant Gajraj who, as already mentioned, is a son of the plaintiff No. 3. It is as well here to notice how the other sale-deeds were executed. The sale-deed relating to the share in Mauza Suhela was executed in the names of Rameshar and Sunder Lal who are respectively plaintiff No. 2 and defendant No. 2. The third sale-deed which relates to the share in Kalohra was executed in the name of Ramadhin, the first plaintiff, and Ram Dayal who is the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 5. The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that they contributed in equal shares to the purchase-money of this Dhanka property. The principal evidence in the case consists of the statement of the vendor Babu Shiam Lal, and certainly his evidence does not by any means establish the case which the plaintiffs put forward. All he could say in the matter was that he had agreed to sell this property for a sum of Rs. 5,400. He was unable to say which of the parties to the case conducted the negotiations for the sale of these properties, but he treated the whole thing as being a single bargain and he only executed the three sale deeds because he was desired to do so. Half of the purchase-money was paid to him at the time of the sale whilst the balance was allowed to remain on mortgage. It was quite impossible for the witness to say whether the plaintiffs had contributed any portion of the money which was paid to him. On the other hand, there was the statement of the first plaintiff Ramadhin which supported the case set out in the plaint. Ramadhin was asked why, if all these parties contributed the purchase-money in equal shares, the sale-deeds were not executed in all of their names. His answers to this question were very unsatisfactory. His first answer was that the three separate sale-deeds were executed because it was so decided among the members of the family. Then it was hinted that the sale-deeds were taken in this peculiar way in order to avoid suits for pre-emption, there being apparently some apprehension that such suits might be brought with respect to the Suhela and Kalohra property. The Subordinate Judge thought that this explanation of the form which the transaction took was very unconvincing, and I agree with him that any defence against a suit for pre-emption which these people might have had would have been equally well open to them if all had joined as parties to the conveyances which were executed. The learned Subordinate Judge also refers to certain facts which in his opinion militated against any theory of a joint purchase. He pointed out that Ram Sukh, the third plaintiff in the present case, was no party to any of the three deeds and that Sunder Lal and his father Ram Dayal were parties each to one of the deeds. From this circumstance the lower Court was led to the conclusion that the parties were purchasing on their own account and in the manner set out in the three deeds of sale. He further pointed out that the plaintiffs could produce no satisfactory documentary evidence of their possession over this property. On the other hand, such documentary evidence as was available was in favour of the defendant Bisheshar Dayal and the sixth defendant Gajraj who were recorded as being in possession. On a careful review of all the evidence in the case I come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge's decision regarding the Dhanka property must be upheld. I think the plaintiffs failed to prove what it was necessary for them to establish in order to entitle them to the declaration which they sought. These are the only two questions which arise for decision in the suit and they are both determined against the appellants whose appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 20 (c), 21—Jurisdiction—Breach of betrothal contract, suit for damages for—Court, jurisdiction of.

A Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit if the cause of action arose, wholly or in part, within the local limits of its jurisdiction. Therefore, a suit for the breach of a contract of betrothal can be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the breach took place, even though the defendants reside elsewhere. [p. 115, col. 1.]

A judgment of a Court which had no jurisdiction to try a suit should not be set aside, unless there has been a failure of justice by reason of the suit having been instituted at the wrong place. [p. 115, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 10th July 1915.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Charat Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's suit to recover a sum of Rs. 500, as damages for breach of a betrothal contract, was decreed in part by the Munsif, 1st class, Tarn Taran. Defendants appealed to the District Judge, and the first ground urged on their behalf was that the Munsif at Tarn Taran had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. The learned Judge, relying on Lorinda Mal v. Sewa Singh (1) and Buta v. Jagga (2), has upheld this objection, holding that the suit was cognizable only by the Court of the Sialkot District, where the parents of the girl reside. The learned Judge accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Court and returned the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Court competent to hear and decide the case.

Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and after hearing the learned Pleaders who appeared before me for their respective clients, I must accept the appeal and remand the case for further consideration to the District Judge. The authorities cited by him were decided at a time when the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 was in force, and at that time the words "cause of action," as used in section 17 of that Code, were construed to mean merely the infringement of the right. After the decision of the two cases cited, Explanation 3 was added to section 17 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and under section 20 (c) of the present Code a Court has jurisdiction when the cause of action wholly or in part arises within the local limits of its jurisdiction.

It is contended on behalf of plaintiff, and was so found by the Munsif, that the contract of betrothal was made at Tarn Taran and if such was the case, the Court of the Munsif at Tarn Taran would have jurisdiction to hear and decide the suit. Moreover, even if the Munsif at Tarn Taran had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, his judgment should not have been set aside unless the District Judge was satisfied that there had been a failure of justice by reason of the suit being instituted at the wrong place (see section 21, Civil Procedure Code).

I accordingly set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to re-consider the appeal before him in the light of the foregoing remarks. The costs in this Court will abide the event.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), s. 136G—Partition ordered by Deputy Commissioner—Appeal—Jurisdiction—Sambalpur Civil Courts Act (IV B. C. of 1906)—Deputy Commissioner and District Judge, positions of.

In the Sambalpur District, the District Judge

under the Bengal, N.-W. P. and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887) has succeeded to the position of the Deputy Commissioner under the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act (XVI of 1885). Therefore an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner under section 136D of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881) must be deemed to be an order of the District Judge and an appeal against it lies to the High Court and not to the District Court. [p. 116, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Sambalpur, dated the 15th July 1914, setting aside an order of the Deputy Collector, Sambalpur, dated the 17th July 1912.

Babus Ramesh Chundra Mazumdar and Janaki Nath Bose, for the Appellants.

Babu Prayanath Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—The appellants and six others applied to the Deputy Commissioner of Sambalpur, under section 136D of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), for partition of some bhogra lands in a village. The Deputy Commissioner declined to grant the application as regards six of the applicants, until the question in dispute had been determined by a competent Court. As regards the two appellants before us, he held that they were entitled to partition. There was an appeal to the District Judge, who was of opinion that the Deputy Commissioner had adopted an inconvenient course. He set aside the order of the Deputy Commissioner and remanded the case to him for a fresh decision. The appellants have appealed to this Court on the ground that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Deputy Commissioner. Section 136H of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881) provides, that all decrees and orders passed by a Deputy Commissioner under section 136G (the section under which the order of the Deputy Commissioner now in question was passed) deciding the right of partition, shall be held to be decrees and orders of a Court of civil judicature and shall be open to appeal as if passed by the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, acting as a Court of civil judicature of first instance under the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885. Under section 8 of the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885, the Deputy Commissioner was to be deemed to be the District Judge of the District and his Court to be the District Court or principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the District. The Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885, was repealed by the Central Provinces Courts Act (II of 1904), which provided for the establishment of four new grades of Courts, the Divisional Court, the District Court, the Court of the Subordinate Judge and the Court of the Munsif. Section 13, subsection (1) (c), of that Act provided that the District Court should be deemed to be the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the civil district. From this it appears that the District Court was substituted for the Court of the Deputy Commissioner as the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the District. Bengal Act (IV of 1906) repealed the Central Provinces Courts Act, 1904, as regards the District of Sambalpur and extended to that District in its place the Bengal, North-Western Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887. Under section 18 of the last mentioned Act the jurisdiction of a District Judge or Subordinate Judge extends, subject to the provisions of section 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to all original suits for the time being cognisable by Civil Courts. But the Court of the District Judge is superior to that of the Subordinate Judge and is the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction in the District. It is thus clear that the District Judge under the Bengal, N.-W.-P. and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, has succeeded to the position of the Deputy Commissioner as District Judge under the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885. An appeal lies against the decree of a District Judge in a suit of any value, however small, to the High Court. It is contended before us that the decision of the Deputy Commissioner in the present case, which is valued at Rs. 120 only, should be treated as the decision of a Subordinate Judge because, if the suit had been one of a purely civil nature, it would have lain in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. As a matter of fact it appears that it would have lain in the Court of a Munsif, but the value of the suit is irrelevant for the purpose of deciding the present question. In my opinion, the Court of the District Judge has taken the place of the Court of the Deputy Commissioner as the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction under the Act of 1885 and, therefore, the decision of the Deputy Commissioner in the present case must be deemed to have been a decision of a District Judge. The appeal, therefore, lay to this Court and not to the District Court. I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the memorandum of appeal to the District Judge be returned to the respondent for presentation to the proper Court. The respondent must pay the costs of the appellants in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent on the one side and the defendants-appellants on the other side are riayas living in a village and having the ordinary right of riayas over their dwelling-houses. The dispute is with regard to a piece of unoccupied land lying between the houses of the two parties. The plaintiff-respondent has asserted that this plot of land is land appurtenant to his dwelling-house always used by him and that the defendants-appellants have constructed buildings over a portion of this land and ousted him from its possession. The defendants-appellants, while admitting that they have constructed the buildings, deny any ouster. They state that the land is land appurtenant to their dwelling-house and that the plaintiff-respondent has never been in possession of the same. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the land in question is land appurtenant to the dwelling-house of the plaintiff-respondent and that the plaintiff-respondent has been in possession thereof within twelve years of the date of suit. He decreed the claim of the plaintiff-respondent for possession of the land and removal of buildings.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has argued that riya, such as the plaintiff-respondent is, cannot maintain a suit in ejectment with regard to such land. In support of this proposition he has referred to a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court—Basdeo Rai v. Dwarka Ram (1). That decision, however, does not support his view. It lays down a proposition that a licensee who has been ejected by his licensor from the land that he holds under the license cannot sue the licensor for recovery of possession but only for damages. Here the case is absolutely different. A licensee has every right to recover possession from a third party on proof of trespass. I accept as legal the findings of fact to the effect that the land in question is appurtenant to the dwelling-house of the plaintiff-respondent and forms a portion of the land which he holds under license, and further that he has been in possession of this land within twelve years of the date of suit. In the circumstances the plaintiff-respondent has been rightly awarded the relief which he has obtained from the learned Subordinate Judge.

I dismiss this appeal. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Judge, Alipore, 24 Parganas, dated the 4th March 1915, affirming that of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Alipore, 24 Parganas, dated the 13th August 1913.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"In this case the plaintiffs, who are the heirs and representatives of Sewdutt Roy deceased alleged that on the 15th of December 1908 the defendant Isaac Ezekiel Mordecai took an advance from Sewdutt Roy on a promissory note of Rs. 1,000. On the 1st of February 1909 he took another sum of Rs. 1,000 advanced, and at the end of February he wanted a further advance of Rs. 500. The loans were taken for the benefit of both the defendants Isaac Ezekiel and his wife Esther Isaac Ezekiel Mordecai. It was then arranged that defendant No. 2 who held certain properties at Dum Dum would deposit her title-deeds with Sewdutt Roy as security. Accordingly the title-deeds were deposited on the 1st of March 1909, and a further advance of Rs. 500 was taken, a promissory note being taken at the same time, and after that a memorandum was given to Sewdutt as a further evidence of the equitable mortgage. This transaction took place within the town of Calcutta at No. 2, New China Bazar, the property mortgaged being the garden at Dum Dum. The defendant No. 1 states that he alone took the money and executed the handnote and his wife had nothing to do with them. He states that he made over the title-deeds of the property in suit for inspection only, as Sewdutt was thinking of purchasing it.

The defendant No. 2, the wife, supports him. She said she knew nothing of the loan and supports the story of the intention of Sewdutt to purchase. She did not know English properly and signed the chit without knowing what she was doing."

The memorandum which Sewdutt took from the two defendants reads thus:—"Dear Sir,—As desired we send herewith title-deeds of our premises at Dum Dum as security against your advance to us. Please hold them as collateral security and oblige. Yours faithfully, Esther I. E. Mordecai, I. E. Mordecai."

Sir Rash Behary Ghose (with him Babu Bepin Behari Ghose, for the Appellants).—Two main questions are involved in this appeal:—

(1) Whether the deposit of title-deeds made by the defendant No. 1 would create a good and valid equitable mortgage within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

(2) Whether a valid equitable mortgage was created on the properties of defendant No. 2 (the wife) by the said deposit of title-deeds by the defendant No. 1 (the husband).

The answer to the first question would depend upon the question whether the document in question, i.e., the memorandum ought to have been registered.

The memorandum embodies the real contract between the parties. The writing interprets the intent and purpose of the deposit of title-deeds and is not a mere statement of fact. The document has been treated as representing the bargain between Sewdutt and the present defendants. If the writing embodying the contract is not registered there cannot be a valid and enforceable equitable mortgage. Refers to Dwarkanath Mitter v. Sarat Kumari Dasi (1), Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham

(1) 7 B. L. R. 55,

Lall Khettry (2), Behram Rashid Irani v. Sorabji Rustomji (3). The object and policy of the Transfer of Property Act will be defeated if persons are not compelled to register instruments by which security on immoveable property is intended to be created.

Notice is the object of the registration of such instruments. Refers to Fullerton v. Provincial Bank of Ireland (4), Pranjivandas Jagjivandas Mehta v. Chan Mah Phee (5). If the intent to create a security is shown by a written instrument, then that instrument only can be used for establishing an equitable mortgage. Such instrument being inadmissible in evidence for want of registration, no equitable mortgage can be proved in this case as no oral evidence is admissible under section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Then again the title-deeds were delivered on the 25th of February, i.e., prior to the 1st March, the date of the execution of the memorandum. But it is only present advance followed by immediate delivery of title-deeds that can constitute a valid equitable mortgage. Refers to Shaw v. Foster (6); Copland v. Davies (7). At any rate, with regard to the two previous advances as there was no contemporaneous deposit of title deeds, there was no enforceable equitable mortgage.

The next point is, how can the defendant No. 2, the wife, be made liable? It has been found that she obtained the benefit of the money advanced, so she is liable for her husband's debt. But what was her consideration? In the absence of any consideration given to her, her agreement is void in law and cannot be treated as a binding contract against her.

The wife might be benefited by the loan to the husband, but did she receive any consideration from the plaintiff?

effect that as the letter addressed to Sewdutt amounts to a mortgage bond and as it has not been registered, the unregistered mortgage bond is of no effect, and, therefore, a valid equitable mortgage has been created by the letter which embodies the contract between the parties. This contention has no substance.

[CHAUDHURI, J.—We want to hear you only about the wife's liability. How can she be made liable for the debts of her husband?]

The lower Courts have found that both the husband and the wife took the money, and the title-deeds were deposited as security for the money so advanced to them. The finding of the lower Courts on this point is very clear. Although the money was handed over to the husband, it was taken by and for the benefit of both of them.

[CHAUDHURI, J.—What should be the form of the decree?]

The decree shall be against both the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and for the sale of the mortgaged properties. We want a mortgage decree, pure and simple.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—It has been clearly found by both the Courts below that the title-deeds were made over to Sewdutt Roy on the 25th February 1909 for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was sufficient security for the advances already made and a further advance to be made and which had been asked for by the 1st defendant, Mr. Mordecai. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment says that he cannot avoid the inference that the security offered was approved and accepted and then the advance was made on the 1st March. As to the memorandum (Exhibit IV) he says, "it might be signed on the 1st March or two or three days after." The learned Judge in appeal was satisfied that the title-deeds were made over for the purpose of inspection of the property on the 25th February, that a good mortgage was created by the deposit of the title-deeds and that the memorandum was purely a memorandum which did not need registration.

The law on the subject has been laid down for years in this Court and it is clear that when a memorandum creates a mortgage, it comes under the operation of the Registration Act; but when there is a deposit of title-deeds independently of it, the deposit creates the mortgage and the memorandum need not be registered. That has been enunciated in the case of Kedarnath Dutt v. Sham Lal Khetry (2), followed subsequently in numerous cases, among them Oo Noun v. Mouny Htoon Oo (8), Gokul Das v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company (9).

The second point urged before us also fails upon the findings arrived at by the Courts below. We think that the decree made is good in form and in law.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Among Gujars of Gujrat District the custom of khanadamadi is very prevalent. [p. 120, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 18th August 1915.

Mr. Devi Dial, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Muhammadan Gujars of the Gujrat District and the following table will help to explain the facts:—

It has been found in this case, and was held to be established in Raja v. Musammam Jannat Bibi (1), that among Gujars of the Gujrat District the custom of khanadamadi is very prevalent, and it is not surprising, therefore, to find that Hasham during his lifetime made a gift of his estate, half to his daughter Musammam Aishan and half to his daughter Musammam Said Bibi, and had mutation effected in their respective names.

Musammam Said Bibi died about 1907 and on her death the land given to her was taken possession of by Hasham and mutation was effected in his favour, Muhammad Din, present plaintiff, apparently acquiescing in the proceedings. Hasham died some three years before institution of the present suit and on his death his widow, Musammam Bhag Bhari, applied to the Revenue Authorities to effect mutation of the land left by him (i.e., the half of the estate that had been originally given to Musammam Said Bibi) in favour of her daughter Musammam Aishan. Upon this plaintiff and other collaterals of Hasham sued Musammam Bhag Bhari and Musammam Aishan and prayed for a declaratory decree, to the effect that the said act on the part of Musammam Bhag Bhari (which was described as a gift by her to Musammam Aishan) would not affect their reversionary rights on the death of Musammam Bhag Bhari. This suit failed, the Courts holding that Musammam Aishan was the khanadamad of her late father, and thereafter plaintiff instituted the present suit in which he claims to recover possession from Musammam Aishan on the ground that after the death of Musammam Said Bibi, his late wife, he was entitled to succeed to the property given to his wife.

It is contended by defendant that the present suit is barred under section 11 and Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. This contention was overruled by the Munsif on the ground that the cause of action in the present suit is distinct from the cause of action in the previous suit; that in the former suit the cause of action was the alienation by Musammam Bhag Bhari, whereas in the present suit the cause of action upon which the claim is based is the death of plaintiff's wife and his consequent right to succeed to a life-estate; and that, therefore, Order II, rule 2, of the Code cannot apply.

The District Judge on appeal, while practically conceding that in law the cause of action in the present suit is the same as the cause of action in the former suit (viz., the death of plaintiff's wife), holds that the present suit is not barred because "these people know very little about their rights;" and the plaintiff in common with most agriculturists was under the impression that he could not recover the land until Hasham's widow died and did not discover his mistake until the decision of the former suit. In these circumstances he holds that plaintiff should be allowed to sue afresh on the cause of action which he discovered when the first suit was dismissed. On the merits the learned Judge held that plaintiff was clearly entitled to succeed and dismissed defendant's appeal with costs.

The sole question before me on this second appeal is whether the present suit is barred by either section 11, explanation 4, or Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code and upon this point I have heard Mr. Devi Dial for the appellant, the respondent being unrepresented by Counsel and naturally unable to argue the law point for himself.

There is a conflict of authority as to whether in a suit to recover possession of property a plaintiff is bound to support the claims made by him by bringing forward every title which he has, or claims to have, in respect of such property. In a large number of cases it has been held that he must put forward all his titles, and that if he does not do so and fails in his suit, a subsequent suit to recover that property from the same defendant based upon a different title, will be res judicata by reason of the provisions of section 11, explanation 4, of the Code [see Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (2) Bheeka Lall v. Bhuggoo Lall (3), Sultan Ahmad v. Maula Bakhsh (4), Haji Hasam Ibrahim v. Mancharam Kaliandas (5), Guddappa v. Tirkappa (6), Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (7), Pala Mal v. Maya (8)]. The contrary opinion has been expressed in a still larger number of reported cases [see Garth, C. J., in Denobundhoo

Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (2), Bhisto Shankar Patil v. Ramchandrarav Raghunath Jahagirdar (9), Sadaya Pillai v. Chinmi (10), Thyila Kandi Ummatha v. Thyila Kandi Cheria Kunhamed (11), Allunni v. Kunjusha (12), Ramasivami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (13), Veerana Pillai v. Muthukumara Asary (14), Zamorin of Calicut v. Narayanan Mussad (15), Babu Lal v. Ishri Prasad Narain Singh (16), Sheo Ratan Singh v. Sheo Sahai Misr (17), Balbhadar Nath v. Ram Lal (18)].

In the present case that question does not arise, inasmuch as Muhammad Din was only one of several joint plaintiffs in the former suit who were seeking merely a decree declaratory of their alleged reversionary rights and were not claiming possession of the property, and in that suit the present claim, based upon plaintiff's alleged exclusive title to present possession of the land, would have been inconsistent with the claim preferred by him and his co-plaintiffs as reversioners jointly entitled to the property on the death of Musammat Bhag Bhari. Explanation 4 of section 11 is thus clearly inapplicable, as the present claim could not have been brought forward by Muhammad Din as a ground of attack in the former suit [see Muhammad Din v. Rahim Gul (19), Kura v. Madho (20)].

Moreover, it has been found as a fact by the District Judge that Muhammad Din had no knowledge of his right to succeed on a life-estate to the property left by his wife until the decision in the former suit made it clear to him that his wife was no less a khanadamad of her father than her sister, Musammat Aishan, and that he was, therefore, the person entitled by law and custom to hold the property for life. In these circumstances he cannot be said to have "intentionally relinquished" any part of his claim, within the meaning of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

As remarked by Garth, C.J., in Denobundhoo Chowdhry v. Kristomonee Dossee (2), "It must constantly happen that until the differences between contending parties have been ventilated and discussed in a Court of Law, the litigants themselves are entirely ignorant of what their legal rights and position may be," and in Amanat Bibi v. Imdad Husain (21), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that "a right, which a litigant possesses without knowing or ever having known that he possesses it, can hardly be regarded as 'a portion of his claim'."

No doubt, everybody is presumed to know the law and ignorance of law cannot be urged as an excuse for a mistake made by a person. But as pointed out by Lord Westbury, Lord Chancellor, in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat, "the word jus is used in the sense of denoting general law, the law of the country. But when the word jus is used in the sense of denoting a private right that maxim has no application," Cooper v. Phibbs (22).

For the reasons given I hold that the present suit is not barred either by section 11, explanation 4, or by Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code and I accordingly dismiss the appeal. Respondent has incurred no costs.

Pandit RUP CHAND—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Will, construction of—Devise of whole estate to one person coupled with devise of particular village to another—Repugnancy—Alienation, powers of, reservation of, by testator, effect of on devise.

A testatrix described herself as the "sole owner and possessor" (malik-o-qabiz) of her deceased husband's entire estate and in possession of all proprietary powers under his Will, and bequeathed the entire estate to one F. C. subject to certain conditions, one of which was that she would continue to be in possession of the entire estate, having full powers of alienation, and another was a devise of a particular village to one G. who would be its "sole owner and possessor" (malik-o-qabiz) after the testatrix's death:

Held, (1) that the words malik-o-qabiz signified a full ownership in property; [p. 125, col. 1.]

(2) that the devise in favour of G. was an absolute devise of the village; [p. 125, col. 1.]

(3) that the reservation of powers of alienation by the testatrix in her own favour was a mere surplusage, and neither abated from nor fortified the completeness of her ownership and possession, and [p. 125, col. 1.]

(4) that inasmuch as the entire estate devised to F. C. was subject to conditions, an absolute gift of the village in question to G. was an exception but not repugnant to the devise in favour of F. C. [p. 125, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Allahabad High Court, dated the 5th February 1913, varying a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 11th March 1911.

FACTS.—The main question in this appeal was the construction of the Will of Musammatt Gomti Kunwar. The material clauses of the Will were as follows:

"Musammatt Gomti Kunwar, widow of Lala Sri Kishun Das, rais of Ohhaper, and daughter of Lala Ganpat Rai, caste mahajan, rais and resident of Saharanpur, declares as follows:—

FATEH CHAND v. RUP CHAND.

Under the Will of my husband I am the sole owner in possession of his entire estate and possess all the proprietary powers. I have no male or female issue, and life is uncertain and not everlasting. Hence, through foresight and with a view to avoid future troubles and disputes, I, in a sound state of body and mind, bequeath the entire estate of my husband to Fateh Chand, son of Lala Sri Ram Das, who is related to me as the son of my jeth (husband's elder brother) subject to the following conditions:

1. So long as I live, I shall continue to be the owner in possession of the entire estate, the subject of the Will, and possess all the powers, such as (those) of making sales, mortgages, gifts, etc.

2. After my death, the said person (the legatee) shall become the owner in possession of the entire estate of my husband and he, too, shall possess all powers of alienation like myself.

4. I have bequeathed Manza Khudda, with all the property, to Musammât Gomi, the daughter of my priest (prohit) whose marriage was celebrated by my father-in-law and whom I have brought up as my own daughter. After my death, she shall be the owner in possession of the entire property in Mauza Khudda aforesaid."

The suit was brought by the respondent, a purchaser from Musammât Gomi, for possession of Mauza Khudda with mesne profits. The Subordinate Judge held that there was a repugnancy in the general and particular devises, and that the most obvious solution would be to treat the particular devise as an exception to the general bequest,—it would be a more enlightened explanation to rely upon the testatrix's use of a certain set of words by way of conferring an absolute estate on the general devisee Fateh Chand and her "significant omission" of such words in the case of the particular devisee Musammât Gomi. He held that on the true construction of the Will Musammât Gomi took a life-estate only, and decreed the suit to the extent of such life-interest.

Both parties appealed to the High Court, which delivered the following judgment:—

"This appeal is connected with the First Appeal No. 111 of 1911, in which we have just now delivered judgment. The question which is involved in this appeal is, first, whether a decree in favour of the plaintiff, Rup Chand, should be limited to an estate during the lifetime of Musammât Gomi, and secondly, whether the plaintiff should have mesne profits for the period anterior to the institution of the suit.

The first question depends upon the construction to be placed upon the Will of Musammât Gomi. The Will commences by reciting that the testatrix was entitled to all her husband's estate and that she, while in a sound state of body and mind, bequeathed the entire estate of her husband to Fateh Chand. Then occur these words "I covenant in writing that I shall abide by the following conditions." Clause (2) and clause (4) are as follows. The other clauses are not material. * * *

After setting out the clauses, the judgment proceeds:—

"The learned Subordinate Judge has, for reasons which he has given in his judgment, held that on the true construction of the Will as a whole, Musammât Gomi only took an estate for her life. He lays a good deal of stress upon the words in clause (2) giving all powers of alienation to Fateh Chand and to the omission of words of the same nature in clause (4). He then goes on to say that by reading clause (4) as conferring merely a life-estate, he can reconcile both clauses of the Will. We cannot agree with this view. Having regard to the recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, if clause (4) stood alone, we certainly would have to hold that Musammât Gomi took an absolute interest and not merely a life-interest.

We have then to see whether there is anything also in the Will to lead us to believe that merely a life-interest was intended. The case cannot be put more forcibly than it was put by the learned Subordinate Judge. We, however, think that his reasoning is not quite complete, because interpreting clause (4) as giving merely a life-estate would not reconcile the two clauses or give effect to clause (2). Clause

FATEH CHAND v. RUP CHAND.

(2) provides that, after the death of the testatrix, Fateh Chand should at once become the absolute owner in possession of the entire estate. It is impossible to reconcile this clause with clause (4), which undoubtedly gives at least a life-estate to Musammam Gomi. We are bound to consider each clause by itself, and we must hold that under clause (4) an absolute estate is conferred upon Musammam Gomi. There are no words in clause (4) or in any other part of the Will save as already mentioned, which could in any way limit the estate conferred upon Musammam Gomi to a mere life-estate.

The question of mesne profits has not been seriously pressed.

The result is that we set aside so much of the decree of the Court below as in any way limits the estate of the plaintiff in the property in dispute. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal. The appellant will have his full costs in the Court below."

The appellant then appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. J. M. Parikh), for the Appellant.—The substantial question in this appeal is the construction of Musammam Gomi's Will. The true construction is that which the Subordinate Judge has placed upon it. The words "malik-o-qabiz" in themselves no doubt denote absolute ownership: Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1).

But these words are not conclusive that the devisee is to take an absolute estate: the instrument has to be looked at as a whole, and other parts of it negative that supposition. In a similar case of Punchoo Money Dossee v. Troylucko Mohiney Dossee (2), it was held that a widow of whom the same words were used took only a limited estate. In each case we must endeavour to ascertain what the testator really intended.

Sir W. Garth and Mr. Dube, for the Respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—In these consolidated appeals it has been admitted in the argument submitted to the Board by the Counsel for the appellant that substantially only one question falls now to be determined. That question has reference to the construction of a Will, dated the 18th September 1901, of one Musammam Gomi Kunwar. In that document there is a description of the title of the testatrix given in the following words: "I am the sole owner in possession of his [her husband's] entire estate and possess all the proprietary powers." Their Lordships note that throughout this Will, the term thus translated "sole owner in possession" or "owner in possession" is "malik-o-qabiz."

Having thus described the property she proceeds to bequeath "the entire estate of my husband to Fateh Chand." There is, however, appended to this bequest of the entire estate the subjection of the whole of the estate "to the following conditions," and a covenant in writing by herself that she would abide by those conditions. One of those conditions is in the following terms: (4) "I have bequeathed Mauza Khudda, with all the property, to Musammam Gomi, the daughter of my priest (prohit) whose marriage was celebrated by my father-in-law, and whom I have brought up as my own daughter. After my death, she shall be the owner in possession of the entire property in Mauza Khudda aforesaid."

Their Lordships hold that there can be but little doubt that under the first sentence of condition 4 there would have been a competent bequest of Khudda, the village, with the totality of rights falling under the designation "umla-i-hakiat."

Under the second part of condition 4 which says that the village is to be owned in possession, their Lordships cannot hold:

(1) 35 I A. 17; 12 C. W. N. 231 (P. C.); 5 A. L. J. 67; 18 M. L. J. 7; 10 Bom. L. R. 59; 7 C. L. J. 131; 3 M. L. T. 141; 30 A. 84.

THAKUR DAS v. RADHA KISHAN.

that there has been any abatement of the force of the words employed. Those words are "malik-o-qabiz." Translated "owner in possession," they truly are "owner and possessor of." There can, according to their Lordships' view of this Will, if condition 4 were alone under construction, be therefore no doubt, under either branch of it, that that village now belongs under this Will to Musammât Gomi.

The argument presented to the Board, however, was that while that same form of expression was used in earlier portions of the Will, there were appended to it certain conditions or elaborations of which a sample may be given from condition 1. "I shall continue," says that portion of the Will, "to be the owner in possession of the entire estate the subject of the Will," and then there are added these words "and possess all the powers such as (those of) making sales, mortgages, gifts," etc.

In their Lordships' opinion these expressions do not abate from the completeness of the ownership and possession, nor do they fortify it in any way whatever. Accordingly condition 4, omitting the words which are thus surplusage, has to be given effect to, and it must be given effect to in the full sense recognised by law.

Their Lordships are of opinion that with regard to that sense there is now in the Indian law no doubt whatever. The judgment of Lord Collins in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (1) attaches to the word "malik-o-qabiz" unquestionably a signification of a full ownership in property. Such an ownership in property in their Lordships' view was thus conveyed in this village to Musammât Gomi, and their Lordships will only conclude these observations by saying that in their view there is no repugnancy in such a construction. It is perfectly true that the entire estate was conveyed in the first place to Fateh Chand, but it was subject to conditions. On a perusal of those conditions, No. 4 occurs to the effect that as an exception from the conveyance of the entire estate this village is conveyed. This is not a repugnancy in the proper sense of the term, and taking the clauses of the Will together it simply means that Fateh Chand takes the entire estate, with the exception of this village, while it, in proper conveyancing terms, is disposed of in favour of Musammât Gomi.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that there is no ground for the argument which would upset the judgment of the learned Judges of the High Court. Their Lordships agree with that judgment, and they also agree with the observations made as to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge who, with much care, had arrived at a different conclusion. The views of the High Court are shared by this Board, and accordingly they will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals be dismissed with costs, including the costs of the petition for special leave to appeal.

Failure to deposit the redemption money in compliance with the decree of the lower Court does not necessarily bar the hearing of an appeal from that decree. [p. 126, col. 1.]

It is the duty of a mortgagee to keep accounts of expenditure on additions to and repairs of the mortgaged property, and if he fails to do so, all presumptions will be made in favour of the mortgagor, but such failure does not ipso facto defeat a claim for compensation which is proved in other ways. [p. 126, col. 2.]

NADIR CHAND SAHA v. BIRENDRA NATH DUTT.

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 15th June 1914.

Messrs. Oertel and Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Broadway, Bhagat Gobind Das and Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a redemption suit in which possession was decreed by the first Court to the mortgagor's vendee on payment of Rs. 11,664, a sum which was enhanced by the Appellate Court to Rs. 12,232.

Respondent raises a preliminary objection that as the appellant has not deposited the redemption money in Court within the time ordered by the lower Appellate Court, there is no decree for redemption subsisting in his favour.

Sheonarain v. Ohuni Lal (1), Ram Dhani Sahu v. Lalit Singh (2), Venkata Krishna Ayyar v. Thiagaraya Ochetti (3) are quoted by the respondent, but these authorities are not in point, and we approve of the principle enunciated in Umrao Singh v. Muhammad Karim Baksh (4) that failure to comply with the decree of the lower Court does not necessarily bar the hearing of the appeal.

The appeal, however, fails on the merits. The first ground is withdrawn and appellant's main contention is that, on a proper interpretation of the mortgage-deed, interest accrues on the principal not from date of the deed but from a date 20 years posterior to the date of the mortgage. Having carefully consulted the document, we find no strength in this contention.

The next point is that the conditions of the mortgage are too onerous to justify their enforcement. The conditions are undoubtedly onerous, but we have no doubt that they were made so expressly, by consent of parties, whose intention clearly was that there should be no redemption. In fact the mortgage was a sale in disguise, and the plaintiff knowingly purchased a law suit.

The last point was that defendant was not entitled to compensation for additions and repairs, as he had kept no accounts and has not accounted for income from the property.

It is, no doubt, the duty of a mortgagee to keep accounts of such expenditure, and if he does not, all presumptions will be made in favour of the mortgagor, but failure to keep accounts does not ipso facto defeat a claim for compensation which is proved in other ways.

The value of the additions and the cost of repairs are matters of fact which we, as a Court of second appeal, cannot touch, and the intention of the parties to the mortgage was that the mortgagee should enjoy the income.

With regard to the prayer for extension of time for complying with the lower Appellate Court's decree, we see no reason to interfere, for the appellant clearly had no intention of complying with it, if the redemption money remained at the figure computed by the lower Appellate Court.

The question of Court-fee has already been decided and is not mentioned before us and the defendant's cross-appeal is withdrawn.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SECOND APPEAL No. 1104 OF 1913.

This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent on the basis of a kabuliyat executed on the 11th April 1895, for a term of one year. The kabuliyat provided that rent would be paid on the 30th July and that on default, the arrear would carry interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per year. The year expired and the tenant held over. Rent is claimed in this suit for the years 1909-10 and 1910-11, and the only question in controversy is, at what rate is interest payable on the arrears. The defendant pleaded that before the kabuliyat was executed by him, the landlord assured him that the covenant for payment of interest at 75 per cent. per annum would not be enforced, and it was on the faith of this assurance that he agreed to the insertion of the clause in the document. The Court of first instance found that the allegation of the defendant was true and held that the landlord was not entitled to claim interest on the arrears at the rate of 75 per cent. per year. On appeal the District Judge has expressed no opinion upon the question of fact, but has decreed interest at the rate claimed, on the ground that oral evidence was not admissible to contradict the terms of the kabuliyat. He has referred to proviso (4) of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, and has concluded that as that proviso deals with a subsequent oral agreement, it has no application to the case before us, while none of the other provisos was of avail to the defendant.

On the present appeal, reliance has been placed by the defendant upon the first proviso to section 92, which is in these terms: "Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, want or failure of consideration, or mistake in fact or law." We may parenthetically observe that this is not an exhaustive enumeration of the circumstances which may invalidate a document or may entitle a person to a decree or order relating thereto.

The appellant contends that the execution of the kabuliyat was secured by fraud or imposition, in respect of the clause for payment of interest, and in support of this view refers to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Pertap Ohunder Ghose v. Mohendranath Purkait (1). Sir Richard Couch observed in that case that where one party induced another to contract on the faith of representations made to him, any one of which is untrue, the whole contract is, in a Court of Equity, considered as having been obtained fraudulently. Consequently, where a tenant executes a kabuliyat containing a stipulation which the landlord has told him will not be enforced, the tenant cannot be held to have assented to it, and the kabuliyat is not the oral agreement between the parties. A similar view was taken by this Court in the cases of Kashi Nath Chukerbati v. Brindaban Chukerbati (2) and Beni Madhub Gaurani v. Lalmoti Dassi (3). The test is, whether the tenant can maintain a suit for rescission, cancellation or variation of the contract; if he can, he may successfully resist the claim on the basis of the contract. There is no room for controversy in this case that such a suit could be maintained by the tenant. But it has been ingeniously argued on behalf of the respondent that as the kabuliyat in this case was for a term of one year only and as since the expiry of the term the defendant has held over, he is bound by the terms entered in the document. This contention is obviously fallacious. As there was an agreement that this particular clause in the deed would not be enforced, the relative position of the parties is the same as if the clause was deleted from the document, and tenant must be deemed to have held over according to what constituted the true terms of the agreement between him and his landlord. [Bajinath Prosad v. Raghunath Rai (4), Durgi Nikarini v. Goberdhan Bose (5)]. The tenant could, after the expiry of the term, be made liable for interest only if there was a subsequent agreement to pay interest at the specified rate. None such is alleged in this case.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. The appellant will have his costs in this Court, but the parties will bear their own costs before the District Judge.

We may add that the respondent has not insisted upon a remand in view of the small amount in controversy, otherwise a remand would have been necessary for a determination of the question of fact which was raised in the Court of first instance and decided against the plaintiff but has been left undecided by the District Judge.

This judgment will govern Second Appeal No. 1185 of 1913; in that case also, the decree of the District Judge will be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored; there will be the same order for costs as in the other case.

1—Appeal, withdrawal of, without express permission to bring fresh suit—Subsequent suit, whether barred.

In order to satisfy the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, the permission given by the Court to bring a fresh suit must be in express terms and cannot be implied. [p. 129, col. 1.]

Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabul Shah, 3 P. R. 1905; 87 P. L. R. 1905, referred to.

Plaintiff sued for a declaration that a mortgage executed by the widow of a collateral of his should not affect his reversionary rights. His suit was dismissed, and he appealed to the Divisional Judge. During the pendency of the appeal the widow died, and the plaintiff prayed to be allowed to withdraw the appeal, as he was now entitled to sue for possession. The Divisional Judge granted his request and dismissed the appeal. He brought a suit for possession based on the same allegations as the previous suit.

Held, that the suit was barred by Order XXIII, rule 1, as express permission to bring a fresh suit had not been given in the order dismissing plaintiff's appeal and the claim was based on the same cause of action as in the prior suit. [p. 129, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 16th January 1915.

Messrs. Manohar Lal and D. C. Ralli, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are simple. Musammat Kishen Kour, a widow, mortgaged certain land to one Hari Singh for Rs. 600, whereupon her husband's collateral heir, Jita Singh, brought the usual suit for a declaratory decree. His suit was dismissed by the Munsif on the ground that necessity and consideration for the mortgage had been duly proved. He then appealed to the Divisional Judge and while his appeal was pending Musammat Kishen Kour died. He accordingly prayed to be allowed to withdraw his appeal and stated that he had a fresh cause of action as he was now entitled to seek possession of the land. The Divisional Judge thereupon passed the following order:

"I grant plaintiff's request to withdraw the appeal Appeal dismissed." This order is dated 17th March 1914.

GANGA PRASAD v. NANDU RAM.

On the 9th June 1914 Jita Singh instituted the present suit in which he claims to recover possession of the land mortgaged by Musammat Kishen Kour, on the ground that the mortgage was effected for no necessary purpose and for no consideration and is, therefore, not binding upon him as the heir of the mortgagor's husband. The defendant, Hari Singh, pleaded that the present suit as framed was barred by Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, and that plaintiff's sole remedy was to redeem the mortgage on the expiry of its term (20 years from date of mortgage).

The Munsif dismissed the present suit on the ground that when plaintiff's appeal to the Divisional Judge in the former suit was dismissed, the findings of the first Court in that suit became final and binding and that consequently it must now be held that the mortgage impugned was valid and enforceable against plaintiff. On appeal the District Judge held that as the plaintiff had not in the first suit obtained the Divisional Judge's permission to institute a fresh suit, the present claim was barred under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code.

Plaintiff has appealed to this Court, but after hearing all that Mr. Manohar Lal had to urge on his behalf, I am satisfied that the suit has been rightly dismissed.

Mr. Manohar Lal's first contention was that in the former case the Divisional Judge had impliedly granted permission to plaintiff to bring another suit. But it has been held by a Division Bench of this Court [Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabul Shah (1)] that in order to satisfy the provisions of section 373 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 (which correspond with the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 1, of the present Code), the permission given by the Court must be in express terms and cannot be implied. This decision is binding upon me and I must follow it.

The learned Counsel next urged that the words in Order XXIII, rule 1, "in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim," refer merely to the relief sought, and that if the relief sought in the second suit is different from the relief sought in the first suit, the rule in question is no bar to such second suit. In this connection he relies upon Kamini Kant Roy v. Ram Nath Chuckerbutty (2), Thakur Das v. Jaswant Rai (3) and Gopal Chandra Banerjee v. Purna Chandra Banerjee (4). These cases in no way support the proposition put forward, as all that was held in them was that a second suit, based upon an entirely different cause of action, was not barred merely because the parties and the property involved were the same as in the previous suit that had been withdrawn.

In the present case the parties and the property involved are admittedly the same and the cause of action against defendant, namely, the mortgage which plaintiff seeks to get rid of, is also the same.

The rulings cited by Mr. Tek Chand [Machana Uahala Dikshatulu v. Gorugantulu Yaggamma (5) and Sennava Reddiar v. Venkatachala Reddiar (6)] are directly in point and are authorities for holding that Order XXIII, rule 1, of the Code is a bar to the present suit.

I must accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

GANGA PRASAD v. NANDU RAM.

Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, a High Court can only interfere if the question be one of jurisdiction. A High Court's powers under the Charter Act are ordinarily exercised only in cases where jurisdiction has been exceeded or a Judge has ignorantly or perversely refused to exercise or made only a colourable pretence at exercising a jurisdiction vested in him by law, and this power should be exercised only when irreparable injury would be caused to one of the litigants if matters were not set right. [p. 130, col. 2.]

Where a discretion is vested in a Court, it is not open to interference by the High Court unless it has been exercised ignorantly or perversely. [p. 130, col. 2.]

Khan Bahadur Fakhruddin and Mr. Nirsu Narayan Singh, for the Petitioner.

Rai Tribhuban Nath Sahay, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this matter we are asked to interfere either under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act or section 107 of the Government of India Act with an order made by a Small Cause Court Judge under section 23 (1) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts. Act. The preliminary objection is taken that an order made under section 23 (1) is not covered by section 25. Two cases have been quoted, one on either side. In Subal Ram Dutt v. Jagadanunda Mazumdar (1) the judgment was one to which my learned brother was a party. I agree with the conclusions arrived at therein with regard to the meaning of the word "decided", even though in Umesh Chandra Paladhi v. Rakhal Chandra Chatterjee (2) its correctness was questioned. I would lay emphasis on the distinction between disposing of a case and deciding a case, but would concede that the meaning of the word "case", as commentaries on section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code indicate, is not without difficulty. A case is something less definite than a suit, and it may be argued that a proceeding in which a Small Cause Court Judge discusses and decides the question whether a plaint should be returned may be regarded as constituting in itself a case. It is not in the matter before us necessary to go deeply into this question, for whether we regard ourselves as taking action under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act or section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, or section 107 of the Government of India Act, the point in issue seems to me to be the same point.

Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code we could only interfere if the question were one of jurisdiction. From the earliest days of High Court at Fort William when Mr. Justice Norman introduced superintendence to the notice of his colleagues as a term having "a legal force and significance well known to the Legislature", the Court's powers under the Charter Act have been exercised, with few exceptions, only in case where jurisdiction has been exceeded or the Judge has ignorantly or perversely refused to exercise or made only a colourable pretence at exercising a jurisdiction vested in him by law. As I read the judgments in Chandi Roy v. Kirpal Roy (3) and in Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (4), even this limited power should be exercised only when irreparable injury would be caused to one of the litigants if matters were not set right. In the case before us no irreparable injury is being caused. The plaint has been returned. The plaintiff has an ample remedy in the Courts of ordinary jurisdiction.

Nor would I interfere under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, had I power to do so. Section 23 (1) is designed to meet cases in which a Small Cause Court Judge is satisfied that the question of title raised is so intricate that it should not be decided summarily, but in a Court in which the evidence is recorded in full and the decision open to appeal. The matter is one of discretion, and where discretion is vested in a Court, it is not open to our interference unless it has been exercised ignorantly or perversely. Whether we look at the matter from the point of view of superintendence or revision, the question in issue is whether the Judge has acted ignorantly or perversely.

SURADHANI DEBYA v. CHANDRA NATH.

In Umesh Chandra Paladhi v. Rakhal Ohandra Chatterjee (2), the Divisional Bench declined to believe that there could be any intricate question of title in a dispute over the carcass of a goat.

In the case before us, the suit is for house rent. If title in the house was in good faith disputed, the Judge would have been most unwise to adjudicate upon it summarily. The Judge heard the Pleadings and decided that the title of the plaintiff had been challenged in good faith. I see no reason for believing that his decision was either ignorant or perverse.

The application should be rejected with costs—hearing-fee two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1 (2)—Court, whether can order withdrawal of suit without permission to institute fresh suit—Revision.

Where the plaintiff makes an application to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit and the Court considers that such liberty ought not to be granted, the proper course is simply to dismiss the application and then proceed with the trial of the suit. In such a case it is not competent to the Court to make an order allowing the application for withdrawal without permission to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action.

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, in Title Suit No. 516 of 1912, dated the 18th September 1914.

Babus Sasadhar Roy (junior) and Surendra Mohan Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Ramakanta Bhattacharyya, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was the plaintiff in a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye. It appears that, on the date finally fixed for the hearing, the plaintiff applied for postponement on several grounds. That application was rejected. Then the plaintiff applied for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The learned Subordinate Judge held that there were no sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and he made an order allowing the application for withdrawal without permission to institute a fresh suit. It appears that subsequently several applications were made by the plaintiff for setting aside that order, the last application being dated the 10th of August 1914 by which he treated the suit as not disposed of by the previous order and prayed the Court to proceed with the suit. That was rejected. Now the Court having been of opinion that leave should not be granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, it ought to have dismissed the application for withdrawal. As pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, in the case of Mahant Bihari Dasji v. Parshotamdas (1): "Where a plaintiff does not desire to withdraw from the suit, unless with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and the Court considers that such liberty ought not to be granted, the proper course is simply to dismiss the application." And as the Court had disallowed the application for adjournment it ought to have dismissed the suit. Had that course been followed, the plaintiff would have had a right of appeal, and if there were sufficient grounds, the Appellate Court might have allowed the appeal and directed a trial of the case. The order, however, which was passed was not a proper one and, under the circumstances, we think that that order should be set aside and the suit proceeded with from the stage where it was on the 22nd August. But this must be conditional upon the plaintiff paying to the opposite party the sum of Rs. 170 as costs incurred by the latter up to date within one month of the arrival of the record in the lower Court. This amount will not be considered as costs in the cause. In default of payment of the said amount within the time specified, this Rule will stand discharged with costs, three gold mohurs.

The receipt of the earnest-money, however, does require registration under section 17 (1) (c) of the Registration Act, but this does not affect the present case inasmuch as the portion of the document containing the receipt is separable from the agreement part and oral evidence of payment of the earnest money is admissible under section 91 of the Evidence Act. Messrs. Fazl-i-Husain, Shuja-ud-Din and Abdul Rashid, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Beechey, Ralli and Ram Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs' suit is for possession of two-and-a-half squares of land and an ahata on the basis of an agreement to sell, executed on 10th January 1913 by defendant. The lower Court took the pleadings and framed 7 issues, as stated in its judgment, the first four being issues on technical points raised. The findings briefly were—see judgment and also order of 11th August 1913—that the deed (Exhibit P 1) is a contract to sell and that the Rs. 600 acknowledged in it is not part payment of price, and so the document did not require registration; that plaintiffs did not need to sue for a sale-deed, but are right in suing for possession of the land; that defendant certainly executed Exhibit P 1; that Rs. 600 earnest-money certainly passed; that the ahata is not proved to have been sold along with the squares.

Plaintiffs acquiesce in the dismissal of the claim for the ahata, but defendant has appealed against the decree for the two-and-a-half squares.

In our opinion Exhibit P 1 is certainly not a sale-deed of the land. No doubt it begins by saying, "I have absolutely sold the land," but this is merely in a manner of speaking: the real meaning comes out in the words: "I will take the remaining money at the time of the completion of the sale-deed. I shall get the sale-deed completed after going to the spot on the 15th February 1913." The document is really only a promise to sell by means of a regular deed, plus an acknowledgment of receipt of Rs. 600 earnest-money. Such documents have never in the Punjab been held as coming under section 17 (1) (b), Registration Act Sardar Partab Singh v. Karm Chand (1).

But Counsel for defendant argues further that clause (c) covers the case, and quotes in support Ram Chand v. Chatter Singh (2) and Waman Ramchandra v. Dhondiba Krishnaji (3). The former ruling is one by a single Judge, and whether correct or not, is easily distinguishable, for there the sale had already taken place and was complete, while here no sale had been yet effected. The Bombay case, however, is authority for the view that a receipt for earnest-money in the case of a sale of property worth more than Rs. 100 comes under clause (c) aforesaid, and must be registered to be admissible in evidence; but on the other hand, two considerations emerge in the present case to save plaintiffs from the consequences of this dictum—first, the agreement part of Exhibit P 1, which does not require registration, is separable from the receipt part, which does; secondly, under section 91, Indian Evidence Act, oral evidence of the payment of Rs. 600 earnest-money is admissible even if the acknowledgment contained in Exhibit P 1 is excluded by section 17 (1) (c), Registration Act. For the latter proposition we have as authority the same Bombay ruling.

It is argued, on the merits, that defendant never executed Exhibit P 1 or received the Rs. 600 and that he was ill and incapable of transacting business at the time. The marginal witnesses to the paper are Manne Khan, Maya Ram and Sardar Kirpa Singh. The second and third of these have been called and fully support the plaintiffs' case, both as to execution of document and of payment of cash; and we are unable to see any indication pointing to bad faith in them. The affair occurred at Chak No. 130, some two miles or less from Chak No. 132, where plaintiffs and these witnesses live. It was natural for plaintiffs to take these two respectable men to witness an important transaction like this. Maya Ram is a shopkeeper, in no way specially dependent on plaintiffs, and Kirpa Singh is a substantial farmer, renting land at an annual rate of Rs. 1,850. Diwan Chand, School Master of Chak No. 132, corroborates, and one plaintiff Narinjan Singh goes into the box and swears to his own case. No doubt Manne Khan was not called, but this was unnecessary, if defendant thought he was against plaintiffs, why did he not call him himself?

Defendant's evidence is chiefly negative, and an attempt is made to show that defendant was ill and incapable. The doctor only shews defendant had pneumonia about 18th or 20th December 1912, and we place no reliance upon the other witnesses who pretend that defendant was desperately ill all through December, January and February. And another strong reason for believing in plaintiff's bona fide is the fact that the bargain is by no means a very good one for him, as the price fixed, Rs. 13,000, is apparently a very high one.

For these reasons we think the lower Court's decision is correct and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 51 and Order XXI, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplate that an application for execution can only be made by the holder of a decree [p. 136, col. 2.]

A decree was passed in the terms of a compromise, which granted certain monthly allowances to some of the parties to the suit as well as to a stranger, and provided that if its terms were not complied with in favour of the parties to the suit to whom the allowances were granted, they would be entitled to take proper proceedings as regards such non-compliance. Subsequently, these persons, including the stranger, applied to the Court in which the suit had been instituted to recover their monthly allowances from the date of the compromise by execution of the compromise decree. The Court allowed execution to proceed in favour of each of the applicants for the allowances claimed from the date of the decree, on the finding that they were not entitled to claim the same from the date of the compromise:

Held, (1) that the stranger applicant, who was no party to the suit or the decree, had no right to apply for execution, though he was entitled to bring a separate suit based on the portion of the compromise relating to him: [p. 135, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Mohanlalganj, dated the 30th November 1915.

Mr. H. C. Dutt, for the Appellant,

DIL AFZA BEGAM v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, BAHRAICH.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in these appeals is whether Rani Saltanat Begam, Rani Dil Afza and Muhammad Kazim are entitled to the allowances mentioned in the compromise of the 22nd August 1912, in accordance with which a decree was subsequently passed by this Court, from the date of the compromise or from the date of the decree. The compromise aforesaid was filed in this Court in First Civil Appeal No. 162 of 1911 instituted by Rani Saltanat Begam and First Civil Appeal No. 41 of 1912 instituted by Rani Dil Afza Begam from a decree passed in an interpleader suit relating to the Nanpara Estate. In that suit Rani Saltanat Begam claimed the entire estate under a Will executed by her husband, Raja Muhammad Siddiq Khan, and as the senior ahl-e-biradari widow of the late Raja under section 22 of Act I of 1869. She claimed in the alternative her share in the estate of her husband under the Muhammadan Law and a dower of three lacs of rupees. By a subsequent application she put forward an additional claim to an allowance of Rs. 4,000 per month under the Will of her husband. Rani Dil Afza claimed a one-sixteenth share of the estate under section 22 of Act I of 1869, an allowance of Rs. 4,000 per mensem under the terms of the aforesaid Will, besides her unpaid dower and certain jewellery. The learned Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, treated the claims for dower and allowances as outside the scope of the interpleader suit within the meaning of section 88 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on the evidence adduced before him came to the conclusion that Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza were not entitled to any portion of the estate. Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza appealed, but during the pendency of their appeals entered into a compromise with some of the contesting respondents, including those now represented by the Manager of the Court of Wards in charge of the Nanpara Estate. It is stated that Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza had assigned a portion of their interests to Muhammad Kazim during the pendency of the interpleader suit, but it does not appear that the name of Muhammad Kazim was ever brought on the record either in the Court of first instance or during the pendency of the appeals in this Court, and the decrees prepared by the Court of first instance and on appeal by this Court show that Muhammad Kazim was no party to them. The compromise filed by Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza, to which Muhammad Kazim as a private purchaser of a portion of their interests had assented, was to the effect that in consideration of an immediate payment of Rs. 1,87,500 to Rani Saltanat Begam, Rs. 50,000 to Rani Dil Afza, and Rs. 1,87,500 to Muhammad Kazim, the delivery of certain ornaments to the two former, the provision of a bungalow for the residence of Rani Saltanat Begam, and the payment of monthly allowances of Rs. 4,000 to Rani Saltanat Begam, Rs. 1,000 to Rani Dil Afza, Rs. 250 to Muhammad Kazim and of other amounts to nine other persons, the said Ranis gave up their entire claims to the talukdari and non-talukdari properties in dispute, moveables unpaid dower-debts, past maintenance, allowances and costs. There was a provision in the compromise that if any portion of it was not carried out in favour of the "appellants," or if there was undue delay in complying with the same, the "appellants" would be entitled to take proper proceedings in respect of the portion not complied with or for the enforcement of their rights for the period of the delay, and that the respondents Rani Qamar Zamani Begam, Rani Sarfaraz Begam, Rani Kaniz Begam and Muhammad Saadat Ali Khan, who were parties to the compromise, would be responsible for the costs and damages which might be incurred in connection with such proceedings and shall have no objection to pay the same.

The hearing of the appeals against the other respondents continued, and ultimately on the 10th February 1914, a decree allowing the appeals of Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza to the extent mentioned in the compromise was passed by this Court.

The present appeals have arisen out of the applications made by Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza and Muhammad Kazim for the recovery of the arrears of their allowances, by execution of the decrees passed by this Court.

On the application of Muhammad Kazim, the learned Subordinate Judge drew the attention of the office and the munsarim to what he described as an elementary principle that a person who was not a party to the decree could not execute it and asked the office to report whether the applicant, Muhammad Kazim, was a party to the decree under execution. The office reported that he was not a party to the interpleader suit in which the application for execution was made, but was a party to certain suits for dower. The learned Subordinate Judge allowed notices to issue and his successor, without going into the office report, allowed execution to proceed in favour of each of the applicants for the allowances claimed from the date of the decree, on the finding that they were not entitled to claim the same from the date of the compromise.

It is obvious, however, from the terms of the compromise that the intention was that the said ladies were to get their maintenance allowances from the date of the compromise provided the said compromise was sanctioned by the Court. In the compromise the ladies stated that in lieu of what was conceded to them, they gave up their claim to the past maintenance allowances (guzashta guzara), implying thereby the allowances claimable by them under the Will for the period antecedent to the compromise. Their right to recover future allowances, that is from the date of the compromise, was in effect recognized by the compromise. The effect of the sanction of the compromise was to render every one of its terms enforceable, so far as the parties to the appeals who had assented to the compromise were concerned, and the said ladies are, therefore, entitled to claim their maintenance allowances from the date on which that compromise was entered into. The compromise did not state that the allowances were to be paid from a future specified date or from a date to be fixed by the Court, and the presumption, therefore, is that they became payable from the date when the compromise was entered into. Whether the decree was merely declaratory as to the said allowance or was enforceable in execution it is immaterial to consider, for no objection has been taken on that score to the order of the Court below on behalf of the respondent.

The appeals of Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza are, therefore, allowed and they are declared entitled to the maintenance allowances granted to them from the date of the compromise. As the Court of Wards had no objection to pay the said allowances and was merely anxious to have the correct interpretation of the decree determined, we direct the parties to these two appeals to bear their own costs throughout.

As regards Muhammad Kazim, it is obvious that he had no right to execute the decree passed by this Court in the interpleader suit because he was no party to it. The decree aforesaid was passed in favour of Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza, the appellants in the said appeals, and by virtue of clause 7 of the compromise the right to take legal proceedings and to enforce it in case of breach or delay was conceded only to the "appellants." The compromise became a part of the decree of this Court, only so far as it related to Rani Saltanat Begam and Rani Dil Afza. As regards Muhammad Kazim and the nine other persons for whom monthly allowances were fixed and who were no parties to the appeals, the compromise contained at best only an agreement or promise which could possibly form the basis of a cause of action for a suit, if its terms were not complied with. None of them had any right to execute the decree, because no decree was passed in favour of any persons other than the appellants.

It is contended, however, on behalf of Muhammad Kazim that a suit for the recovery of the arrears of the allowances would have lain in the same Court in which the application for execution was made, and that the judgment-debtor mainly concerned, namely the Court of Wards, had waived the irregularity by submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court. In support of that contention reliance is placed on the decision in Ponnambala Thiruvirar v. Sivagnana Desika Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi (1) and Vishnu Saktharam Nagarkar v. Krishnarao

DIL AFZA BEGAM v. NANPARA ESTATE.

Malhar (2). In the former case the religious chief of an institution had obtained a decree for the removal of a certain person from the office of tambiran or manager of the property of certain mutts. The decree ordered that the Subordinate Judge should direct the religious chief to name a tambiran from among those initiated at his institution, competent to discharge the duties of a manager, and that if the Judge saw no objection to the fitness of the person so named for the office, he was to appoint him: but that in case the Judge should object to the person named, he was to select as well as to appoint and to direct the religious chief to make the investiture, and to certify it, whereupon the Judge should put the person so appointed and invested in possession of the mutts and their endowments. In the course of the proceedings, arising out of the execution of that decree, certain disputes arose as to the proper person to be appointed.

The religious chief nominated a person and died. His successor sought to withdraw that nomination and appointed another. The Subordinate Judge made an enquiry as to the fitness, making the nominees parties to the proceeding, and confirmed the appointment of the first nominee. The new religious chief appealed to the High Court, making the first nominee a party to his appeal. The High Court reversed that order, whereupon the first nominee appealed to the Privy Council. In reply to an objection that the first nominee was no party to the decree under execution, their Lordships observed that having been made a party to the nomination proceedings arising out of the execution of that decree in both the Courts below, it was too late to object that he had no right to file an appeal from an order passed adverse to him. They further said that since the power of appointment was vested in the Subordinate Judge, the only mode in which relief could be granted was by execution of the decree, and not by suit. As pointed out in Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Purisa Srirangacharyulu (3), this is one of the natural consequences where a scheme of management is propounded by a decree.

Such is not the case here. There is no question connected with the execution of any decree so far as Muhammad Kazim is concerned, for there is no decree granting an allowance to him. A regular suit is, moreover, maintainable on the basis of that portion of the compromise which relates to Muhammad Kazim and he has no right to apply for execution.

The second case referred to is one in which from time to time execution of a decree passed by the Court of the Agent for Sirdars was granted by a British Court without objection. The case went up twice to the High Court, under whose orders the execution was for several years continued in favour of the representatives of the decree-holder. In a later execution proceeding an objection was raised that the decree of the Agent could not be executed by mere transfer to an ordinary Court, and the High Court in refusing to accept that objection observed that had there indeed been no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, the acquiescence of the parties concerned could not create it, but as there was jurisdictional power and the questions at issue were investigated and determined, the irregularity was covered by the consent with which the High Court, under whose orders execution was carried on, had acted. In this case this is the first application for execution so far as the monthly allowance is concerned. No previous application for execution for the recovery of such allowance was either made, determined or granted, and there has been no final order of the highest Court allowing such execution. It is open, therefore, to this Court to nip the mischief in the bud, that is, to stop the irregularity and to direct persons, other than the decree-holders, to seek redress in the manner provided by law.

Section 51 and Order XXI, rule 10, of the Code of Civil Procedure, contemplate that an application for execution can only be made by the holder of a decree. Muhammad Kazim holds no decree, and his learned Counsel frankly admits that the object of his client in seeking redress by execution is to avoid the payment of Court-fees now and hereafter. It is difficult at this stage to say whether a suit for the recovery of the arrears of monthly allowances due to him would have lain in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Lucknow or Bahraich, or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in charge of Tahsil Mohanlalganj, but assuming for the sake of argument that a suit could lie in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in charge of Tahsil Mohanlalganj, in which the application for execution was made, no Court can sanction an irregularity, the effect of which would be to perpetrate a fraud on the Government revenue, and to deprive the State of what is legitimately its due. It is not open to this Court to direct the application for execution to be treated as a plaint, for a portion of the order of the Court below has already become final. The only course open, therefore, is to refuse to recognise the validity of the execution proceedings leaving it open to Muhammad Kazim to seek redress by suit, if he chooses.

The appeal of Muhammad Kazim is dismissed, but no order is made as in the other appeals as to the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Custom—Succession, collateral—Pichhlag son succeeding step-father without objection; whether acquires right of collateral succession—Adoption—Alienation.

Where the members of a family make no objection to a man's being succeeded by his pichhlag son, the latter does not thereby acquire the right to succeed collaterally in the family generally. [p. 137, col. 2.]

In matters of adoption and alienation a pichh'og son is in no better position than a stranger. [p. 137, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rohtak at Karnal, dated the 6th March 1915, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 1st October 1914, decreasing plaintiffs' claim,

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a complete pedigree table, to be found in the judgment of the first Court, explains the relationship of the parties. The suit was by plaintiffs, as reversioners of one Harnam, defendant No. 1, to have it declared that defendant No. 2 is not the adopted son of defendant No. 1; that defendant No. 1 had not the power to adopt him; that the gift of the 14th February 1912 of land by defendant No. 1 to defendant No. 2 should not take effect against the plaintiffs, and so forth.

The first Court held that Surja is not a nephew of Harnam in the proper sense of the word, the fact being that plaintiffs' father was the son of a certain woman Nahnji, who, no doubt, married Moti but who had already given birth to Surja's father Nauba. It follows that there is no relation whatever between Harnam and Surja and both the Courts are agreed on this point. The first Court went on to hold that the adoption of a stranger like Surja was invalid, that the gift in favour of Surja was also invalid, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs must have a decree.

The lower Appellate Court, however, finally agreed with the first Court that there was no blood relationship between Harnam and Surja, holding that, inasmuch as Nauba, father of Surja, had been treated by Moti as his son and has been recognised as the heir of Moti by all the family, therefore, Nauba and, through him his son Surja, became, for all purposes, members of the general family and can inherit collaterally.

In my opinion there is no foundation for this idea. The property is ancestral property, and I am not aware of any authority to the proposition that, because the members of a family make no objection to a man's being succeeded by his pichhlag son, therefore the pichhlag son acquires the right to succeed collaterally in the family generally and, of course, it is obvious that, if Surja was not to be treated as one of the family, his adoption and gift to him are both invalid.

Respondents have not appeared though served and I, therefore, hear the appeal ex parte.

For the reasons given above I accept the appeal and restore the decree of the first Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32 (5)—Pedigree—Admissibility in evidence—Settlement, genealogical table put in at time of, value of.

Some papers were put in at the time of the settlement of a village. The first of them was a genealogical table. At the end of the papers were the names of some of the persons whose names appeared in the said table. None of them affixed their signatures. It was stated that the village patwari signed on behalf of the majority and that certain other persons signed on behalf of the remainder. The Settlement Officer in charge affixed at the end a statement that the owners of the village had verified the correctness of the statements. This verification took place after the khewat of the village had been prepared, so that the entries in the genealogical table could not be deemed to have been utilised in any way for the preparation of the khewat. It was not clear whether the attached names were placed at the end of the papers to record acceptance of the correctness of all or of only the last of the papers. Nor was this fact made clear by the Settlement Officer's order recording the verification:

Held, that under the above circumstances the genealogical table was not admissible in evidence. [p. 140, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 12th October 1914, modifying the order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 13th June 1913.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Babu Kam. Chandra, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4, the sons of Ram Nihal Singh, and by plaintiff No 5, Tikai

Singh, for possession of a two-fourteenth share of property, which had originally belonged to a certain Subhdan Singh. Their allegations were that Subhdan Singh was a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara Law who had died separate, that he had been succeeded by his widow Musammat Jhanjha who obtained the ordinary estate of a Hindu widow in the property, that on the date of her death there were fourteen persons entitled to succeed as reversioners in equal shares, and that Ram Nihal Singh and Tikai Singh were two of these reversioners. The defence was inter alia that Ram Nihal Singh and Tikai Singh were not reversioners and that Subhdan Singh had left a daughter who had had a son. The plaintiffs in replication stated that daughters and daughters' sons were excluded from inheritance under a custom prevailing in the family.

The suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, who decreed it. The learned District Judge on appeal upheld his decree with a small modification.

In order to succeed it was necessary for the plaintiffs to establish (apart from other points) that they were related to Subhdan Singh as they asserted in their plaint. The learned District Judge has found that the oral evidence which they adduced to prove this relationship is unreliable. That finding is a finding of fact which cannot be assailed in second appeal. He found in their favour on the point, however, on the strength of the entries in a certain genealogical table. The main point taken in second appeal is that the evidence contained in this document is inadmissible. The genealogical table in question forms one of a series of papers which were put in the year 1871 at the time of the settlement of the village in which the property is situated. The first of these papers is the genealogical table in question. It contains a very large number of names. The second of these papers is a short history of the village. The third contains an agreement as to division of profits and other matters of a similar nature. Then at the end of the papers are the names of some of the persons whose names appear in the genealogical table. None of these persons, however, affixed their signatures. It is stated that the village patwari signed on behalf of the majority. It is stated that other persons have signed on behalf of the remainder. The Settlement Officer in charge affixed at the end a statement that the owners of the village had verified the correctness of the statements.

The first thing to be noted with regard to these documents is that the verification took place after the khewat of the village had been prepared. There is nothing to show that the entries in the genealogical table were utilised in any way for the preparation of the khewat. In so far as an inference can be drawn from the materials at this Court's disposal, it would appear that the khewat was prepared first and that the genealogical table was prepared afterwards. The next point to be noted is that the genealogical table has no connection with the history of the village or the record of the arrangement as to the division of the profits etc. For the purposes of the Revenue Authorities the papers would have remained in a complete and coherent form if the genealogical table had been omitted. In fact a further division could be made. The history of the village is one separate entity. The arrangement as to the recording of the profits, etc., is another. It is not clear whether the attached names (which the plaintiffs argue are signatures) have been placed at the end of the document, to record acceptance of the correctness of the genealogical table, of the history of the village, and of the readiness of the persons whose names are recorded to abide by the condition of the arrangement for the division of the profits, etc., or whether they are intended merely to convey the readiness of those persons to conform to the provisions of the arrangement. Nor is the Settlement Officer's order recording the verification clear. It may well be read as a note that the parties concerned have verified the arrangement for the division of the profits. In these circumstances can it be said that this genealogical table is admissible in evidence as proving the relationship of the plaintiffs and their ancestors to Subhdan

Singh? The learned Counsel for the appellants has brought to my notice that in a previous case filed by other persons claiming to succeed as reversioners of Subhdan Singh to this very property this genealogical table was produced in evidence and found to be inadmissible by Mr. Evans, Additional Judicial Commissioner. That case is reported as Kashi Singh v. Balraj Singh (1). The decision of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner is not, of course, binding in the present case, but it deserves notice. I do not know whether the learned District Judge was aware that this very genealogical table had been produced previously in this Court and had been found to be inadmissible. (He would not, of course, have been precluded from finding it admissible by virtue of that decision.) If this genealogical table were admissible in evidence at all it could only be under the provisions of section 32, clause 5, of the Evidence Act as a statement made by deceased persons relating to the existence of relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption between persons as to whose relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption the persons making the statement had special means of knowledge and when the statement was made before the question in dispute was raised. In the first place, there is no evidence that the alleged signatures of the patwari and the other persons who are stated to have signed the document were actually their signatures. It can, however, be presumed that under the provisions of section 90 of the Evidence Act, as the document is thirty years old and has been produced from proper custody, the signatures of the patwari and the other persons which purport to be in their handwriting are in their handwriting. But it cannot be presumed under any provision of the Evidence Act that they had authority to sign on behalf of others. That proposition is rightly laid down in Ubilack Rai v. Dalliial Rai (2). Thus we have it that in absence of evidence of such authority there is no proof that the persons in question made the statement. Further, even if it were proved that the persons who affixed their signatures had authority, it is not clear that they signed anything more than the agreement to divide the profits, etc. I am not satisfied that the signatures were intended to support the accuracy of the entries in the long and complicated genealogical table.

The learned District Judge, in support of his decision that these statements are admissible in evidence, has referred to a decision to which I was a party, Ram Din v. Kayesth Pathshala, Allahabad (3). There a Bench of this Court decided that the entries in a pedigree put forward in settlement proceedings could be admitted in evidence. That pedigree had been prepared by a person who was neither a member of the family nor an official whose duty it was to record such pedigree and it was not signed by any member of the family. But there was evidence that its contents were adopted by the members of the family who were privy to its preparation and that upon its basis the entries in the khewat made at the time of the settlement were recorded. The Bench considered that there was sufficient proof of its acceptance to justify the admissibility of the statements with regard to the existence of the relationship between the persons as to whose relationship the persons making the statement had special means of knowledge. Here, however, the case is different. I do not know who prepared the genealogical table in question. It is not established that it was prepared by a member of the family or an official whose duty it was to record it. There is no evidence that any member of the family was privy to its preparation or that its contents were adopted by the members of the family and there is evidence that entries in the khewat made at the time of settlement were not recorded upon its basis. In these circumstances the authority of that decision affords no justification for the admission of this genealogical table in evidence. I find that the statements in the genealogical table in question are not statements relating to relationship made by persons having special means of knowledge and that the genealogical table is inadmissible in evidence. As has been already noted, the appellants attempted to prove their relationship by oral evidence and by production of this genealogical table. They having failed on the oral evidence and the genealogical table being inadmissible in evidence, their suit must be dismissed. It is unnecessary to go into other points raised in the appeal.

I, therefore, decree this appeal and direct that the suit stand dismissed. The respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellants in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

TYAB HAJI AYUB—DEFENDANT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 89, O. XXIII, r. 3, Sch. II—Arbitration without intervention of Court—Award, filing of—Procedure—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899).

Under section 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, the provisions of the Second Schedule govern all arbitrations in a suit or otherwise except such arbitrations as are specially excluded. An arbitration between the parties to a suit without an order of the Court is not excluded and, therefore, comes under the provisions which deal with arbitration without the intervention of the Court. [p. 141, col. 2.]

A party applying to a Court for a decree on an award is bound, if the case does not come within the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, to apply under the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. There is no other law in force under which such an application can be made. [p. 142, col. 1.]

Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, only refers to the adjustment of suits wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise and no application can be made to obtain a decree on an award under that Order. [p. 141, col. 1.]

Mr. Jardine (Advocate-General), for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Strangman, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a motion taken out by the plaintiff for an order that the adjustment of the suit arrived at between the plaintiff and the defendant, as stated in the plaintiff's affidavit, should be recorded and that a decree in accordance therewith should be passed.

The suit was filed on the 11th of June 1915, the plaintiff praying that the defendant might be ordered and decreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 5,353-9-6 as the price of goods sold. On the 31st August 1915, the parties, without the intervention of the Court, agreed to refer the matters in dispute between them concerning the contract referred to in the plaint to the arbitration of Motilal Dayaram and Ramji Meghji. The arbitrators made their award on the 28th of October 1915. The award was filed on the 10th of December. In my opinion, a wrong procedure has been adopted. Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 under which the application is made only refers to the adjustments of suits wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise. No application can be made to obtain a decree on an award except as provided for in section 89 of the Code. That is entirely a new section. It runs as follows:

"Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise and all proceedings thereunder shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule."

If it had been intended that a party might apply for a decree on an award under Order XXIII, rule 3, that rule would have been mentioned in section 89 along with the provisions of the Second Schedule.

It is suggested that Order XXIII, rule 3, comes under the description of 'any other law for the time being in force' but there is no reference in Order XXIII, rule 3, to arbitration proceedings. I am aware of the decision in Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1), but since the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 came into force, I do not think that decision can be any longer binding on me. It seems that the opinion formerly held good, as stated by Farran, C. J., in Ghellaibhai v. Nandubai (2), that there was no section of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 which specially enabled a Court to take cognizance of a submission to arbitration of a matter in issue in a suit made pending the suit other than a submission through the Court, or of an award made upon such a submission, and that such a submission and award could only be taken cognizance of in the same suit as an adjustment under section 375 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 now represented by Order XXIII, rule 3. However that may be, it seems clear that under section 89 the provisions of the Second Schedule govern all arbitrations in a suit or otherwise except such arbitrations as are specially excluded. An arbitration between the parties to a suit without an order of the Court has not been excluded and must, therefore, come under the provisions which deal with arbitration without the intervention of the Court. I do not see myself why the words "without the intervention of the Court" should not refer to cases where the agreement of reference is made out of Court although the parties to the agreement are already parties to a suit, and, in my opinion, section 89 is now conclusive on the question.

It seems obvious that if an application for a decree on an award could be made under Order XXIII, rule 3, as soon as it has been proved to the Court that there has been an agreement to refer and an award, the Court would be bound to order the award to be recorded as an agreement or compromise, and would be bound to pass a decree in accordance therewith, excluding all the provisions of the Second Schedule relating to the powers of the Court when an application is made for a decree on an award. Paragraph 20 and the following paragraphs of the Second Schedule refer to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and under paragraph 21, where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon, and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award. Paragraph 14 gives the Court power to remit the award under certain circumstances to the arbitrator. Paragraph 15 gives the Court power on certain grounds to set aside an award. Therefore, in my opinion, there is no other law at present in force except the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899 and a party applying to the Court for a decree on an award is bound, if the case does not come within that Act, to apply to the Court under the Second Schedule.

The defendant now disputes the legality of the award on two grounds:—first, that the arbitrators exceeded their jurisdiction and decided something which was not within their power to decide, and, secondly, that they refused an opportunity to the defendant to call witnesses or that after they had given him to understand that they would adjourn the matter to enable him to call evidence, they published their award without giving him any such opportunity. I think the defendant is entitled to raise those objections and be heard upon them. Therefore, the application by consent is now to be treated as an application under paragraph 21 of the Second Schedule and can be set down for hearing on præcipe in order to decide those questions. Costs to be costs in the application.

In re Syed ALI MUHAMMAD—

Legal Practitioner—Counsel engaged for one party, whether should be allowed to appear for opposite party —Practice.

It is not desirable, except under very exceptional circumstances, that a Counsel, who has been engaged to conduct a case from start to finish for one party, should be allowed to appear for the opposite party.

Application of Saiyid Ali Muhammad, Vakil for the Appellant, in First Civil Appeal No. 85 of 1915, Fakhr Jahan Begam Defendant v Abdul Ghani Khan, Plaintiff, for permission to withdraw from the side of Appellant and to accept the case for the other side.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Ali Muhammad states that he received the grounds of appeal drafted by Syed Wazir Hasan and that he got the memorandum of appeal ready for the filing and signed it, and filed it after accepting the vakalatnama which was brought to him duly signed by the appellant by the clerk of Syed Wazir Hasan. He also says that he got no instructions from his client and had no other hand in the matter. Syed Wazir Hasan who appears for Musammatt Fakhr Jahan Begam, states that the husband of the lady had given him instructions from the very beginning, and that about three days ago had come to him on the receipt of the notice of this petition, and that when he was asked whether he had any objection to the application, he said that he had none.

It is not desirable except under very exceptional circumstances that a Counsel, who has been engaged to conduct a case from start to finish for one party, should be allowed to appear for the opposite party. At the same time we have no reason to doubt the bona fides of Mr. Ali Muhammad in this particular instance. We consider it, however, preferable that having been once engaged, he should stick to the side on behalf of which he was retained. Mr. Ali Muhammad states that he has no objection to this.

The application is, therefore, rejected and will be filed with the record.

Application rejected.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 37—Decree nisi for divorce—Alimony—Wife living with co-respondent—Discretion of Court.

The grant of alimony to a wife against whom the husband has obtained a decree nisi for divorce on the ground of adultery is a matter of discretion. [p. 144, col. 1.]

Kelly v. Kelly, 5 B. L. R. 71, referred to.

Where there was no suggestion that the husband's conduct led to the wife's misconduct, and the wife was living with the co-respondent, the Court refused to exercise its discretion. [p. 144, col. 1.]

FACTS of this case are briefly as follows:—

John McGowan instituted a suit against his wife Winnifred McGowan and her father claiming a divorce from his wife on the ground of her incestuous adultery with her own father. The wife Winnifred McGowan brought a counter-claim against her husband John McGowan for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. The charge of cruelty against the husband was not established in Court and the suit of the wife for judicial separation was dismissed.

In the suit of John McGowan, incestuous adultery with the father was proved and consequently a decree nisi for divorce was made in favour of the husband, by Walsh J., on the 23rd May 1916. The wife Winnifred McGowan and her father appealed under section 10 of the Letters Patent. The appeal was still pending when the present application was made for alimony pending the confirmation of the decree nisi under section 16 of the Indian Divorce Act, IV of 1869.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Petitioner (the wife).—Under section 36 of the Indian Divorce Act the wife is entitled to be supported by the husband till the confirmation of the decree nisi. Moreover, we have filed an appeal against the decree nisi. The lis between the parties has not yet come to an end. Even if the wife is guilty of adultery she is entitled to alimony so long as the decree does not become absolute against her.

The case was then argued on the merits.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Opposite Party (the husband).—The wife has been found guilty of adultery and we have obtained a decree nisi for divorce against her. So far as this Court is concerned the lis is at an end.

The woman is still living with the co-respondent, presumably in incestuous adultery, and he is maintaining her. She is, therefore, entitled to no alimony: Holt v. Holt and Davis (1).

Under the circumstances of the present case she cannot pledge the credit of her husband. Her petition for alimony should, therefore, be dismissed: Gordon v. Gordon (2).

The case was then argued on the merits.

Mr. A. E. Howard, in reply.—In this unfortunate case the father happens to be the co-respondent. The wife is a very young girl and in a very delicate condition. She has got no mother. Where is she to go? Refers to Kelly v. Kelly (3).

JUDGMENT.—The case relied upon, namely that of Holt v. Holt and Davis (1), is the one really in point. That was an application for alimony pendente lite and it was held that even pendente lite when it was shown that the wife was living with the co-respondent, whether they were living in adultery or not, alimony should not be ordered against the husband during that period. But for the purpose of an application by a wife for alimony it is always assumed that the wife is innocent. The practice of the Divorce Court seems to be uniform on the question of alimony after the wife has been convicted of adultery. The absence of any statement in the text books is probably due to the fact that it is taken for granted that an ecclesiastical Court would never listen to an application by a wife who has been convicted of adultery. I find the following authorities on the subject. In Winstone v. Winstone (4), which was of course an ecclesiastical decision, the petition by a wife for alimony after a decree nisi had been passed against her was ordered to be taken off the file. This was in 1861. In 1888 the Court of Appeal in Otway v. Otway (5), which was a decision with regard to costs, observed—"her adultery prevented her from pledging the credit of her husband and prevented her from getting any alimony or allowance from the husband." It, therefore, appears to me that there is decision by the ecclesiastical Court that a wife against whom a decree nisi for divorce has been passed on the ground of adultery, is not entitled to apply for alimony and that this was the view taken by a Court of Appeal in 1888. In the absence of any authority to the contrary it would be my duty to refuse to entertain the present application.

In this country, however, having regard to the decision in Kelly v. Kelly (3) by Sir Barnes Peacock, it appears to be a matter of discretion. But in the case before me, there being no suggestion in the suit which I tried that the husband's conduct led to the wife's misconduct and the wife being in fact at the present moment under the roof of the co-respondent, I think I ought not to exercise my discretion in the manner in which it was exercised by Sir Barnes Peacock for the reason given by him. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Decree, construction of—Decree conditional upon payment of an amount within 30 days of decree becoming final—Payment, validity of, after 30 days but before expiry of time of appeal.

A decree was obtained conditional upon the plaintiff's paying into Court a certain sum of money within "thirty days of the decree becoming final". The plaintiff deposited the money after thirty days but before the expiry of the appeal time:

Held, that the money was paid within 30 days of the decree becoming final.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the decision of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Walsh, dated the 24th of March 1916, reported as 34 Ind. Cas. 204.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellants.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff obtained a decree conditional upon his paying into Court a certain sum of money within "thirty days of the decree becoming final." Thirty days is the time allowed for filing appeals. But this time is extended by section 12 of the Limitation Act which provides that the time necessary for obtaining a copy of the judgment shall be excluded in computing the thirty days. The plaintiff did not deposit the money within thirty days but he did deposit the money before the time had expired within which the defendant might appeal. The question, therefore, which arises for decision is this: Was this money paid in within 30 days of the decree becoming "final". A learned Judge of this Court has decided in the affirmative. We think that his view is correct. There is no doubt a considerable conflict of authority and we are entitled, therefore, to deal with the case upon the view that we think to be correct. The whole object of the provision in the decree giving the plaintiff thirty days after the decree had become final, was to obviate the plaintiff having unnecessarily to bring money into Court and allow it to remain there idle during all the time that an appeal against the decree would be pending. The object, therefore, of the provision in the decree would be defeated if the plaintiff was obliged to bring his money into Court before the time had expired within which the defendant might prefer an appeal. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The panachut or outer verandah where shoes are taken off is part of a Burmese dwelling-house and a person who commits criminal trespass on a panachut under the circumstances set forth in section 441, Indian Penal Code, commits house-trespass, and it is an offence involving breach of the peace within the meaning of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, where the object is to cause hurt to one of the persons in the house.

Tarini Charn Mundle v. Gourikant Biswas, 7 C. W. N. 25, referred to.

JUDGMENT.—The panachut or outer verandah where shoes are taken off is part of a Burmese dwelling-house, and I see no reason to doubt that a person who commits criminal trespass on a panachut under the circumstances set forth in section 441, Indian Penal Code, commits house-trespass.

The learned Sessions Judge in his order of reference raises the further question whether the order requiring security to keep the peace under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, is valid, seeing that the offence of which the accused was convicted, i.e., house-trespass, is not an offence of which breach of the peace is a necessary ingredient. It is clear, however, in the present case that the criminal trespass was committed with the sole object of causing hurt to one of the persons in the house and I think it is, therefore, correct to hold that the particular offence committed by the accused in this case was one "involving a breach of the peace" within the meaning of section 106, Criminal Procedure Code. I am fortified in this opinion by the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Tarini Charn Mundle v. Gourikant Biswas (1), in which the facts resembled those of the present case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 185, 527—Construction and scope of sections—Jurisdiction—Form of order—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 409, 420.

Per Curiam (Woodroffe, J., dissenting).—Section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, is not restricted to cases in which there is doubt as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction, but includes cases in which the doubt arises as to the suitability of one Court as compared with another (by which the offence shall be enquired into or tried), from the point of view of convenience or expediency. [p. 146, col. 2; p. 152, col. 1; p. 157, col. 2; p. 158, col. 2.]

Rajam Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company, 22 Ind. Cas 192; 41 C. 305; 17 C. W. N. 1207; 15 Cr. L. J. 48, dissented from.

Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen, 20 Ind. Cas 222; 17 C. W. N. 761; 14 Cr. L. J. 395 and Emperor v. Chaichal Singh, 2 Ind. Cas 361; 9 Cr. L. J. 531; 5 L. B. R. 17, approved.

Per Sanderson, C. J. and Newbould, J.—The jurisdiction under section 185 should be exercised sparingly by a High Court, when proceedings against an accused residing within the local limits of the Criminal Appellate jurisdiction of that Court have been instituted in a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to another High Court. [p. 152, col. 2; p. 159, col. 1.]

Per Woodroffe, J.—The "doubt" referred to in section 185 is a doubt as to the competency or jurisdiction of a Court and does not include a doubt whether one or another Court should enquire into or try a case on the ground of convenience or expediency. [p. 153, col. 2.]

Section 185 is not designed to cut down admitted jurisdiction, but to determine cases where the facts said to constitute jurisdiction are doubtful. [p. 153, col. 2.]

The doubt as to what are the acts which are said to constitute the offence and where they were committed is not the "doubt" which is referred to in section 185, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 154, col. 2.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction. [p. 155, col. 2.]

CHARU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR v. EMPEROR.

Scopes of sections 185 and 527 explained. [p. 156, cols. 1 & 2.]

A narrow construction should not be placed upon section 185. [p. 156, col. 2.]

The High Court has jurisdiction to make an order under section 185 in respect of an enquiry instituted or trial commenced in a Court not subordinate to itself. [p. 156, col. 1.]

Where proceedings against the accused residing within the criminal appellate jurisdiction of the High Court of Calcutta were instituted in respect of alleged offences under sections 403 and 420, Indian Penal Code, in a Court within the Presidency of Bombay, on an application by the accused a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (Woodroffe and Newbould, JJ., dissenting), in consideration of the circumstances of the case and the convenience of the parties, made an order under section 185 declaring that the case against the accused should be enquired into or tried by the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta.

The form of the order under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, in such a case laid down. [p. 147, col. 1; p. 152, col. 2.]

FACTS of the case appear from the following order of reference, dated 16th November 1916:—

CHAUDHURI AND NEWBOULD, JJ.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Karwar in the Presidency of Bombay to show cause why the proceedings against the petitioner should not be transferred to the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and the alleged offence enquired into and tried in Calcutta, or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

This Rule was issued in exercise of the Court's powers under section 185 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and one of the points to be considered is, what powers we have under this section. The section is in the following terms: "Whenever any doubt arises as to the Court by which any offence should under the preceding provisions of this chapter be enquired into or tried, the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender actually is, may decide by which Court the offence shall be enquired into or tried." In the case of Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) it was held by a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of their Lordships Imam and Chapman, JJ., that section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, did not warrant interference by this Court on the ground of convenience, when two Courts were equally competent to exercise jurisdiction in the matter. But in the case of Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) another Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of their Lordships Chitty and Richardson, JJ., granted a similar application. They held that they might properly make an order under this section transferring a case from the Court in another Province where it had been instituted to a Court in this Province on the ground of convenience, when the Court at either place would have jurisdiction. The only other ruling on this point that we have been able to discover is that of Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (3), which was cited on behalf of the petitioner. In that case it was held that the section is not restricted to cases in which there is doubt as to whether one Court or another has jurisdiction, but includes cases in which the doubt is on the point whether the choice between the two Courts, both of which have jurisdiction, should be decided on the ground of general convenience. In our opinion this view is correct. We think with due respect that the learned Judges who decided the case of Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) overlooked the effect of the words "should under the preceding provisions of this chapter be enquired into or tried" in section 185. A reference to the preceding sections shows that a question of doubt as to jurisdiction can seldom arise, as provision is made that in the event of circumstances which otherwise would have made it doubtful where the trial should be held, it can be held in any of the several Courts to whom jurisdiction is given by these sections. But these provisions giving jurisdiction to more Courts than one for the same offence must necessarily create a possibility of doubt as to which Court can more conveniently in the interests of public justice exercise that jurisdiction. It seems to us that "the doubt as to the Court by which any offence should under the preceding provisions be enquired into or tried" includes, in the ordinary sense of the words, a doubt as to the suitability of one Court compared with another and is not limited to a doubt as to jurisdiction. We are, therefore, substantially in agreement with the decision of this Court in the case of Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2). Our only doubt is as to the correctness of the form of the order made in that case, that is to say, whether we could expressly order the transfer of the case from a Court outside our jurisdiction to one within it. If we made an order under this section we think it ought to be of a declaratory nature, leaving it to the prosecution to take the necessary steps to enable the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to assume jurisdiction.

As this case involves an important question of jurisdiction when the two reported decisions of this Court have taken practically opposite views, we think it is a fit case for reference to a Full Bench of this Court, under Part II, Chapter V, rule 5 of our rules, for such orders as to such Bench may seem fit.

We have also to state that we are not agreed on the question of convenience and append our separate judgments on that point.

We agree that as the matter is being referred to a Full Bench that Bench should also consider the question of convenience, if necessary to decide it, instead of having a separate reference to a third Judge. The points, therefore, for the determination of the Full Bench are as follows:—

(1). Is the decision in Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) correct?

(2) Is the form of the order in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) correct?

If not, what is the correct form of the order?

The further point for consideration is:—

(3) Has the accused made a sufficient case for an order under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground of convenience?

CHAUDHURI, J.—I would make the Rule absolute and transfer the case on the following grounds:—

I do not clearly understand what the charge really is against the petitioner. The explanation of the Magistrate of Karwar on this point is vague and somewhat shadowy. The notes made by the District Superintendent of Police contained in a document headed "points to refute" do not give much help. Mr. Camell appearing on behalf of the Crown states he has not sufficient instructions in the matter and can give no further help. The accused has not been able to get from the prosecution any particulars relating to the nature of the charge. The record of the criminal case consists of the charge-sheet which does not state the case. I consider the evidence of the witnesses mentioned by the Magistrate is likely to be of a formal nature. Admittedly the case depends mostly on documentary evidence and the books of the Company. The accused is the principal officer in charge of the Company which has its main office in Calcutta. His removal and the removal of his books would mean the stoppage of the business, which involves the interests of a large number of policy-holders. The affairs of the Company are also under investigation by the Registrar in Calcutta. Weight ought to be attached to the offer of the defence to bear the expense of the examination of necessary witnesses in Calcutta. The accused also suggests that a commission may be issued for the examination of the Karwar witnesses. The prosecution has been undertaken and the expense is being borne by the Crown. It is to be noted that section 185 provides a safeguard as far as the accused is concerned, namely, to prevent his harassment. The case against the sub-agent was started sometime ago at Karwar, and it seems to me that the prosecution had ample time to be able to frame or indicate the nature of the case against the accused. The indefinite character of the case taken with the other circumstances, specially the stoppage of the business of the Company, appears to me to be sufficient ground for transferring the case to Calcutta, specially as the doubt on the question of jurisdiction arises from the failure on the part of the prosecution to define the nature of the charge.

NEWBOULD, J.—I hold that on the merits the Rule must be discharged. I quit appreciate that it will be far more convenient for the petitioner to be tried in Calcutta. But we have to consider the balance of convenience and the interests of justice and it would be a greater hardship to the prosecution witnesses to compel them to attend a trial here, on the following grounds :—

A large number of these witnesses are poor and illiterate and not conversant with any language except their mother tongue, while the petitioner is an educated gentleman of means. He has offered through his Counsel to bear the extra expense that the trial of the case in Calcutta would involve. But the trouble that will be caused to witnesses of this class by keeping them in a strange country, 1,800 miles from their home, for a considerable period could not be suitably remedied by monetary compensation. It is contended that they are not important witnesses and might be examined on commission. Our attention has been drawn to a remark of the Magistrate, Karwar town, in his order of the 31st July to the effect that the case against the petitioner seems to depend mostly on documentary evidence. In passing this order the Magistrate was, it appears, only considering the question of bail. I do not think the Magistrate meant more than that the proof of criminal liability of the petitioner would principally depend on documentary evidence. It will have to be proved in the presence of the petitioner, before he can be convicted, that the offences charged have been committed, as well as his personal criminal liability. Proof of the commission of those offences will depend directly on the evidence of these ignorant witnesses and I do not think that this issue could be fairly tried on evidence taken on commission. As regards the removal of the books of the Company, whether the case is tried in Calcutta or at Karwar there must be serious interference with the work of the Company. The extra inconvenience that will be caused by removing the books to a Court at a greater distance is not, in my opinion, sufficient to justify the transfer of the case.

I am, therefore, of opinion that a transfer of this case will neither promote the ends of justice, nor tend to the general convenience of parties or witnesses and I would accordingly discharge this Rule.

Mr. Norton, (with him Messrs. Ayeboom and K. N. Chowdhury and Babus Atulya Charan Bose, Monmotho Nath Mookerjee, Jatindra Nath Roy Chowdhury and Charu Chandra Biswas), for the Petitioner.—In this case the petitioner has been charged with offences under sections 409 and 420, Indian Penal Code, and the case has been instituted in Karwar in the Bombay Presidency. The petitioner being a resident of Calcutta and carrying on business here is entitled to invoke your Lordships' interference under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, and have the case transferred to Calcutta. Section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, applies to this case, because there is a doubt, having regard to the facts alleged, as to which Court would have jurisdiction to try the petitioner. There are conflicting rulings on the question of the jurisdiction of Courts in a case like this. Refers to Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (4), Mahadeo v. Emperor (5), George Langridge v. Grace Atkins (6), Ganesh Lal v. Nand Kishore (7), Rumbilas, In re (8), Krishnamachari v. Shaw Wallace and Company (9), Gokal Chand v. Phul Chand (10), Babu Lal v. Ghansham Das (11). This conflict of authorities is itself a sufficient reason for raising a doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Courts to try the petitioner, and entitles him to invoke the aid of section 185, Criminal Procedure Code.

The section also applies to this case because on grounds of expediency and balance of convenience the case ought to be tried here. That the High Court, under section 185, can interfere on grounds of convenience.

was decided in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2). No doubt a contrary view was taken in a recent case reported as Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) by Imam and Chapman, JJ. But I submit that the ruling in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) lays down the correct law on the point, and that ruling is supported by a decision of the Chief Court of Lower Burma reported as Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (3).

The element of convenience, although not expressly mentioned in any of the preceding sections of the chapter, is still implied in every one of them. In some of them there can be no doubt whatever as to the venue, excepting as to the balance of convenience. Besides, the words "should be tried" instead of the words could be tried clearly indicate that the "doubt" is not confined merely to the question of jurisdiction of the Court which could try the case, but extends to the question as to which Court should try the case, having regard to the considerations of expediency and convenience.

Mr. Camell, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.—The "doubt" contemplated by section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, must be one in relation to "the preceding provisions of the chapter", which deal exclusively with the question of jurisdiction of Courts. The "doubt", therefore, must be with regard to the jurisdiction and nothing else. The question of convenience has been expressly dealt with in section 526, which provides for the transfer of cases, on the ground of convenience amongst others, from one Court to another under the same High Court, and in section 527 under which the Governor-General can transfer cases on the ground of convenience from one Court to another under a different High Court. It could not, therefore, be held that the ground of convenience is to be implied in section 185 although there is no mention of it in that section while there is express mention of it in some other sections of the Act.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Take, for instance, section 182, first sentence. Where an offence is committed partly in one place and partly in another it can be tried at either place, so there could be no doubt in such a case as to jurisdiction. How could section 185 apply to such a case unless there be a doubt as to the most convenient Court to try the offence?]

In such a case as there can be no doubt as to jurisdiction, my answer is that section 185 would not apply. Such a doubt may not arise in each of the cases contemplated by the preceding sections referred to in section 185. Only in those cases in which a doubt as to jurisdiction arises section 185 applies.

As to the significance of the word "should" it merely means "shall", and indicates mere futurity without the sense of "ought to". In the marginal note to the section the word "shall" is used. When a word is used in an Act which in popular language is capable of two meanings the word must have that meaning which gives only so much power as is necessary to carry out the object of the Act and not any unnecessary powers. Vide Wandsworth Board of Works v. United Telephone Co. (12). The Governor-General having been vested with necessary powers of transfer by section 527, Criminal Procedure Code, in a case like this, it is quite unnecessary for the High Court to have the power of transferring a case pending in another Province under section 185 on the grounds of convenience and expediency. The changes in the wording of the section and of its position in the successive Codes are significant and clearly indicate that the Legislature did not intend the question of convenience to be a factor in section 185. Section 185 of the present Code corresponds to section 69 of Act X of 1872 and section 23 of Act IV of 1877. In the Code of 1872 the various sections dealing with the transfer of cases on the ground of convenience were kept in the same chapter with section 69, which corresponds to section 185 of the present Code. But in section 69 the words "under the preceding provisions of this chapter" did not occur. But in the present Code of 1898 sections 64 and 64A of the old Code which related to transfer on the ground of convenience have been taken away from the chapter in which section 185 occurs and relegated to another chapter, and at the same time the words "under the preceding provisions of this chapter" have been added in the body of section 185, which corresponds to section 69 of the Code of 1872 in which no such words could be found. Hence it is clear that the Legislature intended that the question of convenience is not to be an element in the "doubt" contemplated by section 185. As to the doubt on the question of jurisdiction in the present case, there can be none about the charge under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The offence under that section was committed at Karwar, the false representation and delivery of money both having taken place there. There can be some doubt as to the charge under section 409. That being so, the High Court cannot decide where the trial of the offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, is to take place. It can only decide about section 409. Its power under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, is to decide where a particular "offence" is to be tried, and not where the whole case is to be tried. The trial of the offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, at Karwar will not prejudice the accused, because he cannot again be tried in Calcutta on the same facts under section 409, as such a trial would be barred under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. Norton briefly replied.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case a Rule was issued by this Court on the 14th August 1916 calling upon the District Magistrate of Karwar (in the Presidency of Bombay, District North Canara) to show cause why the proceedings should not be transferred to the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta and the alleged offence enquired into and tried in Calcutta, or why such other order should not be passed in the matter as to this Court may seem fit and proper on the grounds mentioned in the petition:

With a direction that the Rule should be sent to the Registrar of the High Court in Bombay for favour of its transmission by him to the District Magistrate.

The Rule was served with the assistance of the Registrar of the Bombay High Court upon the local Magistrate and the Rule came up for argument before Chaudhuri and Newbould, JJ., during the vacation.

The questions at issue were (1) whether the learned Judges had jurisdiction under section 185 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to make the Rule absolute, (2) if they had such jurisdiction, whether it should be exercised and (3) if it were so exercised, in what form the order should be made.

The learned Judges were agreed on the question of jurisdiction but were unable to agree as to the manner in which it should be exercised. They expressed the opinion that as the case involved an important question of jurisdiction, and as the Court in two reported decisions, viz, Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) and Rajani Berod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) had apparently taken opposite views, they considered it a fit case for reference to a Full Bench, and expressed the view that as the matter was being referred to a Full Bench, that Bench should also consider the second question, viz, the question of convenience, upon which they were not agreed; a course in which the learned Counsel engaged in the case before the Full Bench have concurred.

The questions for the determination of the Full Bench were stated as follows:—

"1. Is the decision in Rajani Binod Chakravarty v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) correct?

2. Is the form of the order in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) correct? If not, what is the correct form of the order.

The further point for consideration is:—

3. Has the accused made a sufficient case for an order under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground of convenience?"

The applicant for the Rule is the managing agent and a Director of the Bharat Luxmi Provident Company, Ltd., carrying on business at its registered Head Office at 81, Clive Street, Calcutta, and he resides within the local limits of the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction of this High Court.

Proceedings against him and one of the Company's agents were instituted at a place called Karwar in the Canara District of the Presidency of Bombay.

The charges made against the applicant for the Rule are vague and indefinite.

Two charge-sheets have been produced before us written in the Kanarese language, and after very considerable trouble, which would have been avoided if proper steps had been taken by those instructing learned

CHARU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR v. EMPEROR.

Counsel for the prosecution, the officials of the Court have succeeded in obtaining a translation.

These show the charge to be as follows:—

“(1) The charge is that the Company effected Life Assurance and granted marriage policies stipulating in both cases to pay more than the money invested by the assured, but has failed to do so. Accused stand charged under sections 420 and 409 of the Indian Penal Code.”

“(2) Charged with swindling persons effecting insurances without proper return according to the regulations of the Company.”

Such statements do not give much, if any, indication of what the real nature of the criminal charges is against the managing agent, and indeed taken by themselves the statements might almost be said to amount to allegations of a civil liability against the Company rather than a criminal charge against the applicant personally. The District Superintendent of Police of Kanara, however, has forwarded a statement, entitled “Points to refute the statement made by Charu Chandra Majumdar in his application to the Calcutta High Court”.

This statement is almost as vague as the statements in the charge-sheet, but it purports to allege that the Company on false representations and assurances led the public to become subscribers of the Company and to obtain policies, and failed to carry out the promises with the ultimate result that the policies lapsed and the managing agent managed the accounts in such a way, by withholding proper receipts, that he appropriated the money subscribed by the policy-holders and “allowed the policies to lapse directly or indirectly” and thereby managed to profit the Company and himself.

With such statements only before us, it is difficult to understand what is the real nature of the charge made against the managing agent; the conclusion I come to is, that the prosecution intend to allege some system of fraud against the Company to which the managing agent was a party and that they do not know what it will be until they have had an opportunity of investigating the books of the Company.

I am confirmed in this opinion by the fact that we were informed that the prosecution have demanded the production of the Company's books for the years 1911 to 1915, and that as regards the managing agent, the Magistrate has expressed the opinion “that the case against him seems to depend mostly on documentary evidence.”

(1) as regards the first point, viz., jurisdiction, it is not disputed by the learned Counsel for the Crown that if it could be shown on the facts that the Court at Karwar had no jurisdiction to try the case against the managing agent, this Court would have jurisdiction under section 185, Code of Criminal Procedure, to decide by which Court the alleged offence should be enquired into or tried, and it has also been conceded by him that if on the facts there is a doubt where the offence was committed this Court could exercise the powers given by section 185. He has argued, however, that on the facts the alleged offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, must have been committed (if committed at all) partly within the jurisdiction of the Karwar Court, and that as regards the alleged offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code, there may be a doubt whether the Karwar Court has jurisdiction.

He argued, therefore, that as regards the alleged offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, at all events this Court could not exercise powers contained in section 185.

In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived upon the question of “convenience,” and to which I will refer hereinafter, I do not think it necessary to decide the point whether such a state of affairs as set out above would be sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction under section 85, and in my judgment it would not be desirable in this case to express any opinion thereon, unless it was necessary so to do, having regard to the vagueness and indefiniteness of the charges: the state of uncertainty in which the Court is left both as to the charges and the facts upon which they are alleged to be based make it very difficult to arrive at any definite conclusion without further investigation.

The main point, however, on which the question of jurisdiction was argued, was that of “convenience”.

It was argued on behalf of the applicant that this Court could exercise the powers given by section 185 merely on the ground of "convenience" and "expediency." This was strenuously denied in argument by the learned Counsel for the prosecution. This question depends upon the proper construction of section 185.

That section says:

(1) Whenever any doubt arises as to the Court by which any offence should under the preceding provisions of this chapter be enquired into or tried, the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually is, may decide by which Court the offence shall be enquired into or tried."

The words in the section "should under the preceding provisions of this chapter" necessitate a reference to sections 177 to 184, and a consideration of those sections leads me to the conclusion that in some cases, mentioned in those sections, e.g., where jurisdiction is given to more Courts than one for the same offence, if a doubt arises as to the Court by which such offence should be tried it must involve a doubt as to the suitability of one Court as compared with another from the point of view of "convenience and expediency."

I, therefore, agree with the construction placed upon the section by Chaudhuri, J., and Newbould, J.

This is in accordance with the judgment of Chitty, J., and Richardson, J., in Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) and Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (3) and consequently, in my judgment, the decision in Rajani Benod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1) was not correct.

(2) I take next the question whether from the point of view of general convenience the case against the managing agent should be tried in Calcutta or at Karwar. This is a question by no means free from difficulty, as is evidenced by the fact that different views have been taken by Chaudhuri, J., and Newbould, J. I have come to the conclusion, however, that the balance of convenience is in favour of the case being tried in Calcutta, and, therefore, with great deference to the opinion expressed by Newbould, J., I really need say no more than that I agree with the conclusion arrived at by Chaudhuri, J.

The learned Judge has set out the main grounds for his conclusion in his judgment, and I need not repeat them.

I will add this, that although it is alleged that a considerable number of witnesses who are policy-holders will be necessary to prove a "system" on the part of the Company, the evidence of such witnesses must necessarily be of a formal nature and perhaps undisputed, whereas the real crux of the case will depend upon a close investigation of the books of the Company, and upon an enquiry as to how the money subscribed by the policy-holders has been applied. This will necessitate, as we have been told and as I assume, the evidence of expert accountants on the one side and the other and this is the part of the case which, in my judgment, will be likely to occupy the greater portion of the time devoted to the enquiry. The prosecution allege that the books for five years will be necessary and the Magistrate, as already mentioned, states that the case will depend mostly on documentary evidence.

If such books and the managing agent are to be taken to Karwar and to remain there for weeks and perhaps months, it is possible that this may create a great hardship on the Company, and it is alleged that it will amount virtually to a stoppage of the business of the Company.

I think that this jurisdiction in cases of this kind should be exercised sparingly, but with respect to this matter, in my judgment, it is impossible to leave out of consideration the fact that the prosecution have failed to define the real nature of the criminal charges alleged against the managing agent, although it must have been obvious that on such an application as this it was essential that the Court should have as definite information thereon as is possible—a fact which I think may be taken to render this case an exceptional one.

(3) As regards the form of the order, in my judgment it should follow the words of section 185 and it should be limited to a declaration that the Court's decision is that the case against Charu Chandra Majumdar should be enquired into or tried by the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate in Calcutta. This will leave it open to the prosecution or the applicant to take such steps as they may be advised.

I desire to take this opportunity of expressing our obligation to the Chief Justice and Judges of the Bombay High Court for their courteous assistance to us in this matter.

WOODROFFE, J.—The referring judgment holds that this Court has extra-territorial jurisdiction under section 185 and this is not disputed by the Crown and, therefore, I need not consider the section upon this point.

The question then before us is, whether the "doubt" referred to in the section is a doubt as to competency or jurisdiction, or whether it is a "doubt" whether one or another Court should enquire into or try a case on the ground that an accused alleges that it will be inconvenient for him if one of these Courts does so. There is no question but that this matter of convenience is dealt with by the Criminal Procedure Code, as regards Courts within the jurisdiction under section 526, and without the jurisdiction under section 527. We are then asked to say that though the Code provides that the Government may transfer a case which is in a Court outside the jurisdiction on the ground of convenience, section 185 gives a similar power to the High Court, with this difference that whereas the Government can make an order of transfer this Court cannot, but can only pass a "decision" in the nature of a declaratory order to which comity of Courts will give effect. It is not usual for the Legislature to duplicate procedure in this way and one result of holding that it has done so, will make it possible for this Court under section 185 and the Government under section 527 to pass conflicting orders. Further, as Mr. Camell has shown, the course of legislation is against the view that section 185 is intended to cover questions of convenience of this kind. For under the Code of 1882 the present section 185 and sections 526, 527 were placed within the same chapter, whereas now the two latter sections have been removed to another chapter, and the words "under the preceding provisions of this chapter" have been inserted in section 185. Thus to take an instance appropriate to the present case, under section 181 (2) criminal breach of trust may be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property was received or retained or the offence was committed. There might be a doubt on the facts whether what was done constituted a receiving or retention within a particular jurisdiction or whether the offence was committed in another local area. Under these circumstances the assistance of the Court might be invoked to determine the matter under section 185. But if there is no such doubt and it is clear that property was retained within one jurisdiction, and the offence committed in another, the Court has no power to interfere under section 185 on the ground that it is more convenient to the accused that he should be tried in one jurisdiction and not in another. To hold otherwise would be to cut down the clear provisions of section 181 (2) and to give the Courts of one Province power to interfere with action taken in the Courts of another Province, upon grounds which may occur in any and every case. This I think was never intended, nor that the High Court should determine that one Court is more suitable than another if there is no doubt that there is jurisdiction in either. Section 185 is not designed to cut down admitted jurisdiction, but to determine cases where the facts said to constitute jurisdiction are doubtful. There must also be facts on which a doubt can arise. These provisions deal with jurisdiction and not with convenience. We may speak of a "doubt" whether one Court or another has jurisdiction, but it is straining language to say that there is a "doubt" (not a "question") whether it is convenient to an accused to be tried in one Court or another. The word "should" is possibly ambiguous and may apply to the suitability of a particular Court as well as its competency. For the reasons, however, above stated, I think that section 185 does not deal with transfer of cases on the ground of mere convenience raised by the accused but with doubt as to competency. As the question of convenience can be raised in a very large number of cases, a contrary construction may lead to an obstruction of administration. Where proceedings are started in Bengal applications can be made in Bombay, Madras, Allahabad and elsewhere and vice versa. There is nothing to prevent an accused leaving one jurisdiction and going to another to make such an application. If it is not a bona fide application it may be rejected, but meanwhile proceedings are delayed and the prosecution obstructed. I am of opinion we cannot under this section consider the question of convenience merely, but if we could, I agree with Mr. Justice Newbould that this is not a case in which we should make an order having the effect of removing the proceedings from Bombay. In a matter of convenience we must consider not only the interests of the accused but also of the prosecution and its witnesses. The return of the Magistrate states the grounds which, I think, support the view which Mr. Justice Newbould has taken. The complainants are poor illiterate persons and to ask them and their witnesses to travel to Calcutta will, I have little doubt, result, as Mr. Camell says, in the prosecution falling through: though (without prejudging the case against the accused) there is material on the record to show that it is possible that this is one of the too numerous cases in which persons allege that they have been defrauded by the indigenous provident societies and insurance offices which have sprung up in India in recent years. If we accede to the general contentions urged in this case, the result is likely to be as follows:—Such societies generally have their head office in the larger towns and sometimes, as here, in the capital of another Province than that in which the insurances are effected. In such cases to call upon poor illiterate persons to go to the expense and trouble of travelling far from the place where the offence was committed may amount to a denial of justice. As is well known, the Courts are as a rule averse to issuing commissions in criminal cases, and the main point urged by the accused that his books are wanted is met in part by the fact that they will be required wherever the suit is tried, and if it be said that the inconvenience will be less here than in Bombay, the answer is that all that the prosecution require are the entries relating to the Khanapur Agency and of these only copies are required, on which being given the books may be returned.

I come now to the next contention that apart from the question of convenience a "doubt" arises as to the competency of the Bombay High Court. It is conceded that no such doubt exists as regards the offence under section 420, which the Bombay Courts are empowered to try. It is said, however, and this is not denied, that there may be a doubt whether the Bombay Court has jurisdiction to try the offence charged under section 409. It is noteworthy that this point is not mentioned in the referring judgment. If we examine this point closely we find that what is meant to be said is not that there are allegations of fact on which a doubt arises which Court should try the offence, but that the facts alleged are insufficient to show what are the acts which are said to constitute the offence and where they were committed. If this be so, the obvious course is not to ask us for an impossible decision whether the case should be tried here or in Bombay, but to take the necessary proceedings open to the accused in the Bombay Court. The nature of these proceedings would, according to Mr. Norton, be to quash the charge as regards section 409. His client does not propose to go to the Court which alone can do this, but he wishes to put section 185 to an indirect use and get the proceedings over here and then make an application which, if well founded, should be made now in the Bombay Court.

This is not such a "doubt" as is referred to in the section. How on these facts could we decide that the case under section 409, the facts of which we are ignorant of—should be tried in Calcutta or anywhere else? Mr. Norton's real contention is that the case should not be tried anywhere upon the present charge at all.

If, however, we interpret the prosecution statements as definite enough to show that an offence may have been committed either in Bombay or at Calcutta, then we must first consider whether we can pass a decision which shall affect the proceedings under section 420, even though it is conceded no "doubt" arises with reference thereto. There is nothing in the section which authorises us to say that there is no doubt as to one offence but doubt as to another, and as the offences arise on the same facts, give a decision which shall affect both charges. Nor, assuming we have such a power, is there any necessity to do so. The Bombay Court has clearly jurisdiction as regards section 420 of which it should not be deprived.

It is not clear when or on what materials an application under section 185 should be made, but it is to be noted that the want of definiteness is in part at least due to the fact that specific charges have not been formulated after evidence taken. This evidence may disclose either that the Court has jurisdiction to try an offence under section 409 or a charge of abetment of such offence. If so, there is no reason why the Court selected by the prosecution within whose jurisdiction the complainants are, should not try the offence. If the evidence discloses that no offence was committed within the jurisdiction, the accused will be acquitted on that ground. I am satisfied that there is a great probability that as the result of holding otherwise the charges made will not be tried anywhere or at all. And this result and not a trial in any particular one of two Courts (as to which there may be a "doubt") is doubtless the object of the present application which seeks to put section 185 to an use for which, in my opinion, it was not intended.

I would, accordingly, answer the questions referred to us as follows:—

(1) Yes.

(2) The matter does not arise for decision on my judgment.

(3) Mere convenience either of the accused or prosecution is not a ground for action under section 185, and if it were, the proceedings in the present case should under the circumstances be left where they now are.

MOOKERJEE, J.—Two important questions of law arise on this reference, namely, first, is section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, restricted to cases instituted in a Court subordinate to the High Court to which the application is made and, secondly, is section 185 restricted to cases where a doubt arises as to the jurisdiction of the Trial Court by reason of some uncertainty regarding the facts or the law applicable to the case. If both these questions are answered in the negative, the point will require consideration, whether the circumstances of the case before us justify an order in favour of the accused under the first sub-section of section 185, which is in these terms:—

"Whenever any doubt arises as to the Court by which any offence should, under the preceding provisions of this chapter, be enquired into or tried, the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually is, may decide by which Court the offence shall be enquired into or tried".

The first of the two questions formulated above relates to the jurisdiction of the High Court to make an order under this section in respect of an enquiry instituted or trial commenced in a Court situated beyond its territorial limits. Upon this matter, there is no divergence of judicial opinion. That the answer should be in the affirmative was assumed in the case of Hiran Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) and Rajani Benod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1). The question, however, was expressly raised and decided in the affirmative in the case of Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (3). In the case before us, the point was not taken before the Division Court, and Counsel for the Crown has not contended before us that if the case was otherwise within the scope of section 185, that provision was inapplicable by reason of the circumstance that the proceedings are pending in a Court subordinate to another High Court. This admission by Counsel for the Crown would not, however, justify the assumption of jurisdiction by this Court, if section 185, upon its true construction, has no application to proceedings in what may be called extra-territorial Courts; for it is an elementary rule that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent of parties, where there is an entire absence of jurisdiction. We must further bear in mind that on this reference not merely the question whereupon there is divergence of judicial opinion, but the entire case is, under the Rules of Court, before the Full Bench. It is for these reasons incumbent upon us to satisfy ourselves as to the applicability of section 185 to a proceeding instituted in a Court subordinate to another

CHARTU CHANDRA MAJUMDAR V. EMPEROR.

High Court before we consider the case on the merits.

Upon a careful examination of the provisions of section 185, I have arrived at the conclusion that the section is not restricted to proceedings instituted in a Court subordinate to the High Court where the application is made. The section invests that High Court with authority to determine the question, within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually is. It is plain that such High Court may not be, in a particular case, the High Court superior to either of the Courts competent to try the offence "under the preceding provisions of the chapter" mentioned. It is not necessary for my present purpose to determine whether the Legislature contemplated the commission of an offence under circumstances which make it triable in either of two Courts subordinate to two different High Courts, followed by an application under section 185 to a third High Court within the territorial limits of the appellate criminal jurisdiction whereof the offender ordinarily resides or is actually present at the time of the application. This, at any rate, is plain from the terms of the section that if the offence is triable by any one of two or more Courts subordinate to different High Courts, the High Court within the local limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually is, is competent to entertain the application. I do not feel pressed by the fact that section 527, Criminal Procedure Code, authorises the Governor-General-in-Council to direct the transfer of any criminal case from any Criminal Court subordinate to one High Court to any other Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction subordinate to another High Court. The scopes of sections 185 and 527 are obviously different. Under the former section, the High Court, within the limits of whose appellate criminal jurisdiction the offender actually is, merely decides by which Court the offence shall be enquired into or tried. The order made is not in terms an order for transfer, though no doubt the resultant effect may be the same, as it is extremely improbable that one High Court should disregard such a determination by another High Court. Section 527, on the other hand, invests the Governor-General-in-Council with power to make an actual order for transfer. In my opinion, section 185 is comprehensive enough to be applicable to cases instituted in Courts beyond the local limits of the appellate criminal jurisdiction of the High Court where the offender actually is. The first question formulated above must consequently be answered in the negative.

The second of the two questions formulated at the outset relates to the true scope of section 185, where it is applicable. Upon this matter, there is a divergence of judicial opinion in this Court, which has rendered necessary this reference to a Full Bench. In Hiran Kumar v. Mangal Sen (2) Chitty and Richardson, JJ., adopted the view that where an offence is triable in either of the two Courts, the High Court may make an order under section 185 on the ground that the offence may be enquired into or tried more conveniently in one of those Courts than in the other. On the other hand, in Rajani Binod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Co. (1) Imam and Chapman, JJ., put a restricted interpretation on the section and treated it as limited in application only to cases where a doubt arises as to the jurisdiction of the Court by which the offence may be enquired into or tried. Chaudhuri and Newbould, JJ., have expressed themselves in favour of the more liberal construction of the section. Upon a minute scrutiny of the relevant provisions of Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I feel convinced that a narrow construction should not be placed upon section 185. This chapter comprises sections 177—199, and is divided into two parts; the first whereof is headed: "Place of enquiry or trial," and includes sections 177—189. Section 177 formulates the general principle that the ordinary place of enquiry and trial is the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offence is committed. Section 178 authorises the Local Government to order cases to be tried in different Sessions Divisions. Sections 179—184 embody provisions in the nature of exceptions or alternatives to section 177. Section 179 recognises the doctrine that the accused is triable either in the District where the criminal act is done or in the District where the consequence thereof ensues. Section 180 provides that where the act is an offence by reason of relation to another offence, the trial may take place in either of the Courts competent to try the accused for either of the offences. Section 181 deals with four classes of cases. The first class refers to thugs and dacoits who are liable to be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person charged is. The second class includes criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust; in the case of these offences, the offender can be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction any part of the property which is the subject of the offence was received or retained by the accused person. The third class refers to stealing, and here the offender is made liable to be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property was stolen or was possessed by the thief or by a receiver of stolen property. The fourth class comprises kidnapping and abduction; here the offence may be enquired into or tried by the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the person kidnapped or abducted was kidnapped or abducted or was conveyed or concealed or detained. Section 182 again refers to four classes of cases; namely, first, where there is an uncertainty in respect of the local area where the offence is committed; secondly, where the offence has been committed partly in one local area and partly in another; thirdly, where the offence is continuously committed in more than one local area; and fourthly, where the offence committed consists of acts done in different local areas; in each of these cases, the offence is made triable by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas. Section 183 treats of an offence committed by a person in the course of performing a journey or voyage and makes the offender liable to be tried by a Court through the local limits of whose jurisdiction the offender or the person against whom or the thing in respect of which the offence has been committed passed in the course of the journey or voyage. Section 184 makes an offence against Railways, Telegraphs, Post Office and the Arms Act triable in a presidency town where such offence may or may not, have been committed, provided the offender and all the witnesses necessary for his prosecution are to be found within such town. The group of sections, just analysed, is followed by section 185 with which we are primarily concerned. That section relates to cases where any doubt arises as to the Court by which any offence should, "under the preceding provisions of this chapter", be enquired into or tried. Full effect must plainly be given to the expressions "should" and "under the preceding provisions of this chapter". The contention on behalf of the Crown is that the "doubt" mentioned is a doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Court by which the offence may be enquired into or tried; but this narrow construction would clearly make section 185 inapplicable to all cases comprised in the previous sections, except the particular case contemplated in the first clause of section 182, which speaks of uncertainty with regard to the local area where an offence has been committed. In the events mentioned in the other sections as also the remaining clauses of section 182, no question can arise as to the competency of the particular Court to hold an enquiry or trial for the alleged offence. In very many instances, for example, in the classes of offences comprised in section 181 or section 184, the only possible question which can arise on an application under section 185 is that of expediency or convenience; under the rules laid down, the enquiry or trial may be held in one of two or several Courts; the problem for solution is, where should the trial actually take place. Indeed, if all cases, where an order is sought under section 185 on the ground of convenience, were excluded from its scope, the reference therein to "the preceding provisions of this chapter" would become, in a very large measure, entirely nugatory. I am confirmed in my conclusion by the fact that the Legislature uses the term, "should". I am not prepared to accede to the contention of the Counsel for the Crown that "should" here is equivalent to "could." I do feel reluctant to impute to the Legislature an ignorance of the meaning of this familiar word; on the other hand, I take "should be tried", in its ordinary sense, as equivalent to

"ought to be tried", for "should" clearly implies a choice between two or more available alternatives. In fact there would have been no room for controversy if the Legislature had used the term "question" instead of the word "doubt". I am not impressed by the argument that if section 185 was intended to have such a wide scope as is contended on behalf of the accused, it would have been framed in the same terms as section 527 which authorises a transfer by the Governor-General in Council on the ground of convenience. The two sections have entirely different scopes. In the first place, the order under section 527 is an executive order which may be made without opportunity afforded to the accused to be heard. In the second place, section 527 contemplates an order for transfer, and recourse may possibly be had thereto if an order made by one High Court under section 185 is disregarded by another High Court. I hold accordingly that the view taken in the cases of Hrian Kumar Chowdhury v. Mangal Sen (2) and Emperor v. Chaichal Singh (3) gave effect to the true intention of the Legislature, though in the former of these cases, the order was not made in strict conformity with the terms of section 185; and I am constrained to dissent from the decision in Rajani Benod Chakravarti v. All India Banking and Insurance Company (1). The second question formulated by me must, like the first, be answered in the negative. In this view, it is unnecessary for me to consider whether even if the narrower construction were adopted, the present case would, in so far as the accused is charged with an offence under section 409, Indian Penal Code, fall within the purview of section 185, by reason of a conflict of judicial opinion regarding the true construction of section 179 and the consequent doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Trial Court.

The question finally arises, whether in the circumstances of the present case an order under section 185 should be made in favour of the accused. Upon a full consideration of the facts which have been reviewed in detail by the learned Chief Justice in the judgment he has just delivered and which I cannot usefully supplement, I see no escape from the conclusion that the balance of convenience is on the whole in favour of a trial here. In my judgment the Rule should be made absolute and an order made in terms of section 185.

CHAUDHURI, J.—My answers are to be found in the order of reference. I have nothing to add to what I have said. The reasons why I think that the case should be tried in Calcutta are to be found in my separate judgment which is to be considered as part of my judgment in this reference.

NEWBOLD, J.—I wish to add some remarks to the joint judgment of reference to make my individual opinion more clear. Though I hold we have powers to pass orders under section 185, Criminal Procedure Code, on the application of the accused petitioner, I do not think it was intended that the section should be used for this purpose. It seems to me that the Legislature by giving jurisdiction to several Courts in the previous section of Chapter XV intended, as far as possible, to remove doubts as to jurisdiction in cases in which such doubt might otherwise arise. There was no necessity to add section 185 to remove doubts as to jurisdiction. Even if doubts did arise as to the interpretation of these previous sections, they could be dealt with in the same way as doubts as to jurisdiction which frequently occur in connection with other parts of the Code. But when more Courts than one had been given jurisdiction to try the same offence, it became necessary to provide for a possible deadlock which would occur if two Courts either each refused to take action on the ground that the case should be tried by the other Court or both proceeded to try the same case. It seems to me clear that this section was enacted to provide for such a difficulty and the doubt mentioned in the section is not a doubt as to jurisdiction but a doubt as to which Court having jurisdiction should try the case under such circumstances. On such a doubt arising the High Court exercising powers under section 185 would have to decide with reference to the convenience of all concerned. Though it was not intended that this section should enable an accused to apply for a transfer on the ground of his personal convenience, the wording of the section is sufficiently wide to give a High Court power to take action on such an application. I entirely agree with the remarks of Mr. Justice Woodroffe as to the danger of an obstruction to administration that could be caused by an improper use of this section. To avoid this danger I think that these powers should seldom be exercised on the application of an accused, and only if he be able to convince the Court that a refusal to exercise these powers is likely to lead to a miscarriage of justice. This, for reasons I have given in my previous judgment, I hold the present petitioner has failed to do so.

I accordingly agree with my Lord the Chief Justice as to the answer to be given to the first two questions referred and adhere to my original opinion that the third question should be answered in the negative and the Rule discharged.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In consequence of the opinion of the majority the Rule is made absolute and the order will be drawn up in terms of section 185 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as indicated in the judgment.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of criminal case, grounds for—Opinion of Judge on evidence in prior counter-case.

It is not a sufficient ground for the transfer of a criminal case that the Judge, in a former proceeding arising out of a counter-case, expressed certain views upon the evidence as to which of two versions was correct. Judges must be presumed to be upright men, who will approach a case from the point of view of that case alone and not permit their minds to be affected in any way by anything that has gone before that case. [p. 160, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the first class Magistrate, Purnea, dated the 1st March 1916.

Messrs. Wasi Ahmad and Lalit Mohan Ghose, for the Petitioners.

Mr. S. Ahmad (Deputy Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the transfer of a trial pending in the Sessions Court at Purnea to the Sessions Court at Bhagalpur, on the ground that the accused has a reasonable apprehension that he will not receive a full consideration of his case in the former Court.

The facts of the case are, that the accused were complainants in a case in which they alleged that there had been a riot on the 4th November 1915. The complainants in that case were put on their trial before Mr. P. K. Gupta and were acquitted, on the ground that it was not shown that there had been a riot on the 4th November at all. The Public Prosecutor in the former trial opened his case with a statement that there had been two occurrences, one on the 2nd November, and the other on the 4th November, and whether the complainants in the case which he was opening (accused in the case now before us) were or were not guilty with regard to the occurrence on the 2nd November, he strongly urged that the other side should be convicted for the occurrence on the 4th November. The learned Judge on hearing the evidence decided that there had been one occurrence only, on the 2nd November, not on the 4th November. The witnesses who gave evidence in that case, who will now be the accused in the present case, stated on oath that there was no occurrence on the 2nd November. This story the learned Judge has disbelieved. The position is this. The Judge has not heard any of the eye-witnesses to the occurrence of the 2nd November. He has no idea as to who was responsible for the disturbance of the 2nd November or for the various injuries caused to the other side on that date, but he has not believed the statements on oath, made to prove that there was no occurrence on the 2nd November, by persons who will afterwards make statements before him as accused persons. Upon this learned Counsel for the petitioners urge that we should give them a chance before another Court of proving that there was no occurrence on the 2nd November.

ITALA v. EMPEROR.

The basis of all such applications must be that the accused must have a reasonable apprehension that he will not receive a fair trial. The leading case upon the subject is that of Asimaddi v. Govinda Baidya (1). The learned Deputy Government Advocate in shewing cause is extremely anxious that the precedent in that case should not be destroyed by the first pronouncement made on the subject in this Court. The case has been followed in Crown v. Kamil (2), Rajani Kanta Dutta v. Emperor (3) and referred to and not dissented from in Pandurang v. Emperor (4) and Emperor v. Hargobind (5). We should be extremely sorry to depart in this Court from a principle which has been maintained throughout India. That principle is that the accused has no reasonable ground for apprehension that he will not have a fair trial, merely because the Judge in the former proceeding, arising out of a counter-case to the one now coming before him, has expressed certain views upon the evidence in the former case as to which of the two versions is correct. The basis of that ruling is that Judges are presumed to be upright men who will approach each case from the point of view of that case alone and not permit their minds to be affected in any way by any thing that has gone before that case. This view we are as anxious as the learned Deputy Government Advocate to uphold. We will not believe that our Judges are so easily prejudiced that, because one incidental part of the case before them has been decided in a previous case, they will shut their eyes entirely to anything that may be alleged in favour of the accused in a subsequent trial. We must refuse in the circumstances of this case to depart from the established practice of the Courts of India. The Rule is discharged.

With regard to the application for bail in this case, it seems to us that the only serious injury inflicted was one upon the head of a boy with a lathi blow which has resulted in his death. Bail should be allowed to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate; such bail not to exceed Rs. 1,000 in each case.

Rule discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code Act V of 1898, s. 350—Magistrates, Bench of, case tried by—Decision after hearing part of evidence, legality of.

Section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates.

Damri Thakur v. Bhowani Sahoo, 23 C. 194; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 129; Hardwar Singh v. Khaga Ojha, 20 C. 870; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 585, referred to.

There is no provision of law which provides for a change in the constitution of Benches of Magistrates, and, therefore, only those Magistrates who have heard the whole of the evidence in a case can decide the case.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the prosecution evidence was heard by two Honorary Magistrates who took no further part in it. The defence evidence was heard by two other Honorary Magistrates of the same Bench and the accused was sentenced and convicted by these two Magistrates. The procedure was illegal. Section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to cases tried by Benches of Magistrates, as pointed out in Damri Thakur v. Bhowani Sahoo (1) and Hardwar Singh v. Khaga Ojha (2). There is no provision of law which provides for a change in the constitution of Benches of Magistrates, and in the absence of any such provision it must be held that only those Magistrates who have heard the whole of the evidence can decide the case. The conviction and sentence are set aside.

APPEAL FROM MADRAS HIGH COURT.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate, nature of—Reversionary heirs, position of—Suit to restrain waste—Waste not proved—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaration of reversioner's right—Form of decree—Decree awarding declaration while dismissing substantial claim, futility of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 7—Further relief

A Hindu widow's right with respect to the estate of her deceased husband is of the nature of a right of property; her position is that of owner; her powers in that character are, however, limited but so long as she is alive no one has any vested interest in the succession. [p. 162, col. 1.]

A reversionary heir, although only having a contingent interest, is recognised by the Courts as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life; but such heir thus appealing to the Court does so in a representative capacity, so that the corpus of the estate may pass unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion. [p. 162, col. 2.]

A Court should not entertain a suit for a mere declaration that plaintiff is the reversioner of a Hindu widow, as such a declaration would be premature and be subject to being rendered valueless by the development of events. [p. 163, col. 1.]

In a suit by a reversioner for an injunction to restrain waste and for appointment of a receiver, it is not competent to the Court, after dismissing the claim for these reliefs to make a declaration that plaintiff is the nearest reversioner to defendant, even to prevent future litigation between the parties. It is not legitimate to give a plaintiff, under cover of a request for 'further relief,' after all the substantial heads of a claim have failed, greater right to obtain a declaration than he would have had if such a declaration had been asked directly and unaccompanied by other and unfounded claims. [p. 163, col. 2.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Madras, dated the 23rd August 1912, reported as 17 Ind. Cas. 261, modifying those of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, dated the 28th October 1907.

FACTS.—Respondent, claiming to be the reversionary heir to the property of one Ramasami Iyer, after the death of the appellant (the widow) and her husband's mother, instituted a suit against appellant on allegations of waste, and prayed for (a) an injunction, (b) for appointment of a receiver, (c) further relief, and (d) costs.

Appellant in her written statement pleaded inter alia that respondent was not the next reversionary heir.

The Trial Court and the High Court both found that the allegations of waste were unfounded, but they gave the plaintiff a declaration that he was the nearest reversioner to the deceased after the lifetime of the widow and her husband's mother. The Trial Court made no order as to costs and the High Court directed that the parties should bear their own costs. The learned Judges of the High Court (Miller and Abdur Rahim, JJ.) observed that "though the declaration asked for in the plaint" (it was not asked for) "was not essential, yet the peculiar circumstances of this class of suits seem to make it not undesirable that it should remain to prevent further litigation on the question between the plaintiff and the first defendant (appellant), should the former find it necessary to attack again the latter's management of the estate."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant, contended that the respondent was not entitled to a decree and the suit ought to have been dismissed. His rights came into existence only on the extinction of existing or future life-estates.

[LORD PARMOOR.—You dispute the right of the Court to make the declaration.]

He could get no declaration as to being the next reversionary heir.

[MR. AMEER ALI.—It is a right which comes into existence at the time one dies—and your contention is that he may not be so at that time.]

[LORD PARMOOR.—He had no vested right, but his right would arise on the happening of certain events.]

[LORD SHAW.—The decree is wholly wrong because it declares that he is the next reversionary heir.]

[LORD PARMOOR.—Such declaration cannot be made. The Court ought not to have made any declaration.]

Mr. Raikes, for the Respondent, contended that he had the right for declaration in respect of his property in the estate under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The next reversioner had a right to protect and bring a suit to prevent one enjoying a life-estate from committing waste. The Board had reversed the decision in Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (6).

Mr. Brown was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW. — This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras of the 23rd August 1912,* modifying the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram, dated the 28th October 1907.

The suit was brought with reference to the estate of one Ramasami Iyer, of Konerirajapuram, who died intestate on the 24th June 1906. It is not disputed that the widow holds the property under the Hindu Law as "a widow's estate." The mother of the late owner is the person entitled to succeed should she survive this widow. On the expiry of these lives the estate will descend to the next reversionary heir of the deceased.

The rule of the Hindu Law with regard to the nature of the widow's estate may have been subject to various forms of expression but in substance it is not doubtful. Her right is of the nature of a right of property; her position is that of owner; her powers in that character are, however, limited; but, to use the familiar language of Mayne's "Hindu Law," paragraph 625, page 870, "so long as she is alive no one has any vested interest in the succession." These propositions were not disputed.

The law as to the situation of the reversionary heirs is also in substance quite clear; there is, as stated, no vesting as at the date of the husband's death, and it follows that the questions of who is the nearest reversionary heir or what is the class of reversionary heirs fall to be settled at the date of the expiry of the ownership for life or lives; that is to say, in the present case at the death of the survivor of the appellant and her late husband's mother. Even where the Courts have proceeded, prior to the opening of the succession, to give any declaration, this has been done for special reasons only, as in the case of Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (6) and — to use the language of Sir Arthur Wilson (page 70) — it is made clear that "whenever the succession opens by the death of the widow the present decision will have settled nothing as to who should succeed."

It follows from this state of the law that it is impossible to predicate at this moment who is the reversionary heir of the deceased proprietor. If a Court of Law proceeded to make any declaration of right upon that subject, such a declaration would be subject to being rendered valueless by the development of events. It would not, after events had developed, be even of authority in regulating or declaring the rights of the present respondents as against any other claimant to the character of reversionary heir. A priori, accordingly, a declaration of right granted at the present stage would appear to be stamped with something in the nature of futility.

It is also true that a reversionary heir, although having only those contingent interests which are differentiated little, if at all, from a spes successionis, is recognised by Courts of Law as having a right to demand that the estate be kept free from waste and free from danger during its enjoyment by the widow or other owner for life.

But a reversionary heir thus appealing to the Court truly for the conservation and just administration of the property does so in a representative capacity, so that the corpus of the estate may pass unimpaired to those entitled to the reversion. The law on this subject was recently expounded in the judgment of this Board delivered by Mr. Ameer Ali in Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (2).

This representation is in law founded upon a different set of considerations from those which would seek to stamp the character of reversionary heir upon one individual. The latter operation attempted during the enjoyment of the life-estates would necessarily be premature, and might, as stated, be futile. The former is justified by the considerations of keeping the estate intact for the persons to whom as reversioners it shall ultimately and at the proper time be determined that the estate shall go.

The suit in the present case was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant and appellant, making charges of a serious character against the conduct and management of the estate by the deceased's widow. Collusion, concealment, maladministration, malice, and fraud were charged, and the statement was made that heavy loss would be incurred if the properties were left in her possession—subject to waste by her. The appointment of a receiver upon the estate was prayed for, and an injunction was asked restraining the widow from doing any act injurious to the plaintiff's reversionary interest. The third prayer of the plaint was for "granting such further relief as to the Court may seem fit and proper."

It may be at once said that, of the serious charges made, none were held to be well founded in fact: and no reason was found by the Courts below either for the appointment of a receiver or the granting of an injunction. By the decree of the Subordinate Judge, however, of date the 28th October 1907, the following order was made, namely, "that plaintiff is declared to be the next reversionary heir of the deceased Ramaiyar after the life-time of defendants Nos. 1 and 2" (his widow and mother). This was done under the third prayer just referred to. For the reasons above set forth it is plain that such a declaration is unavailing as well as premature. It appears to have arisen on account of a dispute as to whether the plaintiff's relationship to the deceased had been made out, and the Courts below may have been misled by the circumstance of that dispute into permitting the question of a declaration to enter the decree. The form of the declaration was that the plaintiff was "the next reversionary heir."

In their Lordships' opinion the plaintiff-respondent was not entitled to such a declaration. Had waste of, or danger to, the estate been established, the title of the plaintiff to bring those matters before the Court in his representative capacity as a possible reversionary heir would have been allowed, and a decree following upon the finding of fact of such waste or danger would have followed. But the whole of that part of the case has failed. And in their Lordships' opinion the case must accordingly be treated as if the suit had been directed simpliciter to a declaration of the plaintiff's individual right. In the view of the Board it is not legitimate to give a plaintiff, under cover of a request for "further relief," after all the substantial heads of a claim have failed, greater right to obtain a declaration than he would have had if such a declaration had been asked directly and unaccompanied by other and unfounded claims.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the suit should be dismissed, and that the respondent do pay the costs before the Board and in the Courts below.

equally entitled, effect of—Transfer of pre-empted property by decree-holder during pendency of appeal, effect of—Bona fides—Suit carried on by money supplied by third person, whether liable to dismissal.

A suit for pre-emption is not liable to dismissal merely because it is carried on with money supplied by a third person, it being open to the pre-emptor to sell his interest in the property obtained by pre-emption and pay the money to the vendee. [p. 166, col. 1.]

After a decree for pre-emption has been passed and payment made in pursuance of it, the right to pre-emption fructifies into a title to the property forming the subject of the claim, though that title may be subject to the result of an appeal which may be filed in the case by an unsuccessful party. On foreclosure of certain property, one of several persons equally entitled to pre-empt the property obtained a decree for pre-emption in a suit to which others who were also equally entitled to pre-empt were not made parties. Subsequently one of these others brought a suit for pre-emption against the person who had obtained the previous decree for pre-emption without impleading the person who had obtained the original decree for foreclosure. His claim for pre-emption was decreed, but the unsuccessful party filed an appeal against it and during the pendency of the appeal the decree-holder transferred the property acquired by pre-emption to a third person, who was joined as a respondent:

Held, that the first decree for pre-emption furnished a cause of action to persons equally entitled along with the decree-holder, inasmuch as the latter obtained the property by pre-emption to the exclusion of others who had an equal right to pre-empt the same. [p. 165, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the omission to implead the person who had obtained the decree for foreclosure, in the subsequent suit for pre-emption, was not a fatal defect. [p. 165, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption in respect of property obtained by Janki Pershad by virtue of a decree for foreclosure. It appears that Girdhari Lal and Sital Singh owned a share in a certain mahal, which they mortgaged in favour of Janki Pershad. Janki Pershad obtained a formal decree for foreclosure in respect of that share on the 13th July 1907, and got possession of the property comprised in the decree. No notice was given by him to the plaintiff or to the other members of the village community entitled to pre-emption under section 10 of Act XVIII of 1876. Ram Sahay was the first person to sue for pre-emption. He succeeded in obtaining a decree against Janki Pershad and obtained possession of the pre-empted property on depositing the mortgage money. Thereupon the present plaintiff Ujagar Singh turned up and filed a suit for pre-emption, impleading Ram Sahay as the sole defendant to his suit. Another person, who filed a similar suit for pre-emption in respect of the same property, was subsequently added as a co-defendant.

It is not disputed that Ram Sahay, as well as the present plaintiff and the other person who filed a rival suit for pre-emption, have an equal right of pre-emption. They are, in common with the mortgagors, members of the same village community.

The learned Subordinate Judge accordingly directed lots to be drawn between them, with the result that Ujagar Singh has succeeded in getting the decree. The propriety of that decree is impugned by Ram Sahay.

—Before the learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner who referred this case to a Bench, it seems to have been contended that the cause of action for a suit for pre-emption arising out of a decree final for foreclosure is exhausted after a decree for pre-emption is obtained by any one of the persons entitled to pre-empt the property which is the subject of that decree, but that point is not now pressed.

What is urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant is that the latter by enforcing his right of pre-emption has not given any cause of action to the plaintiff, that the person whose decree for foreclosure gave rise to the plaintiff's right of pre-emption was a necessary party to the suit, and that the plaintiff has lost his pre-emptive right by reason of his having sold the property, which gave him that right, subsequent to the passing of the decree in his favour by the Court of first instance. It is also contended on the strength of a mortgage made by Ujagar Singh in favour of Ambika Pratap, son of Dwarka Pershad, since the passing of that decree, that Ujagar

RAM SAHAY v. JAGDAMEA SINGH.

Singh had not sued to enforce the pre-emptive right in his own interest for his own benefit.

The omission of the plaintiff to implead Janki Pershad as a co-defendant to the suit cannot, however, prejudice his right to seek redress as against the person who is now holding the property, which forms the subject of his claim. By reason of the decree for pre-emption obtained by Ram Sahay, Janki Pershad has no longer any subsisting interest in that property, and, though the cause of action for pre-emption arose out of the decree for foreclosure obtained by Janki Pershad, there is no relief which can now be granted against him. Order I, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that all persons can be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the cause of action is alleged to exist; and Order VII, rule 5, of the same Code requires that the plaint should show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter and is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand. In Ram Sarup v. Sital Prasad (1), which was followed by this Court in Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (2), it was accordingly held that the vendor was not an essential party to a suit for pre-emption. If no relief could have been claimed as against Janki Pershad, his joinder would have served no useful purpose. The cause of action as against Ram Sahay consists in his having obtained the property by pre-emption to the exclusion of the plaintiff who had an equal right to pre-empt the same; and the mere fact that Janki Pershad has not been impleaded is not fatal to his suit. Order I, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, moreover, lays down that the non-joinder of necessary parties is not one of the grounds on which a suit can be defeated, and the Court should decide the suit, dealing with the matter in controversy, so far as it concerns the rights and interest of the parties actually before it.

Ujagar Singh died after obtaining the decree under appeal, and was succeeded by his son Jagdamba Bakhsh Singh who admits that he sold the property, by virtue of which his father claimed to be a member of the village community, to Ram Sahay on the 11th November 1915. He also admits that his father mortgaged the property obtained by pre-emption in favour of Ambika Partab in lieu of Rs. 6,000 on the 31st December 1913 and paid out of the consideration money the sum of Rs. 5,599, which was required to satisfy the decree for pre-emption. The mortgagee has been brought on the record during the pendency of this appeal. From the application made by Jagdamba Bakhsh Singh asking for permission to withdraw from the prosecution of his claim for pre-emption during the pendency of this appeal and the subsequent applications made by him, at one time retracting and at another time confirming the same, it is evident that he has been playing into the hands of one party or another, and it may well be doubted how far he has been influenced by considerations of good faith in the various transactions into which he is stated to have entered since his father's death. The right of property which Ujagar Singh acquired by virtue of his decree for pre-emption, though subject to the result of an appeal which the unsuccessful party had a right to file, cannot, however, be prejudiced by any act of Ujagar Singh himself, or his son and heir, after the property was mortgaged by Ujagar Singh in favour of a third person, who has been brought on the record; and the Court cannot in such a case go outside the facts and circumstances, as they stood on the date on which the decree for pre-emption was passed, to ascertain whether the plaintiff's right to sue for pre-emption subsisted on the date of that decree. On behalf of the defendant reliance is placed on the decision in Onkar Singh v. Bhagwan Dat Singh (3), but in that case the vendee was found to have held certain property to which he had a defeasible right on the date on which the suit for pre-emption was filed, but to which his right had become absolute owing to the failure of the party interested to impugn it with success by the time the claim for pre-emption came up for hearing before this Court on appeal. The right so perfected could be referred back in that case to a date anterior to the suit so as to defeat a claim for pre-emption. As pointed out in Amir Hasan v. Musammatt Sardar Begam (4), the plaintiff pre-emptor is bound to show a valid title not only on the date of the suit but also on the date on which a decree is passed in his favour. When such a decree is passed and payment is made in pursuance of it, the right to pre-emption fructifies into a title to the property, forming the subject of the claim, though that title may be subject to the result of any appeal which may be filed in the case by the unsuccessful party. The decision in Onkar Singh v. Bhagwan Dat Singh (3) cannot be taken to lay down that a person who has obtained a title by virtue of a decree for pre-emption can by his own subsequent act prejudice the position of one to whom he may have, wholly or in part, made a transfer based upon that title. The sale effected by Jagdamba Bakhsh Singh in favour of Ram Sahay of the property which gave Ujagar Singh a right to pre-emption, after Ujagar Singh had obtained his decree for pre-emption cannot, therefore, affect the propriety of that decree, even if such a sale be a bona fide one.

There are no circumstances in this case to indicate that Ujagar Singh did not sue for pre-emption in his own interest. The property in dispute has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be worth Rs. 8,000. Ujagar Singh sought to pre-empt that property on payment of a much smaller sum; and from the fact that he raised that amount after obtaining the decree by making a mortgage in favour of Ambika Partab, there can be no necessary inference that he acted throughout to benefit the would-be-mortgagee. In Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (2) it was held that a suit for pre-emption was not liable to dismissal merely because it was carried on with money supplied by a third person; and in Ram Sahai v. Gaya (5) it was laid down that it was open to the pre-emptor to sell his interest in the property obtained by pre-emption and pay the money to the vendee. The decision in Maharani v. Ram Adhar (6) does not apply, because the circumstances of that case were entirely different. There the pre-emptor was found to have parted with her own interest and to have had no possible personal object in pre-empting the share which was sold by her husband's nephew. Here Ujagar Singh was acting in his own interest, and the mere fact that since his death his son has parted with some of the property left by him does not affect the bona fides of his suit.

We see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the decree passed by the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage—Charge, deed of, construction of—Redemption.

A mortgagor borrowed a certain sum of money by way of further advance from his mortgagee and gave a bond for the loan in the following terms:

"The above debt will be a charge against the property above mortgaged.....If I fail to pay the whole or a part of the above debt, I will have to pay it at the time of redeeming the above mortgage." In a suit for redemption by the mortgagor:

Held, that the deed constituted a mortgage of or at least a charge on the property and that the plaintiff could not redeem it without payment of the amount secured by the deed. [p. 168, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Amritsar Division, dated the 7th March 1912, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Amritsar, dated the 15th November 1910, decreeing the claim on payment of Rs. 1,179-4-0.

FACTS appear from the following extract from the order of the learned Divisional Judge:—

HUKAM CHAND v. KADAR BUKSH.

"The plaintiff claimed to redeem certain land which he mortgaged to defendant for Rs. 597 on 24th August 1886. The profits of the land were to be held against the interest on the mortgage. Plaintiff, therefore, prayed to redeem on payment of Rs. 597 only.

The defendant claims that on 18th May, 1888, the plaintiff executed a further mortgage-deed for Rs. 99 with interest at Rs. 2-2-0 per cent per mensem. And another for Rs. 30-2-0 on 25th July 1891. He also claims Rs. 100 for improvements, or in all Rs. 1,279-14-3.

The lower Court has allowed the claim of defendant for all but Rs. 100 improvements, and given plaintiff a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 1,179-4-0. The plaintiff has died and his sons now prosecute this appeal.

Three points are urged in appeal:—

1. That the bargain was harsh and unconscionable and the interest should be reduced if the second and third deeds are not disallowed.

2. That repayment was made.

3. That the second and third deeds were not mortgages at all but simple money bonds. That they cannot be considered as mortgages at all, and they are now barred by time.

It will be convenient to take the last point first. * * * * * The deed for Rs. 99, dated 18th May 1888, is worded as follows, so far as its material part goes: 'Whereas I owe Bhola Nath Rs. 99 (and then follows detail of the consideration) and whereas my land and house are already mortgaged to Bhola Nath (details are then given). The above debt will be a charge against the property above mortgaged. Interest has been agreed to be paid for the above at Rs. 2-2-0 per cent. per mensem. I agree to pay the above debt with interest in Jeth Sambat 1946 (1890). If I fail to pay the whole or a part of the above debt I will have to pay it with interest at the time of redeeming the above mortgages. If I were to ask for the redemption of the property mortgaged by the above mortgage-deeds on payment of the money due on them only, the mortgagee will be entitled to refuse redemption till he is paid this debt with interest and then also the debt due on the mortgage-deeds. Any repayments will be endorsed hereon or they will not be recognised. I, therefore, execute this bond so that it may serve as an authority. Interest will continue to be charged at the above rate till the debt is paid up.'

It will be noted that the expression bond is expressly used.

There was a very similar case reported as Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhya (1). And it was there held that such a contingent charge on property was not a mortgage-deed within the purview of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. And I am of opinion that that decision must govern the present case. Payment was to be made in Jeth Sambat 1946 otherwise it would have to be made on redemption. Meaning the property could not be redeemed until payment was made. I, therefore, hold that this deed of 18th May 1888 was a bond and not a mortgage-deed. The deed of 25th July 1891 is described as a mortgage-deed and is not seriously contested."

The Hon'ble Pandit Shiv Narain, R. B., and Messrs. Nihal Chand Mekra and Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff mortgagor sued to redeem the land in suit by payment of Rs. 597 to the mortgagee in possession. The latter produced two other mortgage-deeds besides that recited by the mortgagor and the first Court decided that in order to redeem plaintiff had to pay

The Divisional Judge in appeal held that the document B was not a mortgage but a mere bond. For this view he quoted Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhya (1) and reduced the mortgage debt by Rs. 552-12-0.

The mortgagee comes here in second appeal, which clearly must succeed.

KOTA BALABHADRA PATRO v. KHETRA DOSS.

The principle on which Malho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhya (1) was decided has been disapproved in Balasubramania Nadar v. Sivaguru Asuri (2); further, that case and this are far from being parallel.

In this case plaintiff is the mortgagor and even if the mortgagee had been unable to recover on document B, it does not follow that the mortgagor can recover possession without discharging the debt secured by that document.

As a fact, the document appears to be a mortgage or at least a charge, for it states in so many words that this debt shall be secured on the land, and that the earlier mortgage shall be irredeemable except upon discharge of the debt secured by the document.

Plaintiff, therefore, cannot redeem except on payment of this charge also.

We are not addressed on the points of repayment and unconscionability of the bargain, nor are we impressed by them.

We accept the appeal and restore the decree of the first Court with costs throughout to defendant.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Appellant.—The only question is whether the alienee from a Hindu co-parcener can have joint possession with the other co-parceners. The authorities are uniform that he cannot. See Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1), Hardi Narain Sahu v. Ruder Perakash Misser (2), *Ramkishore Kedarnath v. no interest in property but has only a right to partition and that he is not a tenant-in-common, but they are opposed to earlier Full Bench rulings of this Court. See Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (9) and Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (7) which have all held that the alienee is entitled to a definite vested interest in the property alienated.

Such a right to joint possession has been recognised in Bombay. See Patil Hari Premji v. Hakam Chand (10).

Mr. Prakasam was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is, whether an alienee of a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family is entitled to possession of the alienor's share as a tenant-in-common. There can be no doubt that, so far at least as this Presidency is concerned, he has no such right. It has been ruled in a series of decisions that his only right is to obtain, by a suit for partition, the share to which his alienor was entitled. He is allowed to stand in the shoes of the co-parcener whose rights he has acquired and thus the equities are worked out between the parties. The point is covered by recent decisions of this Court. In Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkatramanjulu Naidu (8) it was ruled by Wallis, C. J., and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., that a purchaser of the undivided share of a member of a joint Hindu family does not thereby become a tenant-in-common with the other members. Sankaran Nair and Bakewell, JJ. in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (5) also laid down the law to the same effect after careful review of the Privy Council decisions bearing on the subject. The Judicial Committee's rulings in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) and Hardi Narain Sahu v. Ruder Perakash Misser (2) clearly bear out this view of the Hindu Law. The learned Vakil for the respondents has referred to some rulings of the Bombay High Court, but it is not necessary to consider them here, as there has been a uniform course of decisions in this Presidency laying down that an alienee from a Hindu co-parcener does not thereby acquire the rights of a tenant-in-common, such as to possession and to mesne profits. Reliance was also placed on section 44 of the Transfer of Property Act, but the rule enunciated there does not override the Hindu Law in a case governed by that law.

The result will be the decree of the District Judge will be set aside and there will be a decree declaring that the plaintiffs have a valid mortgage right to the extent of the share of the third defendant and that they are entitled to enforce the same by a suit for partition. The respondents will pay the costs in this Court as well as in the District Court.

Appeal allowed; Decree modified.

RAJ BAHADUR SINGH v. CHANDRAPAL.

JUDGMENT.—Muthra held a decree against Musammatt Koela. In execution of that decree he attached certain crops. Ramphal and Bhagwat objected that the crops belonged to them. The crops were placed in charge of Ramraj. The Court allowed the objection of Ramphal and Bhagwat and directed that Ramraj should restore the crops. Ramraj is alleged not to have restored the crops. Ramphal then sued Muthra and Ramraj for damages, alleging that the two latter were in collusion. He joined Bhagwat as a defendant as Bhagwat refused to join as a plaintiff. The question is whether his suit is or is not triable by a Small Cause Court under the provisions of Act IX of 1887. I find an almost exactly similar case which was decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bishambar Nath v. Gaddar (1). There certain crops were attached. The plaintiff filed an objection against the attachment. The objection was allowed and the attachment was removed. While the property was under attachment the attached crops disappeared. It was subsequently found that the shahna had stolen them. Here the shahna has refused to give them up and they seem to have disappeared. The Allahabad High Court held that such a suit was not cognizable by the Court of Small Causes under the provisions of Article 35 (j) of the Second Schedule, Act IX of 1887, as amended by Act VI of 1914. With that view I agree. I, therefore, uphold the order of the Subordinate Judge.

I have, however, to note that, in my opinion, the plaintiff should not have been made to pay costs. He first instituted the suit as a regular suit. The Munsif returned the plaint to him holding that the suit was triable by a Small Cause Court. He went to the Small Cause Court, which dismissed his suit on the ground that it was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. The error appears to have been not his error but the error of the Munsif. In these circumstances I modify the order to this extent that the parties bear their own costs throughout.

Application rejected.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 9—Pre-emption in Oudh—Pre-emptors, rival, rights of, determination of.

The general principles laid down by the Allahabad High Court regarding the law of pre-emption, which prevails in the province of Agra, cannot be applied so as to affect the scope of the Oudh Laws Act which regulates the law of pre-emption in Oudh. [p. 171, col. 2; p. 172, col. 1.]

Where rival pre-emptors, having the right to pre-empt, claim the same property in exercise of such right, the right to acquire the property must, under section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, be decided by lot. [p. 171, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 28th February 1914, upholding that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 8th September 1913.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

LINDSAY, J. C.—(November 22, 1915.)—This is a second appeal in a pre-emption suit the facts of which are somewhat peculiar. The plaintiff is Raj Bahadur Singh and the second defendant Chhedi Singh is his cousin. Each of these parties owned an 8-anna share in the village in which the property in dispute is situated. On the 7th of January 1913, Chhedi Singh sold a 4-anna out of his 8-anna share to the first defendant Udit Misra, who is admittedly a stranger to the village. On the first of March 1913, Udit Misra re-conveyed this property by a sale-deed to Chhedi Singh. The present suit was brought on the 26th of May 1913 by Raj Bahadur Singh to enforce pre-emption in respect not of the first but of the second sale. The Courts below found that Raj Bahadur Singh was not entitled to claim pre-emption, the reasoning being that as the property has now reverted to Chhedi Singh who is admittedly a co-sharer in the village, the plaintiff has really no cause of action for a suit to pre-empt. The Courts have relied mainly upon a decision of Mr. Piggott reported as Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai (1). The facts of that case were not in all respects the same as those of the case now before me, for in that case it was pre-emption of the first sale which was sought. However, certain observations in this judgment have been relied upon by the Courts below in support of their opinion that the plaintiff Raj Bahadur Singh cannot claim pre-emption. I am not satisfied that the decision of Mr. Piggott just referred to applies to the present case, and in any event I am unable to reconcile his ruling with what has been laid down in two Bench decisions of this Court reported as Wali-ul-Hak v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Hak (2) and Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiwan Lal (3) respectively. It appears to me that both of these latter cases lay down the proposition that in a case like the present where the plaintiff has an equal right of pre-emption with the purchaser, a suit will lie in which the plaintiff is entitled to ask that his right to pre-empt should be determined by lot. There can be no doubt that Raj Bahadur, the second defendant, has an equal right of pre-emption and according to the Bench rulings the fact that Chhedi Singh had actually bought the property does not affect the right of the plaintiff to ask for pre-emption. In view of what I consider the divergence of opinion in the rulings which I have just mentioned, I think it proper to refer this case for decision to a Bench. I order accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are set out in the order by which the appeal has been referred to a Bench for disposal, but they may be recapitulated shortly in order to make this judgment complete.

One Chhedi Singh owned an eight anna share in the village in which the property in dispute is situated. His cousin Raj Bahadur Singh owns a similar share in the same village. On the 7th January 1913, Chhedi Singh sold one-half of his share to Udit Misra, a stranger to the village. The latter re-conveyed the half share to Chhedi Singh on the 1st of March 1913. Raj Bahadur has now sued to pre-empt this latter sale and the question is whether he can maintain the suit.

Both Courts below have decided that he cannot and have relied upon certain observations of Mr. Piggott's in a judgment reported as Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai (1).

The particular passages referred to by the learned District Judge are the following:—

"The object of the law of pre-emption is to prevent the introduction of strangers into the co-parcenary body: that object is equally attained when transfers are prevented by the fear of a claim for pre-emption as when such claim is successfully enforced after a completed transfer [Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai (1)].

"It (i. e., the right of pre-emption) is not a right to acquire property, but a right in certain particular cases to acquire immovable property in preference to other persons." (Cf. page 158*). And so it has been held in the case we are now considering that because Chhedi Singh is as much a co-sharer in the village as the plaintiff Raj Bahadur Singh, the latter has no case for pre-emption because his right to acquire is no higher than that of Chhedi Singh's. As has been pointed out in the order of reference, Mr. Piggott's view of the law is not in harmony with what has been laid down in various decisions of this Court. It was held in Wali-ul-Hak v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Hak (2) by a Bench of this Court that where two or more persons have an equal right of pre-emption and property is sold to one of them, the other or others could ask the Court to have the question as to who is entitled to buy the property decided by lot. The same view was taken in another Bench ruling reported as Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiwan Lal (3) and again in a later ruling of a Bench reported as Sheoratan Singh v. Ujagar Singh (4). In this latter case the Court was asked to overrule the decision in Wali-ul-Hak v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Hak (2) and refused to do so.

We are unable to agree with Mr. Piggott that any general principles laid down by the Allahabad High Court regarding the law of pre-emption which obtains in the Province of Agra, can be applied so as to affect the scope of the Statute which regulates the law of pre-emption in Oudh (Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act): and whatever the object of the law of pre-emption generally may be conceived to be, we have to take the language of the Statute as we find it and to give full effect to it.

According to the interpretation which has been accepted in the Bench rulings quoted above, the plaintiff-appellant in the present case has a right to come to Court and to ask that as between him and the respondent Chhedi Singh the right to acquire the property conveyed by the sale-deed of the 1st March 1913 should be decided by lot.

We order, therefore, that the case be sent back to the lower Appellate Court with a direction that Raj Bahadur Singh and Chhedi Singh be summoned and ordered to draw lots in the presence of the Court. The result of the drawing will be reported as soon as possible to this Court so as to enable us to pronounce the final order in the case.

Case sent back.

RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption, suit for, on basis of being co-sharer—Possession—Proof—Re-purchase by vendor, whether defeats third person's right of pre-emption.

Possession may be sufficient title as against a trespasser, but something more than possession recently acquired must be shown as a basis for a claim to pre-empt as a co-sharer.

A person who sells property in respect of which another has a right of pre-emption, cannot defeat that other's claim to pre-empt by re-purchasing the property before the suit for pre-emption is brought.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Unao, dated the 12th July 1910, confirming that of the Munsif, South Unao, dated the 11th May 1910.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the respondent against the appellants and six persons not parties to this appeal, who foreclosed a mortgage made in their favour by the grandfather of the appellants. The decree absolute for foreclosure is dated December 15th, 1903. The suit was resisted by the appellants on various grounds of which one only need now be mentioned, namely, that the appellant's father re-purchased part of the property in June 1907, i. e., 2½ years before this suit was brought and that as to that part, at all events, the suit should be dismissed. It is now conceded that under the rulings of this Court the respondent as the owner of a plot of grove land was a co-sharer of the persons against whom the decree for foreclosure was passed. An attempt was made to show that at the date of the re-purchase of June 1907 the appellant's father also was a co-sharer, but all that was proved was that he had obtained mutation of names in 1905 in respect of 2 bighas 7 biswas 10 biswansis in the village. Possession may be sufficient title as against a trespasser, but something more than possession recently acquired must be shown as a basis for a claim to pre-empt as a co-sharer. It must be taken then that Badri was not a co-sharer at the date of the repurchase, and the only question is whether a person who sells property in respect of which another has a right of pre-emption can defeat that other's claim to pre-empt by re-purchasing the property before the suit for pre-emption is brought. On principle it would seem that he cannot do so, and it has been so held in the Punjab in the case mentioned by the lower Appellate Court. I agree with the view expressed in that case. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 5 (e)—Application for leave to sue as pauper—Discretion of Court—"Agreement" and "proposed suit," meaning of.

SHAMBHU DAT v. JAGANNATH.

An application for leave to sue as a pauper is within the discretion of the Court to grant or reject.

An agreement, in order to bar an application under Order XXXIII, rule 5 (e), must be one with reference to the subject-matter of the proposed suit, and the word "proposed" indicates that it must have reference to the suit which has been instituted and that the agreement referred to must be a champertous agreement.

Civil revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 2nd February 1916.

FACTS material for the purpose of this report are as follows:—

One Harbhagat Puri presented an application to sue as a pauper for the possession of certain property on 26th June 1915. He was opposed by Mansa Puri the defendant, on the ground that the applicant having executed a simple mortgage-deed hypothecating the property in suit on 25th March 1906 in favour of one Panna Lal was debarred from suing as a pauper under the provisions of Order XXXIII, rule 5 (e), of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge of Agra decided against this contention of the defendant and allowed the plaintiff to sue as a pauper. The defendant came to the High Court in revision.

Mr. Narayan Parshad Asthana, for the Applicant.—The wording of the rule is clear and if there is any agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the suit the Court shall reject the application.

[WALSH, J.—You forget the importance of the word proposed. It means any champertous agreement.]

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad for Mr. S. K. Dur, for the Respondent.—The mortgage-deed is dated 25th March 1906. The suit has been brought nearly ten years after.

Mr. Narayan Parshad read the mortgage-deed and submitted that the deed was executed to file a suit regarding this property then in possession of the Police and the property had now come to applicant. That suit had been dismissed and now this suit was brought.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad for Mr. S. K. Dur, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Court below granting leave to the plaintiff to sue as a pauper. The ground upon which the application was made is that the respondent had executed an agreement in favour of a third party giving him an interest in the subject-matter of the suit, and that the application, therefore, should not have been granted. It appears that in 1908 the applicant mortgaged his property for the purpose of instituting a suit. We are informed that a suit was filed but it was dismissed. There is no ground for revision of this order. The Court below had discretion to grant the application or not, and it is not possible to say that the Court below acted illegally and with material irregularity in granting the application. It has been suggested that the said mortgage precluded the plaintiff from maintaining his application. Under the law it is an agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the proposed suit that bars the application. The word "proposed" indicates that it must have reference to the suit which has now been instituted and that the agreement referred to is a champertous agreement. The decision of the Court below upon this point is correct. We dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

Pre-emption—Price of property, decision as to—Market value—Income of property—Court, position of—Presumption—Bad faith.

A Court has a perfect right to decide on the facts whether property has been genuinely sold for a fancy price which has been paid to and enjoyed by the vendor, or whether the sale-price has been fixed fictitiously in order to defeat claims for pre-emption and has not been actually enjoyed by the vendor. [p. 174, col. 1.]

A Court has a right under the provisions of section 13, Act XVIII of 1876, to decide that the price was not fixed in good faith and to determine the amount to be paid in the suit for pre-emption upon the market value. [p. 174 col. 1.]

SHAMBHU DAT V. JAGANNATH.

But in the absence of actual evidence to show that the price was fixed in bad faith, no legal presumption to that effect can arise from the fact that the price paid by the vendee, as well as even that offered by the pre-emptor, are, in view of the recorded income of the property, such as no reasonable man actuated by business principles would offer. [p. 175, col. 1.]

Sheo Din v. Bajrang Bakhsh, Select Cases 203 and Mukta Pershad v. Sheo Mangal, 1 O. C. 227, referred to.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 9th November 1914, upholding the order of the Sub-ordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 29th July 1914.

Babu Aditya Prasad, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The property in question was sold for a consideration of Rs. 2,500, of which Rs. 1,700 were paid in the presence of the Sub-Registrar and Rs. 800 were left with the vendee for payment to the prior mortgagee. The Courts below have found on the evidence of the patwari and the evidence afforded by the entries in certain sale-deeds that the market-value of the property was considerably less. The patwari has asserted that the profits of the property amount only to Rs. 20-9-4 a year. A Court has a perfect right to decide on the facts, whether property has been genuinely sold for a fancy price which has been paid to and enjoyed by the vendor, or whether the sale price has been fixed fictitiously in order to defeat claims for pre-emption and has not been actually enjoyed by the vendor. In the first case the principles enunciated in Sheo Din v. Bajrang Bakhsh (1) have application. In the latter case the principles enunciated in Mukta Pershad v. Sheo Mangal (2) have application, and the Court has a right under the provisions of section 13, Act XVIII of 1876, to decide that the price was not fixed in good faith and to determine the amount to be paid in the suit for pre-emption upon the market value. If the decision of the Courts below is a decision based upon actual evidence this appeal must fail, for if the Courts below on evidence had decided that the price was fixed in bad faith there would be nothing more to be said. I find, however, that the Courts below have not arrived at this decision upon anything in the nature of evidence. There is no evidence to show that the price was fixed in bad faith. The evidence afforded by the entries in the sale-deeds is worth nothing. There is nothing to show the circumstances in which those transfers were made and the mere recitals are of no value whatever. There remains the fact that the profits of property transferred are only Rs. 20-9-4. Thus it would appear that the vendee is purchasing the property at 125 years' purchase on the recorded income. This on the face of it would appear to show either that the price is a fancy price, or, as is more probable, that the income of the property is grossly undervalued. The latter alternative is supported by the fact that the pre-emptor himself offers Rs. 1,248, that is to say, more than 60 years' purchase on the recorded income. No man actuated by reasonable business principles would offer 60 year's purchase for property, for it stands to reason that he would be much better off if he invested his money in Government securities, and when we find that a man does offer 60 years' purchase or more upon the recorded income, it can only be concluded that the transaction does not mean what it appears to mean on the surface, and either that the property has great possibilities of development or (what is more likely) that the income has been purposely misstated either to obtain a low assessment or for some other reason. Thus we have it that on the one side the purchaser is offering a price which no sensible man actuated by business principles would offer if the income is correctly recorded, and that, on the other hand, the pre-emptor is also offering a price, which though somewhat less than half of what the vendee has offered, is nevertheless a price considerably greater than what would be offered by any man actuated by business principles if the income is correctly recorded. The only conclusion to be drawn is that the profits have been grossly understated, and having drawn that conclusion the next conclusion follows that we do not know what the profits are. It is quite possible that the profits are so great that the price offered by the vendee is not an unreasonable price at all, and in these circumstances there is no legal ground for assuming that the price has been fixed in bad faith. I need not touch on the other points raised in the appeal as they have been dropped in argument.

In the result I allow the appeal and direct that Jagannath obtain possession of the property if he pays Rs. 2,500 and the costs of all three Courts into Court on or before the 28th June 1916, less the amount which he has already paid into Court. Jagannath will pay his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch I, Art. 5, cl. (c)—Hire-purchase contract—Agreement to hire with option to purchase, stamp duty on.

An agreement to hire machinery with an option on the part of the hirer to purchase is an agreement within the meaning of Article 5, clause (c) of Schedule I to the Stamp Act and is, therefore, liable to a stamp duty of eight-annas only. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Reference, under section 57 of the Indian Stamp Act, by F. J. Monahan, Esq., Member of the Board of Revenue, Bengal, dated 18th April 1916.

REFERENCE.

On the 8th June 1914, Linotype and Machinery, Ltd., of London and Calcutta and the Windsor Press of Calcutta executed an instrument which is described as a hire-purchase agreement, whereby one duplex double-letter linotype machine was hired by the latter for 27 months upon terms and conditions set forth in the document. The principal conditions agreed to are that the hirers shall pay £135 on the execution of the deed and thereafter £540 by 27 equal monthly instalments, together with interest, and that upon payment of the full sum with the interest in the manner specified in the document, the hired machinery shall become the property of the hirers, but that until such payment is made the machinery shall continue to be on hire.

2. This document was submitted to the Collector of Stamp Revenue, Calcutta, by the Solicitors of Linotype and Machinery, Ltd., for the purpose of having it duly stamped. The Collector of Stamp Revenue, Calcutta, has raised the question whether a hire-purchase agreement is to be stamped as an agreement or as a conveyance. The applicants proposed to stamp it as an agreement and urged that in England such a document is chargeable as an agreement under section 7 of the Finance Act, 1907. They contend that even if the agreement is taken to be a conditional sale, it comes under clause (a) of the exemptions mentioned in Article 5, Schedule I, of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899. They point out that there is no obligation that the machine should be purchased, and state that, in a number of cases, the machine is returned to the owners after it has been hired for a certain period. The Collector points out that the provisions of section 7 of the English Act cannot be followed here, and that it is necessary to consider how such an instrument should be dealt with under the Indian Stamp Act, as there is no special provision for the stamping of a "hire-purchase" instrument in Schedule I thereof. He holds that the instrument comes within the term "conveyance", as defined in section 2 (10) of the Indian Stamp Act, and is liable to be stamped as such.

3. The Legal Remembrancer, who was consulted, considers that there are good grounds for holding that the instrument under consideration comes within the definition of conveyance and should be stamped in the manner suggested by the Collector. The Board concurs with the opinion of the Legal Remembrancer, but considers that the question how a hire-purchase agreement should be stamped is of such importance as to render it necessary that a reference should be made to the Hon'ble High Court for an authoritative decision under section 57 of the Act.

4. Printed copies of the document in question, of the Collector's letter of the 28th January 1916 and of the Solicitor's letter of the 6th January 1916, are submitted herewith:

No. 6 R. S., dated Calcutta, the 28th January 1916.

From—Rai J. M. Das Bahadur, Collector of Calcutta.

To—The Commissioner of the Presidency Division.

Under the provisions of section 56 (2) of the Indian Stamp Act II of 1899, I have the honour to submit the accompanying instrument with a view to obtain a decision of the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority as to the correct amount of stamp duty which the same attracts.

2. The document, on which no stamp duty was paid at the time of execution, was produced for validation under the Stamp Act on payment of annas 8 which was suggested by the applicants, Messrs. Watkins and Co., as the proper duty leviable thereon. The instrument, which is described as a hire-purchase contract, was entered into on the 8th June 1914, between the Linotype and Machinery, Limited, of London and Calcutta, called the "Company" of the one part and the "Windsor Press," of Calcutta, called the "Hirers" of the other part. The parties agree to let and to hire a machine for a term of 27 months, upon terms and conditions set forth in the document and for the purpose of the agreement the hired machinery is valued at £.75 or Rs. 10,125. It is agreed that the hirers shall pay the Company as hire the sum of £675 and interest by 27 equal monthly instalments and that upon payment of the full sum the said hiring shall cease and determine and the hired machine shall thenceforth be the property of the hirers.

3. In their letter dated the 6th January 1916, the applicants have given their reasons for holding that a duty of annas 8 only is payable on the instrument. They say that in England a hire-purchase agreement is chargeable as an agreement with a stamp duty of 6d. under section 7 of the Finance Act of 1907. They state that the agreement is not a conditional sale and they contend that if it is taken to be a conditional sale, it must be held that it comes under clause (a) of the exemptions mentioned in Article 5 of Schedule I to the Stamp Act. The principal question for consideration, they say, is whether the ownership of the machine is transferred from one party to another. They express the opinion that the instrument in question falls short even of an agreement to convey, one party giving the other only an option to purchase the machinery at a certain price. It is said that there is no obligation on the other party to purchase the machine and that in a number of cases the machine is returned to the owner after the same has been hired for a certain period.

4. The contention that under section 7 of the English Finance Act of 1907 such an instrument is chargeable as an agreement with a stamp duty of the only 6d. does not seem to be correct. An extract of section 7 is given below:

"Paragraph 7. Any agreement for or relating to the supply of goods on hire, whereby the goods in consideration of periodical payments will or may become the property of the person to whom they are supplied, shall be charged with stamp duty as an agreement, or, if under seal (or in Scotland with a clause of registration), as a deed, as the case requires, and the exemption numbered (3) under the heading 'Agreement or any Memorandum of an Agreement' in the First Schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891 (which exempts agreements for the sale of goods), shall not apply in the case of any such instrument."

It will be seen that a hire-purchase agreement is chargeable as an agreement if under hand only and as a deed if under seal. The instrument in question is a document under seal and as such is liable to be charged as a deed. The distinction between an instrument under seal and an instrument under hand only is not recognized by the Indian Stamp Act. This is clear from the different definitions of the terms

In re LINOTYPE AND MACHINERY CO AND WINDSOR PRESS.

"Executed" and "Execution" in the two Acts which are given in parallel columns below:—

Definition in the Indian Stamp Act.
"Executed" and "Execution" used with reference to instruments mean "Signed" and "Signature."

Definition in the English Stamp Act.
The expression "Executed" and "Execution" with reference to instruments not under seal mean "Signed" and "Signature."

A deed under seal being not distinguished in the Indian Stamp Act from a deed under hand only, the provisions of section 7 of the English Act cannot be followed here. It is necessary, therefore, to consider how such an instrument should be dealt with under the Indian Stamp Act. The nature of such an instrument is very clearly described in section 7 of the Finance Act quoted above. It is an "agreement for or relating to the supply of goods on hire whereby the goods in consideration of periodical payments will or may become the property of the person to whom they are supplied." There is clearly a transfer in such a transaction within the meaning of section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act. The interest acquired by the transferee is of the nature of a contingent interest as defined in section 21 of the Transfer of Property Act. It seems that an instrument creating such a right comes within the scope of the term "conveyance" which, as defined in section 2 (10) of the Indian Stamp Act, includes not only a conveyance on sale, but every instrument by which property, whether moveable or immovable, is transferred inter vivos and which is not otherwise specifically provided for in Schedule I. A "hire-purchase" agreement is not specifically provided for in Schedule I. A hiring agreement is so provided for, but a "hire-purchase" agreement is something more than a mere hiring agreement. It would seem, therefore, that the instrument in question is chargeable as a conveyance under the Indian Stamp Act.

5. As regards the contention that if the instrument be treated as a conveyance, it should be exempted from stamp duty altogether under clause (a) of the exemptions under Article 5 of Schedule I to the Stamp Act, I beg to state that section 7 of the English Finance Act specifically provides that the exemption is not applicable to a "hire-purchase" agreement. It does not appear that there is anything in the Indian Stamp Act favouring a contrary conclusion.

6. It will be seen from the letter of the applicants referred to above that hire-purchase agreements are executed in large numbers in this country. The question as to the proper stamp duty payable on such documents is, therefore, one of considerable importance. In England it has been necessary to make special provision for such documents. It is desirable, therefore, that there should be an authoritative ruling on the point here.

Re: hire-purchase agreement.

Your letter of the 4th instant. The agreement in question is in a form in common use in Calcutta and India and great numbers of these agreements, to our knowledge, are used by the vendors of machinery, motor cars, typewriters and other engineering goods. During the past 15 years all such agreements that have passed through our hands, totalling some hundreds, have been stamped annas 8 each, and no question has ever been raised before as to the sufficiency of the stamp. In England, a hire-purchase agreement is chargeable with stamp duty as an agreement (i. e.) 6d. (see section 7 of the Finance Act, 1907).

The agreement is specially drawn so as to prevent any title in the goods passing and we fail to understand the Controller's contention that the agreement is a conditional sale. Even were his contention correct, it appears to us that the agreement would then fall under exemption (a) to Article 5 of the Stamp Act, as being "an agreement for or relating to the sale of goods of merchandise exclusively" in which case it is not liable to duty at all.

The whole question really is as to whether the ownership of the machine is transferred from one party to the other. The deed itself clearly says that the property is hired and there is an option to the hirer to buy the property at a fixed price should he so desire. The matter is one of great importance to the mercantile community, as one of the main objects of a hire-purchase agreement is to prevent the machinery vesting in the Official Assignee in the event of the hirer becoming insolvent.

Lord Fisher has clearly laid down that the duty on a conveyance only attaches when the parties proceed to that conveyance and an agreement to convey is not in itself a conveyance [see Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Angus (1)].

In our opinion the present instrument falls short even of an agreement to convey as, as already pointed out, one party gives the other an option to purchase the machinery at a certain price. There is no obligation whatever on the other party to purchase and in a number of cases they do not do so and the machine is returned to the owners after the same has been hired for a certain period.

Agreement for the hire of machinery

H.P.C. (India.)

An agreement made the eighth day of June 1914 between Linotype and Machinery Limited of 188 and 189 Fleet Street in the City of London and of Calcutta (hereinafter called "the Company") of the one part and the Windsor Press of 11 British Indian Street, Calcutta (hereinafter called "the Hirers"), of the other part.

Whereby it is agreed as follows:—

1. The Company hereby agree to let to the Hirers and the Hirers hereby agree to hire for the purpose of carrying on the Hirers' business of printing one duplex double letter Linotype Machine (hereinafter referred to as "the hired machinery") for the term of 27 months from the date of delivery of the machinery upon the terms and conditions herein contained and for the purposes of this agreement the hired machinery is hereby admitted and agreed to be of the value of £675 or Rs. 10,125 f.o.b. English port.

2. The hired machinery shall be erected by the Company upon the premises of the Hirers at 11, British Indian Street, Calcutta, as soon as the Company are reasonably able to deliver the same but the Hirers shall not have any right or power to cancel or rescind this agreement in case of any delay in delivery of the hired machinery or any part thereof arising through strikes, combinations of workmen, lockout of workmen, or any other cause whatever beyond the control of the Company nor shall the Company under any circumstances be under any liability to the Hirers for any damage or loss directly or indirectly caused by or attributable to delay in delivery of the hired machinery or any part thereof arising from any cause whatever. The Company will supply free of charge the services of a skilled mechanic for the erection of the hired machinery, any other labour employed in erecting the hired machinery shall be at the cost of the Hirers.

3. The Hirers shall pay the Company as hire the sum of £675 or Rs. 10,125 and interest as follows: £135 or Rs. 2,025 to be paid on the execution of this agreement and the sum of £540 or Rs. 8,100 by 27 equal monthly instalments of £20 or Rs. 300 each, the first of such monthly instalments to be paid one month after erection of the machinery and the remaining instalments on the corresponding day of every first calendar month thereafter and also together with each such monthly instalment interest for that month upon that instalment and all the remaining future instalments at the rate of six per cent. per annum, such interest in the case of the first of such monthly instalments being calculated from the date of erection of the hired machinery. All charges for packing, freight, marine insurance, landing, clearing, etc., shall be paid by the Hirers to the Company on delivery of the machinery. If the Hirers shall fail to pay any such instalment and interest or any part thereof on the due date thereof the amount so in arrear shall bear interest until payment at the rate of seven and one-half per cent. per annum. The Hirers shall on the execution of this agreement hand to the Company customary trade bills for the respective amounts of the said instalments of hire and interest payable under this agreement and such bills shall respectively be made payable on the dates on which such instalments and interest are respectively payable under this agreement and shall bear interest at the rate of seven and one-half per cent. per annum after due date. The said bills shall be a collateral security for the payment of the said instalments and interest and the giving thereof shall not suspend or affect any of the remedies of the Company hereunder.

4. The Hirers shall not during the continuance of this agreement in any way sell, assign, sub-let or otherwise part with the possession of the hired machinery or any part or parts thereof or assume the ownership thereof or remove from the said premises or from one building to another the hired machinery or any part or parts thereof or attempt so to do or part with possession of their interest in the said premises where the hired machinery is kept without first informing the Secretary of the Company of such intended removal and receiving his consent in writing to do so. The hired machinery shall at all times be at the risk of the Hirers who shall bear any loss arising from the destruction or loss thereof or damage thereto, however caused, and shall take all reasonable care thereof during the hiring period and shall permit the Company or its Agents at all reasonable times to inspect the same and if at any such inspection any part or parts of the hired machinery shall be found broken, damaged or destroyed the Hirers shall forthwith at their own expense and to the satisfaction of the Engineer of the Company replace and repair the parts so broken, damaged or destroyed. The Hirers shall not at any time during the hiring purchase any parts or matrices as may be required to be used with or in connection with the hired machinery except from the Company who shall from time to time supply the same at their ordinary prices current in India at the respective dates when such parts or matrices are ordered.

5. The Hirers shall punctually pay all rent, rates and taxes payable in respect of the premises where the hired machinery or any part thereof is kept and shall upon demand produce to the Company or its Agents the current receipts for the said rent, rates and taxes, and in the event of the same being in arrear the Company is hereby empowered to pay the same and any expenses attendant thereon and the Hirers shall on demand repay to the Company any sum so paid.

6. The Hirers shall at all times during the hiring keep affixed in a conspicuous position or positions on the hired machinery such plate or plates as the Company may provide for denoting that the hired machinery is the property of the Company and the Hirers shall not at any time during the hiring remove or obliterate any of such plates or allow the same to be removed or obliterated.

7. The Company shall insure the hired machinery against fire in a recognized Tariff Fire Insurance Office in the sum of £690 or Rs. 10,350 and the Hirers shall on demand repay to the Company the premiums paid. The Company shall if requested produce to the Hirers the policy of insurance and the receipts for the current premiums payable for such insurance.

8. If any of the said instalments of hire or any part thereof shall be in arrear and unpaid for one calendar month after the same shall have become due or if the Hirers shall at any time fail or neglect to perform or observe any of the agreements or provisions herein contained and on their part to be performed and observed or if a distress or execution shall be levied or issued upon or against any of the chattels or property of the Hirers or if an order shall be made or an effective resolution passed for the winding up of the Hirers or if a Receiver shall be appointed of the undertaking of the Hirers or any of their assets, then and in any such case the Company may without notice to the Hirers terminate the hiring and may by its servants or Agents without any previous notice to the Hirers enter upon and into any premises or buildings where the hired machinery or any part or parts thereof may be and seize, re-take possession of and remove the same to such place as the Company may think fit notwithstanding any payments previously made by the Hirers.

9. If the hiring shall be determined under clause 8 hereof no person shall have any claim or demand against the Company in respect of any payments previously made by the Hirers, all of which shall in every such case as aforesaid be absolutely forfeited and the Company shall be entitled to recover from the Hirers or their estate all instalments of hire then in arrear (if any) with interest thereon as aforesaid and a proportionate part of the current instalment and interest up to the date of the determination of the hiring and in addition such sum (if any) as shall be required with the money so to be paid for hire (exclusive of interest) and the sum previously paid for hire (exclusive of interest) to make up a sum equal to 60 per cent. of the amount of £675 or Rs. 10,125 payable as hire under clause 3 hereof and the Company shall also be entitled to recover from the Hirers or their estate all costs and expenses including levy incurred in or about the entry, seizure and removal under this agreement and the Hirers shall not nor shall any person claiming through them commence or maintain any action, counter-claim or proceeding against the Company, its servants or Agents by reason of the Company taking possession of the hired machinery or by reason of the temporary possession by the Company of the premises where the hired machinery or any part thereof may be for such time as may be reasonably occupied in its removal.

10. The Hirers may determine the hiring on any of the monthly days hereinbefore appointed for payment upon giving to the Company three calendar months' previous notice in writing of their intention so to do specifying the date on which the hiring is to terminate and upon delivering up the hired machinery to the Company on or before that date carriage paid and in good repair as provided by clause 4 hereof at such place in India as the Company may appoint and at the same time paying to the Company all moneys payable hereunder up to that date and in addition such sum (if any) as with the sums then and previously paid for hire (exclusive of interest) shall be required to make up a sum equal to 60 per cent. of the total amount of £675 or Rs. 10,125 payable as hire under clause 3 hereof.

11. If the hiring hereby constituted shall be determined under clause 8 or clause 10 the Company shall upon payment of all sums payable under clause 9 or clause 10 hereof as the case may be return to the Hirers duly cancelled such of the bills mentioned in clause 3 hereof as shall not at the time of such payment have fallen due.

12. Upon payment by the Hirers to the Company of the full sum of £675 or Rs. 10,125 and interest payable hereunder before or on the days and in manner aforesaid the hiring shall cease and determine and the hired machinery shall thenceforth be the property of the Hirers but until such full payment the hired machinery shall remain the sole and absolute property of the Company, and is only let on hire to the Hirers.

In witness whereof the Hirers have caused their common seal to be hereunto affixed the day and year first above written.

The common seal of the Windsor Press was hereunto affixed—

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case, I am of opinion that the document in question is an agreement and not a conveyance.

The document in question has been somewhat loosely described in the reference to us as a hire-purchase agreement. In order to ascertain what the real effect of the document is, we must, of course, look at the terms of the document; and, I am bound to say that when I heard the document read by the learned Advocate-General the thought that came to my mind was that the point was not arguable. Therefore, I was not at all surprised to hear the learned Advocate-General say, as one would expect him to say under such circumstances, that in his opinion the point was not arguable. Even apart from the decisions in Helby v. Mathew; (2), which has been cited to us, it is obvious upon the face of the document in question that it is an agreement and nothing more than an agreement. Further than that, it is not even an agreement to purchase but simply an agreement to hire the machinery in question, with an option on the part of the Hirer to purchase.

Under those circumstances, in my judgment, the answer which must be given to this reference is that the document in question is an agreement within the meaning of Article 5, clause (c), of Schedule I to the Indian Stamp Act, and is, therefore, liable to a stamp duty of eight annas.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

CHAUDHURI, J.—I agree.

Pre-emption—Mortgage—Foreclosure—Decree absolute—Relinquishment by mortgagee in favour of mortgagor, effect of—Cause of action, extinguishment of, by subsequent acts of defendant.

Once a right of pre-emption has accrued it cannot be defeated by a re-sale to the vendor. [p. 183, col. 2.]
Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai, 11 Ind. Cas. 532; 14 O. C. 156, dissented from.

Raj Bahadur Singh v. Chandrapal 37 Ind. Cas. 170; 19 O. C. 185n.; Wali-ul-Haq v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Haq, 3 O. C. 30, referred to.

A mortgagee obtained a decree absolute for foreclosure, which gave rise to a right of pre-emption in favour of the plaintiff, but before the institution of a suit for pre-emption the mortgagee executed a deed of relinquishment of the property in favour of the ex-mortgagors:

Held, that the relinquishment could not extinguish the right of pre-emption which had already accrued to the plaintiff. [p. 183, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated the 3rd December 1915, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Unao, dated the 30th June 1915.

Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath and Mr. S. P. Kain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Dwarka Singh, Mohan Singh and Ram Nath Singh executed a deed of usufructuary mortgage on 28th July 1882 in favour of certain of their relatives Behari Singh, Kalu Singh, Surajbali Singh and Banke Singh, under which the latter obtained possession of the mortgaged property. This deed contained a clause permitting foreclosure in certain circumstances. On 7th November 1910 the mortgagees, taking advantage of the provision of that clause, sued for and obtained a decree for foreclosure on the foot of the deed of 28th July 1882. On 18th May 1912 this decree was made absolute. On 18th May 1912, the date when the decree became absolute, a right of pre-emption accrued in favour of the present appellants under the provisions of Chapter

MANNA SINGH v. BIHARI SINGH.

II, Act XVIII of 1876. On 28th May 1914 Dwarka Singh and the remaining decree-holders executed a deed of relinquishment of the property in favour of the judgment-debtors, the ex-mortgagors, and on the same date the ex-mortgagors executed a fresh deed of mortgage of the whole property with the exception of a few bighas in favour of the decree-holders. Assuming for the sake of argument that the execution of the deed of relinquishment and of the new deed of mortgage on 26th May 1914 conferred title on Bihari Singh, Kallu Singh, Surajbali Singh and Banke Singh as owners of the property, does this circumstance extinguish the right of pre-emption that accrued in favour of the appellants on 18th May 1914? This is the main point for decision in the present appeal.

According to the decision of Mr. Piggott in Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai (1) the re-transfer is sufficient to defeat the claim for pre-emption. Mr. Piggott, sitting alone, held in that appeal, following certain decisions of the Allahabad High Court, that the right of pre-emption is in itself a weak right, and that a plaintiff claiming on the strength of it must be in a position to show a valid and subsisting right to pre-emption at the time when he brings his suit into Court, if not indeed up to the time when the decree of the first Court is passed. He considered that the general principles laid down by the Allahabad High Court were applicable to Oudh, because the object of the law of pre-emption was to prevent the introduction of strangers into the co-parcenary body and that object was equally attained when transfers are prevented by the fear of a claim for pre-emption as when such claim is successfully enforced after a completed transfer. He held that the provisions of the Oudh Laws Act on the subject of pre-emption could not be regarded as exhaustive or as covering the entire law of pre-emption in Oudh, that they could not be treated as if they formed part of a penal Statute for punishing transfers to strangers in contravention of the right of pre-emption, but that they merely provided a remedy for the wrong done to the co-parcenary body of the village community generally by such transfers. This decision is followed by the learned District Judge and it undoubtedly, if it be considered authoritative, is sufficient to support his view. But that decision of Mr. Piggott can no longer be held to be authoritative. The learned District Judge was not in a position to know this, as (by what appears to me an omission) the decision of a Bench, which, in my opinion, has completely overruled and dissented from the view taken by Mr. Piggott, has not yet been published. I refer to the unreported decision in (Second Civil Appeal No. 194 of 1914), Raj Bahadur Singh v. Chandrapal (2). This second civil appeal came originally before Mr. Lindsay, who referred its decision to a Bench on 22nd November 1915, on the ground that the decision of Mr. Piggott in Sheo Charan Singh v. Bhikai (1) appeared to conflict with previous decisions of this Court in Wali-ul-Hak v. Mohammad Ghani-ul-Hak (3), Mahabir Prasad v. Ram Jiwan Lal (4). The appeal in question was decided on 24th March 1916 by a Bench consisting of Mr. Lindsay and myself. I direct that a copy of the decision of the Bench be appended to this judgment.

It is to be noted that the decision of the Bench was not exactly on the same facts as the case before Mr. Piggott, or as the present case. But the principles adopted by the Bench overrule the view taken by Mr. Piggott. It will be seen from the decision of the Bench that the Bench was concerned with a case in which a right of pre-emption created by the first transfer was not set up but in which a right of pre-emption created by the re-transfer was set up. Here, of course, the right set up is alleged to have been created by the original transfer. The views taken by the Bench were, however, such that it follows from them as a necessary consequence that the views taken by Mr. Piggott must be considered to be overruled. The Bench held that the general principles laid down by the Allahabad High Court regarding the law of pre-emption which prevails in the Province of Agra, cannot be applied so as to affect the scope of the Statute which regulates the law of pre-emption in Oudh and, whatever the object of the law of pre-emption generally in Agra may be conceived to be, this Court has to take the language of the Statute as it finds it and give full effect to it. In other words, we are not concerned with what may have been the intentions of the Legislature when it enacted Chapter II, Act XVIII of 1876, except in so far as those intentions are disclosed in the words of the Statute. Now there is nothing in the words of the Statute that affords any ground for the supposition that, provided a stranger has kept out of the village community, no right of pre-emption exists. In fact it is clear law in Oudh that a right of pre-emption can frequently be exercised when a stranger is not admitted into the co-parcenary body of the community. As the law stands, if a member of the co-parcenary community makes a transfer in favour of another member, a third member possessing right of pre-emption equal to that possessed by the transferee has a right to demand that lots should be drawn to decide whether the transfer should be made in favour of himself or the original transferee. That is clear law in Oudh and hundreds of cases have been decided on that principle. It may well be asked whether anything is gained by such a provision of the law in the interests of the village community as a body? But it is not for this Court to answer that question, but to apply the law as it finds it to be. Mr. Piggott, in laying down a principle that a re-transfer in favour of the original transferor extinguished a right of pre-emption possessed by a third party, was guided solely (as I read his decision) by a consideration that the law of pre-emption in Oudh was enacted in order to protect the interests of the proprietary body and that, where the interests of the proprietary body with regard to the admission of strangers into their midst were adequately safeguarded in any other manner than by the exercise of a right of pre-emption, a right of pre-emption ceased to exist. If that principle is not accepted Mr. Piggott's decision is of no avail to assist the original proprietors in this connection. That principle is clearly dissented from in the decision of the Bench to which I referred. As I have already stated, I was myself a member of that Bench and I consider that the view which we took, although the facts were not exactly the same, clearly dissented from and overruled the decision of Mr. Piggott sitting as a single Judge. In these circumstances I do not think it necessary to refer the decision of this appeal to another Bench and I arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Piggott's decision affords no authority in support of the view taken by the learned District Judge. I have to decide whether once a right of pre-emption has accrued it can be defeated by anything that happens afterwards. The case in favour of the respondents is, putting aside the question of previous authority and taking the matter as res integra, that although a cause of action had accrued on the 18th May 1914 that cause of action had disappeared on the 26th of the same month owing to the re-transfer. The learned Counsel, who has argued the case for the respondents very ably, sets up that the transfer created by the foreclosure was no longer in existence when the suit was brought, and, therefore, he urges that there was no cause of action. His argument, however, ignores an important distinction. When the plaintiff sues on a cause of action that existed on a prior date and he himself has caused this cause of action to disappear before the date when he brings his suit, the argument of the learned Counsel for the respondents might have weight. But the fact that the third party has introduced new elements into the case after the cause of action has accrued cannot possibly affect the plaintiff's right. I consider that the re-transfer of 26th May 1914 (assuming that it was a good re-transfer) could not possibly extinguish the right of pre-emption that accrued on 18th May and I am supported in this view by an unreported decision of Mr. Chamier (Second Civil Appeal No. 437 of 1910), Ohhatarpal Singh v. Kushar Singh (5), dated the 6th April (5) 37 Ind. Cas. 172; 19 Q. C. 190n.

JOWALA PRASAD v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHI DEO.

1911. I direct that a copy of this decision also be appended to the judgment.

It will be seen from this judgment that Mr. Chamier decided this very point in the manner in which I proposed to decide it.

As a result I decree this appeal. I restore the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and set aside the decree of the learned District Judge. As it is agreed that the pre-emptors have paid the amount directed by the learned Subordinate Judge within two months of the date of his decree, no further order fixing a date is necessary. I am given to understand that the sum is still in deposit. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 8 will be allowed to deduct their costs from the amount deposited and to obtain possession of the property. The contesting respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellants in the Court of the District Judge and in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The plaintiff in this case is a landlord under whom one Musammat Lalit Kueri had a tenancy, upon which, on the 4th of October 1904, Rs. 2,300, was due as rent. The plaintiff agreed that he would forego interest upon this sum if the lady would execute an instalment bond with one substantial security. That substantial security was found in one Kanhaiya Lal. He pledged property belonging to a joint family of which he was the head to secure the instalments which Lalit Kueri had undertaken to pay.

In course of time the lady began to fall into arrears with her instalments. From the 30th of Asarh Sambat 1962 she has paid nothing. The plaintiff, therefore, sues to enforce his mortgage security against the sons of Kanhaiya Lal, who is now deceased. One of these sons Gopi Lal was alive at the time of the execution of the surety bond. The other Jowala Prasad was born later.

It is admitted that if the period of limitation in a suit, such as this, is six years then the sums falling due in Sambat 1962 and Sambat 1963 are barred by limitation.

The lower Courts have concurred in holding that limitation as against Gopi Lal must be six years as there is no charge upon his interest in the property, and against this decision there is no appeal. They have also concurring in holding that Jowala Prasad took his share in the property subject to the undertakings already entered into by the father Kanhaiya Lal, and that, therefore, he cannot avoid the charge created by the indemnity bond and that while that charge subsists limitation must be held to run under Article 132.

Against this decision Jowala Prasad appeals.

The questions for decision are:—

(1) A Mitakshara father has purported to create for a purpose, not connected with the family, a charge upon the property of a joint family of which he was the head. Can that charge be enforced after the death of the father against a son born into the joint family subsequently to the transaction?

(2) Where a principal debtor's liability has been extinguished by limitation, can the liability of his surety be kept alive by reason of a charge upon the surety's property for the satisfaction of the debt of the principal?

Were it necessary to consider the second question I should ask that the appeal be heard by a Full Bench. The conflicting rulings on the point are Sheo Kumar v. Narain Das (1) on one side and Hojarimal v. Krishnarav (2), Gopal Daji Sathe v. Gopal (3), Krishto Kishori Chowdhrao v. Radha Romun Munshi (4) and Subramania Aiyar v. Gopala Aiyar (5) on the other. It would seem that many sections of the Contract Act indicate that the Allahabad view is the correct view.

I am satisfied that the first question must be answered in the negative.

In Sadabart Prasad Sahu v. Foolbask Koer (6) the law was carefully reviewed, and the Court, refusing to follow the Madras and Bombay decisions, held that according to the Mitakshara Law, as received in the Presidency of Fort William, one co-parcener had not authority, without the consent of his co-sharers, to mortgage his undivided share in a portion of the joint family estate, in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the family.

In Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (7) it was held that the purchaser of undivided property at an execution sale during the life of the judgment-debtor for his separate debt does acquire his share in such property with the power of ascertaining and realising it by a partition. But in Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (8) it was held to be clear that if no proceedings had been taken to enforce the debt in their father's lifetime, his interest in the property would have survived on his death to his sons, so that it could not afterwards be reached by the creditor in their hands.

In Luchmun Dass v. Giridhar Chowdhry (9) it was held that even during the lifetime of the father the mortgagee would be entitled only to a decree directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate including the mortgaged property.

In Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (10) it was clearly laid down that any one of several members of a joint family is entitled to require partition of ancestral property, but so long as his interest is indefinite he is not in a position to dispose of it at his own hand, and for his own purpose.

In a recent Full Bench decision of the Calcutta Court, Bidya Prosad Singh v. Bhupnarain Singh (11), it was stated that where property, mortgaged by a father for purposes not connected with the joint family, devolves upon the sons by survivorship, there is no charge on it enforceable against the sons.

It seems to me immaterial that the joint family consisted of only one son at the time of the mortgage, and of two sons at the date of the father's death. It is sufficient to say that there was at the time of the attempt to create a charge upon the property a joint family in existence and that upon the cases I have quoted it is clear that one member of a joint family cannot deal with his share in the property of the joint family so as to create a charge which will survive him.

On the death of Kanhaiya Lal the charge created by him was extinguished, and every member of the joint family is entitled to plead that no charge subsists upon the joint family estate.

In this view limitation must be governed by Article 120, not by Article 132. The kists which fell due in 1962 and 1963 are barred both as against Jowala Prasad and against Gopi Lal.

The appeal is to this extent decreed..

In view of the attempt made by the appellant to avoid liability for the whole debt we direct that each side pay his own costs throughout the litigation.

Bombay Court of Wards Act (Bom. Act I of 1905), ss. 31, 32, applicability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Suit against minor—Guardian not named, effect of.

A suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, properly instituted in relation to a public charitable or religious trust against a Government ward is not one directly affecting, at all events, the property of the ward and, therefore, is not bad on the ground that the statutory notice provided for by section 31 of the Bombay Court of Wards Act has not been given, nor is it bad under section 32 on the ground that the Court of Wards was not named as guardian from the commencement of the suit. [p. 187, col. 1.]

Where an omission to name the guardian of a ward in no way affects the merits of the case, it should be treated as a mere defect or irregularity in procedure. [p. 188, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 54 of 1910.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. G. K. Parekh, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are the present appellants, instituted a suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the administration and management of certain religious wakf property. The learned District Judge after an investigation found certain of the trustees liable for certain sums. The 4th trustee was found liable only in respect of certain costs, but he was not found to be a defaulting trustee. In providing for the appointment of new trustees, the learned District Judge has included the 4th defendant as one of the trustees. That is substantially the ground of the plaintiffs' appeal to this Court, but it does not appear to us that there is any such blame attaching to the 4th defendant upon the finding of the lower Court as should induce us to hold that he is not a fit and proper person to be a trustee under the new scheme. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed.

That, however, is not the only question which we have to determine now, for it appears upon certain information brought to our notice by Mr. Mehta, who appears under instructions from the Talukdari Settlement Officer as the Court of Wards in charge of the superintendence of the property of the 1st defendant, that that defendant has now, and since 1909, been a Government ward under the Court of Wards and was so at the date of the institution of this suit on the 20th of December 1910, and although there was a full hearing of charges against the 1st defendant as a defaulting trustee in the Court of the District Judge, the Government Officer acting as the Court of Wards wishes to establish that by reason of defects in procedure provided by the Court of Wards Act (I of 1905), the whole proceedings so far as the 1st defendant is concerned are a nullity, including the decree for restoration of Rs. 6,000 found to be in his possession as a trustee liable to refund. The point has been brought to the notice of the Court in the form of cross-objections, as the Court of Wards was added as a party respondent by ex parte order.* It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that the cross-objections are not properly stamped. We think that this contentious argument is well founded.

They must be stamped upon that footing as on an appeal relating to the sum of Rs. 6,000 decreed against the 1st defendant. We have no information as to the manner in which the 1st defendant became a Government ward under the Court of Wards Act; whether he is a person declared by the District Court after application and inquiry to be incapable of managing, or unfitted to manage, his own property on account of physical or mental defect or infirmity, or such habits as cause, or are likely to cause, injury to his property or to the well-being of inferior holders under section 5 of the Act; or whether he is a landholder who has applied in writing to the Governor in Council, under section 9 of the Act, to have the property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. In the absence of any evidence of a declaration by the District Court under section 5, it would probably be safe to assume that he has made the application under section 9. The point, however, is not very material. The 1st defendant was sued with the other trustees of a Mahomedan religious institution, and has been found to have been in possession of the trust funds for a long series of years. Being found to be responsible for a sum of upwards of Rs. 6,000 which has come to his hands, a decree has been passed against him. That decree was passed in a suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code properly instituted in relation to a public charitable or religious trust.

It is argued, however, on behalf of the Court of Wards that the suit is, within the meaning of section 31 of the Court of Wards Act, a suit "relating to the person or property of a Government ward," and, therefore, is one which cannot be brought in any Civil Court until the expiration of two months after the statutory notice in writing prescribed by the section, which notice has not been given.

Now this suit as instituted is merely a suit relating to the property of a religious institution, and not to the property of the 1st defendant, and the argument of the Court of Wards could only be sustainable, if it is permissible to regard the possible consequences of a suit in deciding the nature of the suit. The consequence of any suit against any defendant may be that there will be a decree against him, if not for money, at all events for costs, and as a consequence of such a decree, an application may be made for the arrest of the defendant in execution, and, therefore, it may in that manner affect his person. Similarly an application may be made to satisfy the decretal costs by issuing execution against his property, and in that manner any decree may affect his property. But the words of the section are not "affecting the person or property of the Government ward," but "relating to the person or property." Those words appear to us to bring within the scope of that section a designedly limited class of suits. It would have been easier for the Legislature, if the contention of the Court of Wards was correct, to say "no suit shall be brought." That, however, is not the expression adopted. It must be not even any suit which may affect the person or property of the ward, but a suit relating to the person or property of the ward, and prima facie it must be a suit of which the nature is apparent as soon as the suit is framed, a suit to be judged by its intention and not by its possible consequences. It is easy to satisfy the words of the section without holding that they embrace any suit of any kind whatever. A suit relating to the person of a Government ward might be a suit, such as is referred to in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (1), for the custody of the person of the ward, or a suit relating to the marriage of the ward, or even a suit relating to the adoption of the ward. Similarly a suit relating to the property of the ward may reasonably be held to be a suit relating to property which is really the property of the ward, and not the property of some other institution.

Not only is this suit, however, a suit relating to the property of an institution in which the ward is concerned only as a trustee, but the decree itself when properly regarded is a decree for restoration of the property of that institution to the persons responsible for its management under the new scheme. The defaulting trustee is assumed to have the property which was placed in his charge still in his possession. It is on that footing that he is held liable for it. It is not, therefore, a decree directly affecting at all events the property of the ward. For these reasons we think that the suit is not bad on the ground that the statutory notice provided for by section 31 has not been given.

LALTA SINGH v. CHHATTAR SINGH.

Then it is argued that it is bad at all events under section 32, which provides that subject to the second paragraph of section 440 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is not material for this judgment, in every suit brought by or against a Government ward, the manager of the Government ward's property, or, where there is no manager, the Court of Wards having the superintendence of the Government ward's property shall be named as the next friend or guardian for the suit, as the case may be. But the section does not say that if the Court of Wards is not named as guardian from the commencement of a suit, the suit is bad. If it is not in every case a fatal objection to a suit against a minor that a guardian has not been named as provided by Statute, then it is obvious that in certain circumstances the omission to name such a guardian during some part of the proceedings may be only a defect or irregularity in proceedings not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court such as is contemplated by section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. In that case there would be no reason to reverse or substantially vary the decree or remand the case. In our judgment the omission in the present case in no way affects the merits of the case, and it is not suggested that the Court of Wards has any objection on the merits to the decree which has been passed. The conclusion that the omission, such as we have in this case, may be treated as a mere defect or irregularity in procedure is supported by a reference to the judgments in two cases mentioned in argument, one Rup Chand v. Dasodha (2) and the other Walian v. Banka Behari Pershad Singh (3), a decision of the Privy Council. In both those cases the provisions of section 443 of the Civil Procedure Code had not been complied with, as they should have been, but under the circumstances it was held that the non-compliance did not vitiate the proceedings. Every case, therefore, may be judged upon its own facts to see whether the omission has affected the merits or not. In the present case we think that the provisions of the section will be sufficiently complied with for the purposes of justice if notice is given to the Court of Wards that it will be added to the record as guardian ad litem of the 1st defendant as from the date of this judgment, and the proceedings will be amended accordingly. Any further notices which have to be given will be given in the first instance to the Court of Wards as the guardian of the 1st defendant. We do not think that the plaintiffs should be punished in this case by an award against them of costs, and under the circumstances we will allow them their costs. Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 must pay their own costs, and respondent No. 1 must pay full Court-fee on the ground that he is seeking to set aside the decree for Rs. 6,000.

LALTA SINGH v. CHHATTAR SINGH.

The disability of a ward, as mentioned in section 55 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, is not limited to such of his property as is managed on his behalf by the Court of Wards, but extends to every possible cause of action cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 190, col. 1.]

The word "proprietor", as used in the latter portion of section 3 (3) of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, means the proprietor who has actually made an application under section 10 of the Act. [p. 191, col. 1.]

Therefore, a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, who has neither been declared a disqualified proprietor nor has joined in the application made by the other members of the family under section 10 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, is not a "ward" under the Act, so that the disability arising out of the provisions of section 55 of the Act does not affect him, and he can institute a pre-emption suit in his personal capacity, in spite of the fact that his interests in the joint family property are managed by the Court of Wards. A member of a joint Hindu family holding a share in the joint family property is a co-sharer of the subdivision in which the property is situate within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, even though his name does not appear in the khevat. [p. 191, col. 2.]

Where a father and his son, constituting a joint Hindu family, join in bringing a pre-emption suit, and it is found that the father cannot sue in his personal capacity by reason of the prohibition contained in section 55 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, this fact does not stand in the way of the son's obtaining relief. [p. 191, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 20th October 1913.

JUDGMENT.—Jai Singh and his brother Lalta Singh applied under section 9, Local Act III of 1899, to have their property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Their application was granted and on 14th April 1903 their property was placed under the Court of Wards by a Notification No. ¹³³³_{X-875 c} of 1903, dated the 14th April 1903, published at page 675, Part II, of the Government Gazette of 18th April 1903. The notification took effect from the 30th March 1903. This notification, which was made under section 14, Local Act III of 1899, holds good under the new Act, Local Act IV of 1912, according to the provisions of section 2 of the latter Act. Jai Singh died on 21st March 1913. Drigbijai Singh is the son of Lalta Singh. Certain property was sold over which Lalta Singh and Drigbijai Singh would ordinarily have been able to obtain possession by enforcement of a right of pre-emption. An application was made on behalf of Lalta Singh before the death of Jai Singh to the Court of Wards to institute a suit to obtain this relief. The Court of Wards refused to institute the suit. Lalta Singh agreed that the suit should not be instituted. But subsequently a suit was brought by Lalta Singh and Drigbijai Singh on 28th March 1913. This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that under the provisions of section 55, Local Act IV of 1912, Lalta Singh and Drigbijai Singh both being wards could not sue otherwise than by and in the name of the Collector in charge of their property or such other person as the Court of Wards might appoint on their behalf. They appeal against this decision.

It has been brought to our notice by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the estate was released by the Court of Wards on 2nd May 1915 under Notification No. 410 N/X-26 (4) of 1915, dated the 9th June 1915, published at page 1130, Part II, of the Government Gazette of 12th June 1915.

We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that Lalta Singh's claim must be dismissed under the provisions of section 55. At the time that the claim was brought he was clearly a ward and subject to the disabilities of section 55. An argument has been advanced before us to the effect that section 55 merely prohibits a ward suing or being sued with respect to such property of his as is under the management of the Court of Wards. But this contention does not find favour with us. It is clear from reading the words of the section that the disabilities of a ward are considerably greater than the disabilities suggested by the learned Counsel for the appellants. The words are: "No ward shall sue or be sued, nor shall any proceedings be taken, in the Civil Court, otherwise than by and in the name of the Collector in charge of his property or such other person as the Court of Wards may appoint in this behalf." If the interpretation suggested by the learned Counsel were adopted we should in effect be inserting the words, "in respect of property of the ward managed on his behalf by the Court of Wards" between the words "Civil Court" and "otherwise." There is no justification for adding a gloss of this nature. The meaning of the section is perfectly plain. The ward is under a disability in suing and with regard to other proceedings in respect of every possible cause of action cognizable by a Civil Court; the law lays down clearly that he is not to take any action on his own motion in such matters, and that no action can be taken against him in his personal capacity, but that his guardian is to take proceedings on his behalf in respect of every matter, and that a person wishing to take proceedings against a ward shall take proceedings against the guardian of the ward and not against the ward himself. The plain words of the section cannot be affected by consideration of the position of the ward with regard to property acquired by him otherwise than by inheritance subsequent to the date of such assumption or declaration. The Court of Wards may in its discretion assume or refrain from assuming the superintendence of such property under the provisions of section 16, clause 4. But that circumstance in no way affects the position of the ward under section 55. We refer to this point simply because it has been pressed before us.

The position of Drigbijai Singh is, however, essentially different from the position of his father. A strong attempt was made by the learned Counsel for the vendee respondent to establish that Drigbijai Singh was a ward of Court although his name does not appear in the notification. He points out that, at the time that the notification was made, Drigbijai Singh was a minor, that he was a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law consisting of his father Lalta Singh, his uncle Jai Singh and himself, and that since the death of Jai Singh, Lalta Singh and Drigbijai Singh are the sole members of the family. He points out that the joint family property was managed entirely by the Court of Wards, that the interests of Drigbijai Singh in such property were made over to the Court of Wards, and that although he attained majority before the institution of the present suit he did not have any control of the management of his co-parcenary share in the joint family property until the property was released in 1915. These circumstances do not, however, in our opinion, afford any justification for holding that Drigbijai Singh was a ward within the meaning of section 55. The word "ward" as used in section 55 is defined by section 3, clause 3, which states: "'ward' means a disqualified proprietor whose person or property or any part of whose property is under the superintendence of the Court of Wards." This portion of the section clearly cannot refer to Drigbijai Singh. Neither Jai Singh or Lalta Singh were disqualified proprietors nor was Drigbijai Singh himself a disqualified proprietor. The Court of Wards might, had it chosen, have applied to have Drigbijai Singh declared a disqualified proprietor (as he was then a minor) under the provisions of Act III of 1899. But the Court of Wards took no such action with regard to him. We now come to the latter part of the section which states: "or a proprietor in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under section 10." Section 9 of Act III. of 1899 and section 10 of Act IV. of 1912 are in agreement with regard to the word "proprietor". Section 9 reads: "A proprietor may make application to the Local Government to have his property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, and the Local Government may, on being satisfied that it is expedient in the public interests that such property should be managed by the Court of Wards, make a declaration to that effect." Section 10 reads: "A proprietor may apply to the Collector to have his property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, and the Court of Wards may, on being satisfied that it is expedient to undertake the management of such property, make a declaration to this effect." Section 10 of the new Act provides that the application should be made to the Collector instead of to the Local Government and provides that the Court of Wards and not the Local Government shall decide whether the estate shall or shall not be taken under the management of the Court of Wards. But there is no difference with regard to the person who can make the application. In each case that person is the proprietor. Section 3, clause 5, of Act III of 1899 has not been altered with regard to these points by section 3, clause 3, of Act IV of 1912, in each case the wording of the portion having bearing on the point being "or a proprietor in regard to whose property a declaration has been made" under section 9 of the old Act or section 10 of the new Act. It is clear that this word "proprietor" means the proprietor who made the application. In the present case Jai Singh and Lalta Singh only made the application and Drigbijai Singh did not make an application. Thus Jai Singh and Lalta Singh became "wards" within the meaning of the Act and Drigbijai Singh did not become a "ward." The learned Counsel for the vendee-respondent has drawn our attention to a recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gulab Singh v. Raja Seth Gokuldas (1). This was a case which was heard on appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces. There two managing members of a Hindu joint family applied under the provisions of section 7 (4) of Act XVII of 1885, the Central Provinces Government Wards Act, to the Deputy Commissioner as Court of Wards for the district to assume superintendence of the joint family estate with a view to liquidate their debts. Their Lordships held that in making the application they acted within their power and authority as managing members and in the interest of all the members of the joint family, and that, inasmuch as no member had in the property any definite undivided share, what was taken over by the Court of Wards on assuming superintendence of the estate was the property of all the members of the joint family. They held that the Chief Commissioner had power to sanction the assumption by the Court of Wards of the whole of the joint family property, whether the application was made by the managing members only or by all the members of the family, and that the acts of the Court of Wards in dealing with the property after charge of it was assumed bound the interests of all the members. This decision does not, however, lay down that a member of such a joint Hindu family who has not joined in the application becomes a ward with regard to such disabilities as are contemplated by section 55 of Act IV of 1912. It lays down that the functions and the powers of the managing members of the joint family who have made such an application are taken over by the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards after such an application has been made takes the place of the managing members. Act XVII of 1885 does not create any such disabilities as are created by section 55 of the Local Act IV of 1912. These disabilities are of a peculiar kind. They apply only to the actual wards, that is to say, in the present instance to the persons who of their own accord placed themselves under the Court of Wards, and they do not apply to other members of the family whose interests in the joint family property are managed by the Court of Wards. Thus the provisions of section 55 do not prevent Drigbijai Singh from bringing the present suit to enforce a right of pre-emption. It is established law in Oudh that a member of a joint Hindu family holding a share in the joint family property is a co-sharer of the sub-division within the meaning of section 9, Act XVIII of 1876, even although his name does not appear on the khewat. This proposition was laid down in Hazari Singh v. Joot Singh (2) and has invariably been followed in subsequent cases. Drigbijai Singh had, therefore, the right to bring the suit apart from the right possessed by his father. It is not the case that his father had no right of pre-emption. It is the case that he had a right of pre-emption but that under the provisions of section 55 he was not permitted to use it except with the consent of the Court of Wards. But the fact that he was not so permitted to use it does not stand in the way of the son obtaining relief when he has sued as a co-plaintiff with his father. We, therefore, decide that Drigbijai Singh's claim must be allowed although the claim of Lalta Singh must be dismissed.

LALTA SINGH v. CHHATTAR SINGH.

We now come to the question as to the amount to be paid by Drigbijai Singh as a condition precedent to his enforcing his right. The learned Counsel for the appellants accepts the greater part of the consideration as found by the learned Subordinate Judge. He objects, however, to the amount of Rs. 1,805-9-4 in item No. 1. He admits the validity of Rs. 8,961-6-8 out of the total of Rs. 10,767, but argues that under the terms of the deed payment of which is secured by the deed of sale the remainder should be disallowed. His objection is based on an interpretation of one portion of the deed. He would calculate the interest not as compound interest proper but as interest on the amount of simple interest. The words of the deed might possibly bear the interpretation that he would put on them, but they certainly bear the interpretation that the learned Subordinate Judge placed upon them, and, in view of the fact that that was the interpretation of the deed accepted by the parties of their own free will and accord, we see no reason to make a more favourable interpretation in the interests of the pre-emptor when the original debtor was content to accept this manner of calculation. There is nothing of a fictitious or a fraudulent nature about this portion of the transaction. The learned Subordinate Judge at o. p. 203 of his judgment has given good reasons for adding the amount of Rs. 146 to the amount calculated under the terms of the deed. We find against the appellant Drigbijai Singh on this point.

The second point to which he takes exception is with regard to the allowance of the item referred to at o. p. 213. His case is that the deed therein referred to, the satisfaction of which is made a portion of the sale consideration, never existed. But we are satisfied the learned Subordinate Judge arrived at a correct conclusion on the evidence when he found that this deed did exist and that the amount due for its satisfaction has been correctly calculated. We have only to refer to some slight inaccuracies in calculation to which reference is made at o. pp. 209 and 210 of the judgment. These inaccuracies, which have caused the vendors to receive Rs. 89-14-0 too little, are clearly owing to bona fide mistakes of calculation. They do not show any collusion or anything fictitious. The conclusion at which we arrive is that the amount settled in the deed of sale was settled genuinely and honestly between the parties, that there were no fictitious entries, that there was no collusion although there was a slight error in calculation, and that if Drigbijai Singh wishes to obtain possession of the property by exercise of a right of pre-emption he can only do so by the payment of Rs. 32,000 to Jhau Lal vendee, of which Jhau Lal must make good Rs. 89-14-0 to the vendors.

We, therefore, allow this appeal in part. The appeal of Lalta Singh is dismissed. The appeal of Drigbijai Singh is allowed to this extent that if he pays Rs. 32,000 into the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on or before the 1st September 1916 he shall obtain possession of the property transferred.

There were certain cross-objections filed by the vendee-respondent. These are based upon an alleged miscalculation of the Pleader's fee. These objections have no weight. The Pleader's fee was calculated correctly according to the rules at the time that the decree was passed. It is true that subsequent to the passing of the decree the rule affecting the question has been changed, but that circumstance cannot help the objector.

The order as to costs will be as follows:—The vendee will pay his own costs and those of Drigbijai Singh in both Courts including the costs of the cross-objections. Lalta Singh will pay his own costs throughout. If Drigbijai Singh does not pay Rs. 32,000 into the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on or before 1st September 1916 his suit shall stand dismissed and he shall pay the costs of defendant-vendee in all Courts.

Appeal partly allowed.

RESPONDENT.Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 6—Mortgage to pay off old debt owing to non-agriculturists, whether contravenes provisions of Act—Consideration.

It is not the object of the Alienation of Land Act to prevent a non-agriculturist from recovering money due to him from an agriculturist by any legal means in his power and if such a person can induce an agriculturist to pay off a debt due to him and to take a mortgage of land from his debtor as security, for himself, there is nothing in this Act to prohibit such a course. It is immaterial whether the mortgagee pays in cash or gives his bond, nor has he anything to do with the correctness of the account or real amount due beyond what the debtor himself admits and asks the mortgagee to pay for him. Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. M. Datta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—Fatteh Khan, the defendant-respondent, owed some money to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta, the amount, it was alleged, being Rs. 1,000. Fatteh Khan entered into an agreement with Haidar plaintiff-appellant by which Haidar undertook to pay this sum of Rs. 1,000 to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta on behalf of Fatteh Khan, and Fatteh Khan agreed to mortgage 337 kanals and 14 marlas of land to Haidar for that amount. Accordingly on the 27th May 1913, Fatteh Khan appeared before the patwari and made a statement, in which he clearly said (1) that he owed Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta the sum of Rs. 1,000; (2) that Haidar had undertaken to pay this Rs. 1,000 to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta; (3) that Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta had agreed to this arrangement and had released him (Fatteh Khan) from all further liability; (4) that he had accordingly orally mortgaged the said land to Haidar and given him possession of the same and (5) that the said oral mortgage should be entered in the mutation register.

On the 28th May 1913, Fatteh Khan filed an application to the Tahsildar which was to the same effect, and was examined on oath by the Tahsildar when Fatteh Khan repeated his former statement and supported his application. It will thus be seen that on the 27th and 28th May 1913, Fatteh Khan made an unequivocal and clear statement acknowledging that the sum he had owed to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta was Rs. 1,000, that Haidar had undertaken to pay this sum, and that in consideration of that undertaking he had mortgaged the said land to Haidar for Rs. 1,000 and had given him possession.

The Revenue Authorities ultimately held that the whole transaction was a colourable one—that the real mortgagees were Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta who had put forward Haidar as a mere dummy or benamidar, as they being non-agriculturists were prohibited from taking the land on mortgage by the Alienation of Land Act.

Fatteh Khan had in the subsequent proceedings before the Revenue Authorities made the allegations and had said that he had really only owed to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta Rs. 600 and they had promised to advance him another Rs. 400 if he agreed to this transaction. He alleged that this further sum of Rs. 400 had not been paid to him and, therefore, he had exposed the true state of affairs.

Haidar on the 19th March 1914 then filed the present suit asking for possession in the terms of the oral mortgage.

The learned Munsif dismissed the suit on the 16th June 1914, holding that Fatteh Khan's assertions were correct and that Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta were the real mortgagees, Haidar being merely their benamidar. He also held that Fatteh Khan had not settled accounts with Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta at Rs. 1,000. It was, however, held that, as a matter of fact, the land was mortgaged by Fatteh Khan, but that it was invalid as both Fatteh Khan and Haidar had been cheated by Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta. Haidar appealed to the learned District Judge who upheld the decision of the learned Munsif and held, as he had done, that though Fatteh Khan had admitted the mortgage before the Tahsildar, on the 20th January 1914, he had exposed the truth of the transaction. He distinguished Jahan Khan v. Dalla Ram (1) from the present case, in that he considered that as the accounts said to have been settled with Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta, when Rs. 1,000 were found due, were obviously fraudulent, the respondent never could have agreed to mortgage his land for that sum, seeing it was to a very great extent made up of interest. He accordingly held that "it cannot be said that the mortgage is legal and binding or one that could be enforced." He confirmed the lower Court's decree. Haidar has now preferred this appeal against that decision and I have heard Dr. Nand Lal on his behalf and Mr. L. M. Datta for respondent.

What has been held by both the Courts below is that although as a matter of fact Fatteh Khan did mortgage the land, it is bad in law inasmuch as the real mortgagee was not Haidar but Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta were the actual mortgagees and they, being non-agriculturists, could not take a valid mortgage.

Now a Full Bench of this Court has recently decided that once a mortgage has been entered into it cannot lightly be set aside, and has applied the principles enunciated in section 58, Transfer of Property Act, to this Province. In the present case Fatteh Khan has admitted that, as a matter of fact, he did mortgage the land in suit to Haidar. He has no doubt endeavoured to avoid the transaction, on the ground that Haidar was only a benamidar for persons who were themselves debarred from taking the land on mortgage and also on the ground that he had not received the full consideration.

It seems to me, however, that on an examination of these grounds there is really no force in them and that following the Full Bench decision above referred to which is reported as Allah Ditta v. Nazar Din (2), I must hold that the mortgage was actually entered into and that it is valid unless it can be shown that it is barred by the Alienation of Land Act.

Though not precisely the same, the facts of this case are very similar to those in Jahan Khan v. Dalla Ram (1).

In that case it was held that it was not the object of the Alienation of Land Act to prevent a non-agriculturist from recovering money due to him by an agriculturist by any legal means in his power, and that if such a person could induce an agriculturist to pay off a debt due to him and to take a mortgage from his debtor as security for himself, there was nothing in this Act to prohibit such a course.

In the present case this is precisely what has occurred. Haidar has paid Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta the money due by Fatteh Khan and has taken a mortgage from the latter as security for himself.

It is not denied that Haidar has executed a bond for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta and that he is liable thereunder to pay them that sum.

Mr. Datta admitted that Fatteh Khan had been released from all liability to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta who now could not in any circumstances recover any money from him, but must look solely to Haidar. That being the case the debt due by Fatteh Khan, whatever be the sum, is now extinct, and that because Haidar now is liable to pay it.

In these circumstances it seems to me that there has been no contravention of the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act.

The only person who can advance any claim under the mortgage is Haidar, and Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta can in no conceivable circumstances ever obtain possession of this land. If they did attempt to get possession they would be met at once by this Act.

I must, therefore, hold that the mortgage is a valid one so far as this Act is concerned.

Turning now to the question of consideration, it seems to me that we are only concerned with the terms of the mortgage which is under consideration. They are clear and undisputed, the consideration comes, and can come, only from Haidar and the consideration is obviously the extinction of the debt once due by Fattah Khan to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta. It has been admitted that that debt is, as a matter of fact, extinct, therefore, it seems to follow that as far as Haidar, the mortgagee, is concerned there is no failure of consideration.

But it is urged that the sum of Rs. 1,000 is now payable to Haidar under the mortgage whereas the debt due was only Rs. 600. I do not quite see how Haidar is concerned with this question. He was told by the creditors and the debtors that the debt due amounted to Rs. 1,000, that sum he undertook to pay and for that sum he had bound himself to Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta, by the bond he has executed in their favour. He can fairly reply that it has nothing to do with him what the correct amount of the debt may have been. Fattah Khan told him it was Rs. 1,000 and on that assurance he has undertaken liability to that extent. He could scarcely be expected to look minutely into the account and to satisfy himself that the sum of Rs. 1,000 was actually due. Indeed it may be that Fattah Khan is right and that Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta did undertake to make him a further advance of Rs. 400, which they have failed to do. Haidar can still reply that with that he has no concern.

It is also worthy of notice that on the 27th and 28th May 1913, Fattah Khan definitely stated that the debt that Haidar had undertaken to pay amounted to Rs. 1,000. The non-payment to him of Rs. 400 was never hinted till a much later stage of the proceedings, and long after Haidar had executed the bond by which he rendered himself liable to pay the sum of Rs. 1,000. If, as a matter of fact, Fattah Khan's claim is correct and Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta did undertake to lend him the Rs. 400 as he states, he is not wholly without remedy. He can claim that sum from Chet Ram and Sahib Ditta. Without in any way expressing a definite opinion on the point, I do not see why he could have sued these persons for specific performance of their contract to pay him that money, assuming that this remedy was open to him and he could have on proof of his claim either obtained that sum in cash or attached the money due to them by Haidar to that extent.

As it is, on the decision of the Courts below he is not only freed from a debt to the extent of Rs. 600 at least that he admits was due but also escaped the mortgage. In the circumstances I accept this appeal and give Haidar a decree for possession of the land in suit in the terms of the mortgage with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 24th April 1913, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, in a suit by Mohan Lal, Musammat Niadri and many others, a decree was passed against the present plaintiffs (who are minors) on a confession of judgment by the latter's guardian ad litem (their mother

MOHAN LAL v. NEKI.

Musammat Dhapan) and Sita Ram, their mukhtar. The plaintiffs were collaterals of two men Kala and Naurang who, some 20 odd years earlier, had sold certain land to the minors' ancestors and the suit impugned the alienation. Pleas were filed, involving questions of limitation, ancestral nature of the land, consideration and "necessity," locus standi of the collaterals, and acquiescence of them; but none of those questions was decided, for the guardian and mukhtar aforesaid appeared and stated that they had received Rs. 1,340 in cash from the plaintiffs, that being the original sale-price, and had withdrawn their defence, not wishing the minors to be burdened with costs. The Subordinate Judge, without really considering the circumstances of the case, sanctioned the compromise, on the ground, apparently, that the price had been got back and the minors were saved from further risks and demands.

The minors now sue, not for possession of the land, but merely for a declaration that the decree was fraudulent and collusive and was due to gross negligence and want of care on the part of their guardian and mukhtar and that it should not take effect against them. I think they probably should have sued for possession of the land, as they are out of possession, and will still have to sue for possession, but inasmuch as the case has been fought out in two Courts as it stands and no objection as to the frame of the suit has been put in before me, I am not inclined to take this matter up. The first Court did hold that suit for declaration did not lie, and on this and on the merits dismissed the claim; but the lower Appellate Court ignored this point and gave plaintiffs the decree prayed for.

Defendants come here on second appeal, and urge—

1. That the lower Appellate Court had no right to decide as it has done, without taking any evidence, that the previous suit was time-barred and that the plaintiffs in it had no locus standi, there being no issue on these subjects in the present case;

2 That according to Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabul Shah (1), there was no sufficient indication of negligence on the part of the guardian;

3. And that at least the minors should return the price received (Rs. 1,340), Cf. Nur Muhammad v. Ainna (2).

It is also argued that mere negligence is not sufficient, Madhavaya v. Kerala Varma (3), but that ruling is not in point. There the suit had been actively and earnestly prosecuted by the guardian, and a mere mistake had been made. Then in Har Narain v. Musammat Deoki (4) fraud in equity was held not recognisable, and the view was taken that, where the Court, which sanctioned the compromise, had all the facts before it, and proceeded on the same lines as those set forth by the guardian as the excuse for his action, it could not be said that the guardian was negligent. In my opinion, however, the later cases, viz., Ahmad Ali Shah v. Amir Shah (5) and Mohammad v. Sukha Singh (6), are more in point. In the former it is said that gross negligence on the part of a guardian is sufficient to give the minor a cause of action and neglecting to appeal in a hopeful case was considered to be such negligence. In the latter case (Chevis, J.) the facts are almost precisely as in the case now before me.

I am disposed to reject this appeal, so far as concerns the actual decree passed. In my opinion, however, a good many of the findings of the lower Appellate Court are mere obiter dicta and are not based on evidence. I hold that there was prima facie a good case for the minors in 1913 on the score of limitation and the opposite party's locus standi as being 8th degree collaterals. There was also prima facie a good case for the minors on the score of passing of consideration, and existence of necessity. As to these questions all that the lower Appellate Court could properly say, and all that can be said now, is that it was the duty of the guardian to stand by these pleas and on the strength of them to resist the claim; but these questions cannot properly be decided on this record. Had plaintiffs sued for possession, this could have been done, but now these questions will have to be decided when plaintiffs sue for possession. In short, the present decree under appeal merely clears the decree of 1913 out of the way and leaves the parties face to face as if the litigation of 1913 had never taken place.

It follows also that the matter of refund of Rs. 1,340 must be reserved for decision in the further suit.

Appeal dismissed, but without costs.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 24th June 1908, Kima sold some joint land, half of which was his own and the other half that of Shah Nawaz. The latter's land he sold in the capacity of guardian. After Kima's death, Abdul Majid, his minor son, and Shah Nawaz sued for the land sold. The lower Courts have decreed the claim on the ground that necessity and consideration had not been proved. Defendants have filed a second appeal to this Court,

The first ground urged is that there was a misjoinder of plaintiffs. An issue on this point was framed in the first Court, and was decided against the defendants. In appeal to the lower Appellate Court, it was urged that the first Court should have allowed the appellants to produce evidence on this issue. No evidence, however, was necessary on the issue. The objection as to misjoinder was based on the fact that Abdul Majid sued for his share of the land on the ground that there was no necessity for the sale, but that Shah Nawaz sued for his share on the ground that, in accordance with the Muhammadan Law, Kima had no power to sell it and the sale was not effected for his benefit. The question was one of law and it had been decided on the facts as admitted, and it must, therefore, be held that no objection to the first Court's finding on the question of misjoinder was raised in the lower Appellate Court. Even if there was any misjoinder, I should hold, having regard to section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the misjoinder has not affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court and, therefore, the decree should not be set aside on that account.

It is next urged that appellants, relying upon this legal issue, did not exert themselves to produce all their evidence to prove necessity and consideration. This was their own lookout, and they have only themselves to thank if the evidence was not considered sufficient. They definitely closed their case on the 21st December 1914, and, in my opinion, they are entitled to no further opportunity for producing additional evidence. Lala Kishen Chand urges that as regards Shah Nawaz there should have been an issue as to whether the sale was effected for his benefit. The issue was whether the sale was for necessity and consideration and the defendants knew perfectly well what they had to prove. I do not consider that they have been prejudiced by the form of the issue. The finding that necessity and consideration had not been proved is one of fact and cannot be contested on second appeal.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The maxim 'estoppel against estoppel setteth the matter at large' explained. [p. 200, col. 1.]

Plaintiff, acting as guardian of her infant son, agreed with defendant her step-son to partition the family property and an arbitrator was appointed to effect the partition. The plaintiff applied to the arbitrator to allot her a maintenance allowance, which he did in the award. Plaintiff then applied on behalf of her son and of herself to have the award filed in Court. On defendant's objection, however, the award was modified, and plaintiff's maintenance was disallowed as against the defendant. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 9th November 1914.

Babu Har Dayal, for the Appellant.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit, brought by the plaintiff-respondent, for partition of a one-third share out of certain property. The plaintiff is the widow of Bhikhamal, who died in May 1907, leaving by her a son, Harak Chand, who is defendant No. 2. He also left by a predeceased wife another son, Sarup Chand, who is defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 was then a minor and was living with his mother, the plaintiff.

On the 16th December 1912 the plaintiff acting as the guardian of Harak Chand entered into an agreement with Sarup Chand for the partition of the joint family property and appointed Debi Prasad as an arbitrator for the purpose of dividing the same into two equal shares. The agreement recited that Harak Chand and Sarup Chand were entitled to a half share each in the disputed property. During the pendency of the arbitration proceeding, the plaintiff applied to the arbitrator to settle the question of her maintenance. On the 5th May 1913 the arbitrator made an award, dividing the entire moveable property, including the ornaments possessed by the plaintiff and those possessed by the wives of Harak Chand and Sarup Chand, and a portion of the immoveable property possessed by the family, the division of which the parties demanded, into two equal portions, allotting one to Harak Chand and the other to Sarup Chand and he adjusted the difference between the value of the ornaments possessed by the ladies aforesaid by directing the plaintiff to give certain ornaments, which were then valued at Rs. 1,200, to Sarup Chand to equalize his share. In regard to the application made by the plaintiff for her maintenance, his decision was that she should get Rs. 250 per year, out of which Rs. 150 would be payable by Harak Chand and the balance by Sarup Chand. The award states that the parties accepted its terms and signed the same in proof thereof.

On the 11th September 1913 the plaintiff, acting as the next friend of Harak Chand and on her own behalf, made an application to the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, asking that the award should be filed and a decree passed in accordance therewith. Sarup Chand objected to the finding of the award on the ground that the arbitrator was not authorized by the agreement, referring the dispute between him and his brother to arbitration, to award the maintenance to the plaintiff, and that he had ignored a certain debt due to Santok Chand on a bond, dated the 24th

SARUP CHAND v. PANI.

January 1911, executed by Bhikhamal for the payment of which each party was equally liable. The Pleader for the plaintiff and Harak Chand thereupon agreed that that portion of the award which directed the payment of Rs. 100 per mensem to the plaintiff by Sarup Chand as maintenance might be treated as unauthorised and excluded from the decree and that Harak Chand might be declared liable for the amount due to Santok Chand by his father. The learned Subordinate Judge, before whom the above proceeding was pending, passed a decree in accordance with the award with the modification that so far as the award gave Rs. 100 per year as guzara to the plaintiff, it would not form part of the decree and also that Harak Chand would be liable to pay the debt due from his father, Bhikhamal, on the bond aforesaid. On the 12th January 1912 the plaintiff sent a notice to Sarup Chand, asserting her right to a maintenance of Rs. 30 per mensem, half of which was payable by him, and on the failure of the latter to comply with that demand, filed the present suit for a partition of her one-third share.

The defence, so far as it is material for the purpose of this appeal, was that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim any share according to the custom prevailing in Marwar, to which the family of the parties originally belonged, that the parties still preserved the customs and usages of their original home, that the plaintiff was in possession of moveable property, including jewellery and ornaments, the price of which exceeded the value of the share which each son was entitled to get, that she omitted to claim any share in the property in dispute at the time of the arbitration and acquiesced in the partition made by the arbitrator, and that a mere partial division of the joint family property did not give the plaintiff a right to sue.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that no custom of the kind set up by the contesting defendant was established, that the plaintiff was entitled as mother to claim a one-third share in the family property on a partition between the sons, that she was not in possession of any property other than that comprised in the award, and that she was not estopped from claiming her share by reason of the partition made between her son and Sarup Chand, or by her actions in relation thereto.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the defendant, concedes that he is not prepared to sustain the objection that a mother is not entitled to a share on a partition made between her son and step-son.

The rule laid down in the Mitakshara on the authority of Yagnayalkya (Chapter II, verses 116 and 124) is that "if the father makes allotments equal, his wives, to whom no separate property has been given by her husband or her father-in-law, must be rendered partakers of like portions," and "of heirs dividing after the death of the father, she takes an equal share" (Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 2, clauses 8 and 9, and section 7, clause (1). In Damodardas Maneklal v. Uttamram Maneklal (1) and Har Narain v. Bishambhar Nath (2) it has accordingly been held that on a partition between sons and step-sons, a mother is entitled to a share equal to that of her son. It is contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that according to the custom prevailing in the Marwar country, a widow gets no share, if she has sons in existence but gets maintenance from her son and not from her step-son. The evidence produced in support of that custom is, however, of a most flimsy character. One of the witnesses adduced on the point is Meghraj, who gives two instances, one of which happened 50 years ago, in which the mother claimed no share, and the other 40 years ago, in which the mother lived with her own son and similarly did not claim any share for herself. Madho Lal, another witness, who describes himself as 50 years old, refers to the first instance stating that it happened 25 years ago, but does not know of any other. Tejpal, the third witness, gives no instances at all. The instances cited, if true, are not conclusive because it is possible that in those cases the mother may have been otherwise well provided for and may not have considered it necessary to claim any share in the family property. The witnesses, moreover, do not agree as to the times when those instances occurred, and if they were but infants then, they could not have had any personal knowledge as to the circumstances in which the family property was divided. No wajib-ul-arz or other documentary evidence has been filed in support of the alleged custom, and we agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in finding that the defendant-appellant has failed to establish it.

In regard to the argument that the plaintiff is estopped from claiming a share by assenting to the partition made between her son and step-son and asking only for maintenance for herself, it is sufficient to say the defendant-appellant has himself cleared the way for the plaintiff claiming a share in the family property by objecting to the award and getting it modified, so far as it directed the payment of a maintenance of Rs. 100 per year to her out of his share. It was open to the plaintiff at the time of partition to content herself with maintenance or to claim a share equal to that of her son in the family property. She preferred the former course for the time being and moved the arbitrator to allow to her a cash maintenance. But the effect of the objection urged by the defendant-appellant in the proceeding taken by the plaintiff and her son to enforce the award was that the award so far as it directed defendant to pay maintenance was disturbed, and it is not now open to him to say that she had made her election and had become estopped by her previous conduct from claiming a share. As pointed out by Caspersz, an estoppel against an estoppel setteth the matter at large (Caspersz on Estoppel, 4th Edition, section 426); and the effect of the setting aside of the award in regard to maintenance, therefore, would have been, even if there had been an estoppel, to restore the status quo ante and to justify the plaintiff in claiming her share in the family property. It is urged on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the plaintiff is in possession of ornaments worth Rs. 5,000, the value of which should be credited in reducing the share claimed by her in the family property, and reliance is placed in support of that contention on Poorendra Nath Sen v. Hemangini Dassi (3).

As pointed out in Mitakshara (Chapter I, section 7, clause 2, and Chapter II, section 11, clauses 34 and 35), there might be cases where the possession of separate property by the mother might have the effect of reducing pro tanto the share which she may be entitled to on partition. But it is clear from the award and the evidence of the arbitrator that the ornaments held by the plaintiff and by the wives of Harak Chand and Sarup Chand were included in the partition and divided into two equal shares, and the deficiency in the value of those possessed by the wife of Sarup Chand was made good by the transfer of certain specific ornaments valued at Rs. 1,200 from the plaintiff to the defendant-appellant to equalize his share. The ornaments held by the plaintiff thus form a part and parcel of the share of Harak Chand, and they cannot, therefore, be credited in reducing the share to which the plaintiff is entitled. According to the decree (Exhibit 4), the award still holds good so far as it allotted to the plaintiff a maintenance allowance of Rs. 150 per year from her own son, Harak Chand, and she is consequently entitled to claim only a one-sixth share out of the half allotted to Sarup Chand.

In a suit for partition the costs of the suit are generally paid by the parties in proportion to their shares, as the partition is generally for their mutual benefit. The costs incurred by the defendant-appellant should not, however, be charged against the plaintiff, as his defence has been far from straightforward. As the plaintiff has been found entitled to a decree to the extent of a one-sixth share, she will be allowed half of her costs here and below from the defendant-appellant and ought to bear the remainder herself.

The appeal is consequently allowed so far that the decree of the Court below will be confined to the plaintiff's one-sixth share out of the half share allotted to the defendant-appellant under the award. The plaintiff will get half of her costs here and below from the defendant-appellant and bear the remainder of her costs herself.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1241
OF 1914.

May 31, 1915.

RESPONDENT.Landlord and tenant—Tenant holding over without landlord's assent, right of—Ejectment—Notice to quit, necessity of—Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII B. C. of 1869), s. 53.

Under the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act a tenant, who is not a cultivator with a right of occupancy, remaining in possession, without the landlord's assent after the expiration of his lease, does not acquire any interest in the land and is liable to be ejected forthwith in the manner prescribed in section 53 of the Act without any previous notice to quit. [p. 201, col. 2.]

Semble.—The position might be different where the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act apply. [p. 203, col. 1.]

From the mere fact that the landlord tolerates the continuance in occupation of the tenant after the expiry of the term of his lease, the inference does not follow as a matter of course that he accepts his former tenant as his tenant in future. [p. 202, col. 2.]

On the determination of the lease for a term, the lessee is bound to surrender possession to the lessor; on default he may be ejected without notice to quit, unless he has been allowed to hold over with the landlord's assent, either express or implied; but the mere continuance by a tenant of his possession after the expiration of his lease does not give him the status of a tenant. [p. 201, col. 2; p. 202, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in an action in ejectment. On the 18th April 1904, the defendant took a lease of the disputed land from the plaintiff for a term of three years, from the 13th April 1904 to the 12th April 1907. The lease provided explicitly that the tenant would give up possession upon the expiry of the term and that, if he desired to continue as tenant, he would take a fresh lease. The term expired, but the defendant neither took a fresh lease nor made over possession of the land to the plaintiff. The consequence was that on the 8th and 15th October 1910, the plaintiff gave notices to the defendant and asked him to quit the land on the 13th April 1911. This demand was infructuous, and on the 29th June 1911 the plaintiff commenced this action to eject the defendant. The Subordinate Judge has held that the tenancy terminated upon the expiry of the prescribed term of three years and that thereafter, as the landlord did not assent to the continuance of the occupation by the defendant, the latter became a trespasser liable to be ejected without service of notice to quit. On the present appeal, this view has been assailed as erroneous in law.

The disputed land lies in the district of Sylhet, where Act VIII of 1869 B. C. is still in operation. Section 53 lays down that whenever in any suit, brought by any zemindar or other person in receipt of the rent of the land, to eject any cultivator not having a right of occupancy or to eject any farmer or other tenant holding only for a limited period, after the determination of the lease or tenancy, the Court shall pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff, no application in the form provided in section 212 of Act VIII of 1859 shall be necessary, but the Court shall forthwith, upon the plaintiff depositing in Court the necessary expenses, make an order for delivery of possession in execution of the decree. In the present case, the Subordinate Judge has found that the defendant is not a cultivator with a right of occupancy. Consequently, on the determination of his lease, he was liable to be ejected forthwith in execution of a decree in the manner prescribed in section 53. But it has been argued that as he has remained in possession after the expiry of the term of the lease, he has acquired an undefined interest in the land and is entitled to continue in occupation till that interest has been determined by notice to quit. This argument is entirely fallacious.

On the determination of a lease for a term, the lessee is bound to surrender possession to the lessor; on default he may be ejected without notice, for though he entered into the land with right, he has remained without right, as the tenant cannot be said to hold over unless the landlord assents to the continuance of his possession: Durgi Nikarini v. Goberdhan Bose (1). But the appellant has contended that the mere continuance of his possession gives him the status of a tenant, and, in support of this view, has invited our attention to the decision in Huronath Roy v. Smith (2). That case is clearly distinguishable. There, under the terms of the lease, the tenant was entitled to retain possession of a part of the premises, even after the expiry of the term, and was bound to execute a fresh settlement in respect of such portion. The question arose, whether the mere fact that such fresh lease had not been executed, affected the position of the tenant; the answer was adverse to the landlord, for it was found that the tenant had expressed his readiness to accept the lease from the landlord, who had refused to execute the document. There is, on the other hand, a long line of authorities in this Court which negative the contention of the appellant. Reference may be made to the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Ram Khelawan Singh v. Musammatt Soondra (3) where the Chief Justice observed that, according to English Law and according to general principles of justice, if, after the expiration of a lease, a landowner continues to receive rent for a fresh period, he must be deemed to have acquiesced in the tenant's continuing to hold upon the terms of the original lease and cannot turn out the tenant or treat him as a trespasser without giving him reasonable notice to quit. In the earlier decision of Mackintosh v. Gopee Mohan Mozoomdar (4) the proposition was formulated that to justify a holding over after expiry of a lease, a direct consent on the part of the landlord is requisite; and that no implication of consent can or should be received, where there has been every opportunity of consent in express terms. Later decisions, specially those of Sadhoo Jha v. Bhupwan Oopadhya (5), Sofaoll Khan v. Woopean Khan (6), Jumaut Ali Shah v. Chutturdharee Sahee (7) and Ganapathi Mudali v. Venkatalakshminarasayya (8), indicate that this rule was too broadly expressed and that the assent of the landlord to the continuance of the occupation of the tenant after expiry of the term may be indicated by acceptance of rent or by conduct which justifies an inference to that effect. But there is no authority, except possibly a dictum of Patteson, J., in Doe v. Thomas v. Field (9) mentioned in Faby v. O'Donnell (10), which supports the proposition that merely because the landlord tolerates the continuance in occupation of the tenant after the expiry of the term, the inference follows as a matter of course that he accepts his former tenant as his tenant in future. This proposition is, on the other hand, opposed to the decision in Ratan Lal Gir v. Farshi Bibi (11). It is also opposed to the decision of Mansfield, C. J., in Doe v. Godsell v. Inglis (12), where the contention was that, as the tenant had continued in occupation after the expiry of the term, he was entitled to notice to quit, though there was nothing to indicate that his continuance had been accepted by the landlord. Mansfield, C. J., observed: "You do not show that the holding subsequent to the expiration was with the assent of the lessor." Reliance was there, as here, placed upon the fact that the landlord had served a notice to quit; and it was argued that this circumstance afforded an unfailing indication that the defendant was still a tenant, whose tenancy was required to be terminated by a notice to quit. This contention was overruled in the following terms: "This writing is not in the least like a notice to quit; but it is a mere demand of possession, the defendant's term having sometime since expired. The lessor of the plaintiff need not have given any notice at all; but the circumstance of his having given a notice will not hurt him." In our opinion, it is incontrovertible that the defendant in this case ceased to be tenant upon the expiry of his term and is liable to be ejected in the manner prescribed in section 53 of Act VIII of 1869 B. C. The position might have been different if the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act had governed this case; but we need not deal with this aspect of the matter, because that Statute admittedly has no application.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

APPELLANT

versus

Mirza MEHDI HASAN—PLAINTIFF, WAZIR BEGAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS
NOS. 1 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadian Law—Shia School—Inheritance—Widow's right of succession to landed property of her deceased husband—"Landed property," meaning of—Marriage—Muta—Nikah, before expiry of period of muta, validity of—Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 5—Reasonable dower, matters to be considered in determining—Dower, whether can be claimed in suit for share in inheritance.

A childless Shia widow is not entitled to any share in the landed property of her deceased husband. [p. 208, col. 2.]

A right to receive a fixed annual sum of money in the nature of a rent charge is not 'landed property' within the meaning of the above rule, so as to exclude the widow from participation therein. [p. 209, col. 1.]

A grant of muafi land is a grant of the full proprietary interest in the land free of the revenue, and what the grantee takes under the grant is 'landed property' within the meaning of the above rule. [p. 209, col. 2.]

A marriage by nikah with a muta wife during the subsistence of the period of muta, but after the surrender of the unexpired period, is valid. [p. 207, col. 1.]

In considering a claim of dower under section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, the first matter to be regarded is whether the sum actually agreed upon is excessive with reference to the means of the husband. If it is not found to be so, there is no occasion to discuss the status of the wife for the purpose of reducing the amount [p. 207, col. 2.]

In considering whether the amount agreed upon is excessive with reference to the means of the husband in cases where the claim is made by a widow, regard must be had to the value of the husband's estate at the time of his death. The principal matters to be considered in deciding whether a certain sum is excessive or not, are the extent and nature of the claims of the various persons who as heirs are entitled to divide the estate. If it is made to appear that the payment of a certain sum on account of dower would reduce the divisible estate to such an extent as to leave the heirs poorly provided for, such a sum would be considered excessive. [p. 208, col. 1.]

The claim of a widow for dower is, under the Muhammadan Law, a debt chargeable against the general estate of the deceased husband. [p. 205, col. 2.]

It is a clear principle of the Muhammadan Law, applicable alike to Shias and Sunnis, that the estate of a deceased Muhammadan is, before its distribution among the persons entitled as heirs, liable for the debts which were owing by the deceased at the time of his death. Therefore, the widow of a deceased Muhammadan is competent to put forward her claim for dower in a suit brought by one of the heirs of the deceased for a share in the estate, to which she is a party. [p. 205, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 30th April 1914.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Abid Husain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Wazir Hasan and Sheikh Ali Abbas, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—These are the appeals of two defendants who were impleaded in a suit brought for partition in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow by one Nawab Mirza Mehdi Hasan Mirza. The suit was instituted for the purpose of effecting a division of the estate of one Nawab Faghfur Mirza, who died on the 6th of December 1911. The two appellants in these appeals Nawab Baqar Mirza and Nawab Khurshed Mirza were arrayed as defendants Nos. 2 and 3 respectively and it is an admitted fact that they along with the plaintiff are brothers of the deceased Faghfur Mirza. The first defendant in the case was a lady named Nawab Wazir Begam, who, according to the statements contained in the plaint was the widow of the deceased Faghfur Mirza. In setting out the particulars of his claim to a share in the estate of his deceased brother, the plaintiff admitted that Nawab Wazir Begam was entitled to a share of Faghfur Mirza's property in accordance with the Shia Law which governs the relations of the parties. Nawab Baqar Mirza and Khurshed Mirza, the appellants, who are now before us admitted the right of the plaintiff to a share in the inheritance, but they denied that the first defendant Nawab Wazir Begam was a lawful heir of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. They affirmed in paragraph 10 of the common written statement which they filed that the first defendant was in reality a woman named Musammât Waziran, who had been the daughter of a servant once in the employ of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. They alleged that no connection, lawful or unlawful, had ever existed between Wazir Begam and Nawab Faghfur Mirza. In short the case for these defendants-appellants was that Wazir Begam, as she is called in the plaint, was nothing but a domestic servant. We may notice here that there was a fourth defendant in the case one Lala Brijbhukhan Das, who was impleaded on the ground that certain items of moveable property left by the deceased Faghfur Mirza had been pledged with him with the consent of the other parties to secure loans amounting in all to Rs. 4,500. The case which the first defendant Wazir Begam put forward was that she was the lawfully wedded wife of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. In the 10th paragraph of her written statement she asserted that she had come into the household of Nawab Faghfur Mirza at Lucknow some 24 or 25 years before the suit was instituted, being at that time of the age of 5 or 6 years. Her story was that she had been brought to Lucknow by her mother, who had been sent from Calcutta for the purpose of offering condolence to Nawab Faghfur Mirza on the occasion of the death of his first wife Sughra Begam. In paragraph 11 of her written statement she set out that after having resided for some time in Nawab Faghfur Mirza's house she was contracted in marriage to him in the muta form for a period of four years. In the twelfth paragraph it was stated that in the month of October 1900 Nawab Faghfur Mirza entered into a nikah contract of marriage with her and that her dower was fixed at a sum of Rs. 50,000. She alleged in this paragraph of the written statement that after this marriage was celebrated, she was acknowledged by the relatives of Nawab Faghfur Mirza as the latter's lawfully wedded wife. On the basis of these allegations Nawab Wazir Begam claimed not only to be an heir of Nawab Faghfur Mirza and entitled to her share of the estate under the Shia law, but she also claimed that before any division of the estate could be made she was entitled to receive out of it the sum of Rs. 50,000 which had been fixed as her dower at the time of the marriage contract in October 1900. There were other pleas taken which it is not necessary for us to refer to here. On the strength of these written pleadings filed by parties and of the further statements which were made to the Court eleven issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge. He came to a finding upon each of these issues and the result was that the plaintiff's claim was decreed in accordance with certain findings of the Subordinate Judge, one of which was to the effect that Nawab Wazir Begam was the lawfully wedded wife of Nawab Faghfur Mirza and was entitled to a share in certain items of his estate. The Subordinate Judge also found that Nawab Wazir Begam was entitled to a sum of Rs. 50,000 dower and directed that this money should be paid out of the estate before distribution to the parties who are entitled as heirs. The defendants Baqar Mirza and Khurshed Mirza have now filed separate appeals against the decree of the Court below. Both appeals have been heard together and as they both proceed on common grounds, one judgment will suffice for the purpose of disposing of them. Leaving out of consideration one or two grounds set out in the memoranda of appeal which were not pressed by the learned Counsel for the appellants, we find that six points are raised for decision. The first point taken is that Nawab Wazir Begam ought to have been driven to a separate suit for the purpose of establishing her status as an heir of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. It is pleaded that as she was not in possession of the property in dispute, she should not have been allowed to urge a claim in a suit of this nature. The next point taken is that it was not open to Nawab Wazir Begam to put forward any claim for dower in a suit brought by one of the heirs of Nawab Faghfur Mirza for division of the estate. The third question for decision is whether or not it is proved that Nawab Wazir Begam was duly married to Nawab Faghfur Mirza, the case for the appellants is that this marriage was not proved. The fourth point for decision relates to the amount of dower. The case for the appellants in this connection is that even if the factum of marriage be admitted and it be found that Musammât Wazir Begam is entitled to claim her dower in the present suit, the sum of Rs. 50,000 which she has claimed, and which the Subordinate Judge has allowed, was excessive and ought to be reduced. The fifth point relates to the question of Nawab Wazir Begam's title to a share in certain landed properties known as the jaqir properties. Her claim with respect to these items of property was admitted by the Court below. The case for the appellants is that Nawab Wazir Begam is not entitled to any share in these particular items. Lastly, there is a question relating to the order of the Court below in the matter of costs.

We proceed to deal with each of these points in the order just mentioned; and first of all we have to consider the plea taken to the effect that Nawab Wazir Begam ought not to have been allowed to set up her rights in the present suit. According to the plea taken in the first ground of the memorandum of appeal presented by the appellant Nawab Baqar Mirza, it would seem that the case for the appellant is that because they admitted the claim of the plaintiff Nawab Mirza Mehdi Hasan Mirza, the Subordinate Judge ought to have refused to adjudicate upon the question of Nawab Wazir Begam's right to have a share in this estate and ought to have referred her to a separate suit. We may dispose of this point very shortly. We think there is no force whatever in this ground of appeal. We start with the fact that the plaintiff, who is undoubtedly entitled to a share in the estate of his deceased brother, has admitted the right of Nawab Wazir Begam to a share, she being a widow of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. It is quite obvious that no proper decision regarding the extent of the shares of the various persons entitled to divide the estate between them could have been arrived at by the Subordinate Judge without his coming to a finding on the issue as to whether or not Nawab Wazir Begam was one of Nawab Faghfur Mirza's heirs, and this being the case it appears to us to be futile to put forward a contention that the claim of Nawab Wazir Begam could not be considered in the present suit. On the contrary we are of opinion that the Court acted very properly in dealing with this issue in order to come to a decision as to the rights and liabilities of all the parties interested.

The second question for determination is whether or not Nawab Wazir Begam should have been allowed to put forward her claim for dower in these proceedings. Here again we think we may dispose of this part of the appeal in a very few words.

We take it to be a clear principle of the Muhammadan law, applicable alike to Shias and Sunnis, that the estate of a deceased Muhammadan is, before its distribution among the persons who are entitled as heirs, liable for the debts which were owing by the deceased at the time of his death. It is also an accepted principle of the Muhammadan Law that the claim of the wife for dower is a debt which is chargeable against the general estate of the deceased husband where the claim is made after his death. We fail to see, therefore, on what ground it can reasonably be contended that if it be proved that Nawab Wazir Begam was the wife and, therefore, an heir of Nawab Faghfur Mirza and as such entitled not only to share in some portions of his estate but also to dower, she was not competent to put forward her claim in the present suit to which she, as an heir, was a necessary party. On the contrary, we think that this was the proper occasion upon which a claim of this sort could be put forward and entertained so as, for the benefit of all the parties entitled to share in the estate, to put an end to all further litigation. Various authorities have been cited to us upon this matter by the learned Counsel on either side, but the principle appears to us to be so clear as to render it unnecessary for us to discuss any of the cases which have been put forward for our consideration. We are satisfied that so far as this ground of appeal is concerned neither of the appellants has any case.

We come now to the most important of all the questions which are raised for decision here, and that is the question of Nawab Wazir Begam's marriage with the deceased Faghfur Mirza. We have already referred to the case which the lady herself set up in her written statement and we have adverted to the fact that the plaintiff had in his plaint admitted her right to a share in the inheritance as the widow of Nawab Faghfur Mirza. We have also referred to the pleas taken by the second and third defendants, in which they denied this lady's status as a wife and pleaded that she was nothing more than a menial servant in Nawab Faghfur Mirza's household. On the 2nd of April 1913, the date upon which the issues were framed, a nikahnama (Exhibit A-I) was put in on behalf of Nawab Wazir Begam.

According to this document the marriage between Wazir Begam and Nawab Faghfur Mirza was celebrated on the 16th Jamadi-us-sani 1318 H., corresponding to the 12th October 1900. In the body of this document it is stated that the marriage was solemnized with the assistance of two persons named Molvi Saiyed Husain Saheb alias Allan Saheb, a mujtahid, and his son one Saiyed Mohammad alias Agha Saheb. The latter is said to have acted as wakil on behalf of Nawab Faghfur Mirza whilst Allan Saheb, the mujtahid, is said to have performed this office on behalf of the lady who is described in the document as "Nawab Wazir Begam Saheba, the daughter of Mirza Abdullah." The document further recites that the dower had been fixed at a sum of Rs. 50,000. On one margin of the deed there are three impressions of the seal of Nawab Faghfur Mirza, over which is a signature alleged to be the signature of Faghfur Mirza himself. Another seal affixed on the margin of the deed purports to be that of Nawab Mirza Mohammad Mirza Bahadur, whose signature is also attached to the document. The third seal is that of Nawab Khurshed Mirza, the third defendant in the case. His signature, too, is also to be found on the deed. The fourth seal and signature on the document is that of Mirza Mehdi Hasan Mirza, the plaintiff in the present case, and after this we find the signature (without a seal) of Saiyed Abujafar, an important witness in the case. At the head of the document on one side of it there is what purports to be the signature of Saiyed Mohammad alias Saiyed Agha, the son of the mujtahid, whilst on the opposite side we have what purports to be the signature of the mujtahid himself, beneath which there is attached the impression of a seal said to have been the seal of Allan Saheb. This is the principal piece of direct documentary evidence put forward for the purpose of establishing the fact that a nikah was celebrated between Nawab Wazir Begam and Nawab Faghfur Mirza. The plaintiff Nawab Mirza Mehdi Hasan Mirza admitted the genuineness of this document and supported the case which was put forward upon the strength of it. He admitted that his signature was attached to the margin of the deed and that the deed also bore the impression of his seal. Similar evidence was given by the witness Mohammad Mirza and Abujafar, also a witness in the case, has sworn to his signature on the document. On the other hand Nawab Khurshed Mirza, the third defendant, has denied the genuineness of the attestation which purports to have been made by him. Allan Saheb the mujtahid and his son Saiyed Agha are both dead and so, of course, is Nawab Faghfur Mirza, the principal signatory of the deed. The case of Nawab Wazir Begam was sought to be proved in the Court below both by oral and documentary evidence and we think we may profitably refer in the first instance to the direct oral testimony adduced by her for the purpose of proving the marriage.

[The learned Judicial Commissioners, after discussing the evidence, oral and documentary, produced by both the parties in support of this issue, proceeded as follows:—]

The evidence, oral, documentary and circumstantial, is overwhelmingly in favour of the case set up by Wazir Begam and we hold her, therefore, to be the widow of Faghfur Mirza and entitled to her lawful share of the estate.

Before parting with this question we may notice briefly two points which were raised in argument by the learned Counsel for the appellants, points which do not appear to have been argued in the Court below. It was contended that the nikah said to have been entered into in 1900 could not be a valid union, by reason of the fact that a portion of the period of the earlier muta marriage was still unexpired at the time the nikah ceremony was celebrated. We have it, however, from Abujafar, whose evidence we are prepared to accept, that Faghfur Mirza surrendered the rest of the muta period before the second marriage took place and we regard this as disposing of this criticism of the validity of the nikah.

Another point made was with respect to the age of Saiyid Agha, the son of the mujtahid at the time of this marriage. The evidence is that he acted as vakil on behalf of Faghfur Mirza, and certain evidence, particularly that of Zafar Mehdi, has been referred to for the purpose of showing that Saiyid Agha could not have been more than 7 or 8 years of age in October 1900 and, therefore, incapable in law of representing his principal. We have expressed our opinion of the value of Zafar Mehdi's evidence elsewhere and are not prepared to accept his estimate of his brother's age—a vague estimate as it is. We prefer to rely upon the evidence of another relative, Sakhawat Husain, according to whom Saiyid Agha must have been 17 or 18 years of age at the time the marriage took place. If this be so, Saiyid Agha was of full age according to Muhammadan Law which recognises the age of puberty (15 years) as the age of majority.

It having now been found that Nawab Wazir Begam was the duly married wife of Faghfur Mirza and that there is no legal obstacle to her setting up her claim to dower in the present suit, we have next to consider the amount which should be allowed to her on this account. She claims a sum of Rs. 50,000, which she says was the sum agreed upon at the time the nikah ceremony was performed, and the lower Court has held her to be entitled to the whole of this sum.

The case for the appellants is that this sum is excessive and it may be noted here that the plaintiff also, while admitting the claim of Wazir Begam to dower, contended that the amount claimed by her is unreasonably high. The argument is that the social status of Wazir Begam having been of low degree the claim is extravagant.

The law on the subject is to be found in section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, which lays down that where the amount of dower stipulated for is excessive with reference to the means of the husband, the entire sum shall not be allowed but only such a sum as the Court may consider reasonable, regard being had to the means of the husband and the status of the wife. The first matter to be considered, therefore, is whether the sum agreed upon is excessive with reference to the means of the husband. If it is not found to be so, it is unnecessary to go any further and there is no occasion to discuss the status of the wife for the purpose of reducing the amount.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the amount claimed was agreed upon at the time of the marriage and that it cannot be deemed excessive in view of the fact that the value of the estate left by Faghfur Mirza is admittedly Rs. 2,86,000.

We are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court on this issue should be maintained.

First with reference to the allegation of Wazir Begam that her husband agreed to pay her Rs. 50,000 for the dower, although for reasons already given we have not been able to hold that the nikahnama (Exhibit A-1) is satisfactorily proved, we are satisfied that Wazir Begam's statement is true. It is supported by the evidence of the confidential servant Abujafar, whose testimony in this connection we are prepared to accept. We have already mentioned that there is every reason to suppose that Faghfur Mirza was bent upon contracting this nikah marriage with Wazir Begam and, we think, there can be no doubt that it was his devotion to this woman which drove him to divorce Malka Begam in spite of the fact that she was a lady of wealth and of high rank. And we think there can also be no doubt that Wazir Begam had a very strong influence over her husband. It is by no means improbable, therefore, that she succeeded in obtaining from him a promise to pay her a large sum for dower—a sum which a person in her station of life might not ordinarily expect to obtain. Abujafar deposes that Wazir Begam was demanding a lakh of rupees for her dower and that Faghfur Mirza would, on account of his infatuation for her, have agreed to pay this sum had it not been for his (Abujafar's) persuasion. Abujafar himself thought that ten or fifteen thousand rupees would have been a handsome provision, but it seems that the lady took full advantage of her influence over Faghfur Mirza and held out for a great deal more, and ultimately there was a compromise for Rs. 50,000. We may add, Abujafar's testimony as to the amount fixed is corroborated by the statements of the other witnesses who were present at the marriage including the plaintiff, who admitted frankly in the witness-box that the sum agreed upon was Rs. 50,000. This is a weighty piece of evidence in favour of the lady's claim.

The question then remains whether this amount is excessive with reference to "the means of the husband"—this latter expression signifying, according to the rulings of this Court, the value of the husband's estate at the time of his death in cases where the claim is made by a widow. We have been referred to a number of decisions given in cases of claims for dower for the purpose of showing on the one hand that the demand in the present case is excessive and on the other hand that it is reasonable: but it is apparent that no hard and fast rule can be formulated so as to enable us to say that any sum in excess of a fixed proportion of the value of the assets is unreasonable. Each case must be decided upon its own merits: and we think the principal matters to be considered are the extent and nature of the claims of the various persons who as heirs are entitled to divide the estate. If it were made to appear that the payment of a certain sum on account of dower would reduce the divisible estate to such an extent as to leave the heirs poorly provided for, it might reasonably be held that such a sum was excessive.

What do we find in the present case? Faghfur Mirza has left no children whose claims have to be considered. The only heirs besides the widow are his three brothers, whose claims need not be treated too tenderly in view of the fact, established by evidence on the record, that they lived upon Faghfur Mirza for most of the time he was alive. It is admitted that both the plaintiff and Khurshed Mirza had become impoverished through extravagant living. Baqar Mirza also admits that he managed to get rid of most of the property he inherited and though he does not seem to have been so dependent upon Faghfur Mirza as his other brothers, he acknowledges that he was not too proud to accept a small monthly allowance from him. In these circumstances we are satisfied that the three brothers can have no legitimate complaint if the dower-debt, which comes to a little more than one-sixth of the value of the whole estate, is paid in full to Wazir Begam.

The next matter for disposal is the question of the right of the widow to take a share in certain immoveable property left by Faghfur Mirza, which the Subordinate Judge has described by the name of "jagir property." We may take it as settled law that a childless Shia widow is not entitled to any share in the landed property (arz) of her deceased husband. The parties are agreed that we have to deal in this connection with only four items of property which are described in Exhibit A-14, the copy of the statement which the deceased Nawab furnished to the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow in January 1911. One of these items, called Patti Sairpur, is admittedly ordinary zemin-dari property and it is conceded that the widow is not entitled under the Shia Law to any portion of this. The other three items consist of shares in three villages Baraun Khurd, Pirnagar and Barai Ramna. It is these items to which the collective expression "jagir property" has been applied by the Subordinate Judge: but it is admitted that the rights in these three villages are not identical in nature.

Baraun Khurd and Pirnagar are held in what is called muafi tenure, that is to say, these properties were granted free of liability to pay Government revenue. The co-sharers are the proprietors of the soil. In the case of Barai Ramna the situation is different. This village is settled with third parties, but the revenue which would ordinarily be payable to the Government has been assigned for the benefit of others—and the deceased Nawab was in virtue of this assignment entitled to receive from the proprietors of Barai Ramna a certain share of the land revenue, 9 annas odd out of 16 annas. So far as this last property is concerned, we are satisfied that it cannot be described as landed property once owned by Faghfur Mirza. The property consists in the right to receive a fixed annual sum of money in the nature of a rent-charge: and the widow is not excluded by the rule of Shia Law from participation in property of this description. We think the Court below was right in allowing Wazir Begam her due share of this item. But we are unable to accept its decision with regard to the widow's rights in the shares held in Baraun Khurd and Pirnagar, which were surely nothing else than the landed property of Faghfur Mirza. The view taken by the Subordinate Judge, which we have been asked to endorse in appeal, is that the property in these two villages is made up of two constituent elements, namely, (1) proprietary rights in the soil granted in the ordinary way with a condition that a portion of the income should be paid to Government in the shape of land revenue, and (2) a right to appropriate this portion of the income to which the Government has waived its claim. The widow, it is said, has no share in the first of these elements; but it is contended she can claim a share of the second, which represents in a way a money income which has been granted by Government. We are unable to accept this view, based as it is upon a fiction that there has been a grant of an annual income equal to amount of the land revenue ordinarily assessable. It is true, of course, that for certain fiscal purposes connected with the payment of rates and cesses there has been an assessment of these villages to land revenue, but the fact remains that the grantees hold the land free from the obligation to pay revenue, which under the law constitutes the first charge on the soil. It is open to the Government to dispose of the land in whatever way it chooses: ordinarily the grant of the proprietary right is made subject to the charge for land revenue: but if the grant is made free of the charge, we take it that what is granted is the full proprietary interest in the land and what the grantees takes in such circumstances is clearly landed property.

We hold, therefore, that Wazir Begam is not entitled to any share of inheritance in either of these muafi villages, Baraun Khurd and Pirnagar.

There now remains for disposal a question relating to the manner in which costs were awarded by the Court below. The Subordinate Judge has directed that the plaintiff's costs be paid to him out of the estate, the costs of the first defendant Wazir Begam being charged to the second and third defendants. In the memorandum of appeal filed by the second defendant Baqar Mirza, the plea is taken that the plaintiff should have been made to bear his own costs. We think not. It was the contumacy of the second and third defendants which made it necessary for the plaintiff to bring this suit, and we are of opinion that in the circumstances the lower Court's order as to costs is a proper one with which we should not interfere, except in one respect to be presently noticed.

In conclusion we have a few observations to make with regard to the manner in which the proceedings on Commission in the lower Court were conducted by the Pleaders engaged for the parties. In cases like the present which occur not infrequently in the city of Lucknow, it is necessary to have on record the evidence of pardanashin ladies who cannot be asked to attend personally in Court. Consequently recourse has to be had to the procedure sanctioned by Order XXVI of the Code of Civil Procedure and directions have to issue for taking of the evidence of these ladies by a Commissioner appointed for the purpose. Judging from our experience of other cases which have been before us and from what has happened in the present case, it would seem that certain members of the legal profession entertain some curious notions regarding their duties in the matter of examination and cross-examination of witnesses. We regret to have to observe that we have found here as in other instances the unedifying spectacle of female witnesses being badgered and harassed in the witness-box with questions not merely irrelevant and futile but in some cases all but indecent. The proceedings on Commission have been protracted from day to day in the interests of the Pleaders engaged and without the slightest regard for the convenience of the witnesses—the result being not merely delay and expense to the parties but acute discomfort and annoyance to witnesses who are specially entitled to protection against such treatment.

We have on more than one occasion condemned in strong language the behaviour of members of the legal profession who seem to be lost to all sense of what is due from them in the matter of professional behaviour and as previous warnings appear to have been disregarded, it is necessary for us to say here that any future instances of departure from the rules of professional decorum will be dealt with rigorously under the powers conferred by the Legal Practitioners Act. We may refer here to some observations of the Privy Council in their judgment recently delivered in the appeals of Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (1), in which their Lordships animadvert upon the impropriety of the questions which were put in cross-examination and the gross delay and inconvenience caused by the intervals between one period and another of cross-examination. Meantime we are of opinion that the presiding officers of subordinate Courts should as far as possible endeavour to arrange to take the evidence of such witnesses themselves instead of entrusting the duty to a Pleader who can exercise practically no control over the proceedings. And further with a view to putting an end to the scandalous annoyance and delay caused by futile and perverse cross-examination, we think that the Courts would be well advised when taxing costs between the parties to refuse any costs in respect of the fees paid to Counsel who offend in this respect.

In the present case we propose to mark our sense of the impropriety of the behaviour of the Counsel of all parties in the lower Court by striking out from the schedule of costs all the items relating to Pleaders' fees.

The result is that the appeals before us succeed to the extent that the decree of the Court below is modified by declaring that Nawab Wazir Begam is not entitled as heir to any share in the properties in Baraun Khurd and Pirnager, and by further striking out of the schedule of costs the items relating to Pleaders' fees. In other respects the appeals fail and are dismissed. We direct the appellants to pay the separate costs of this Court of the defendant-respondent Wazir Begam and the plaintiff-respondent Mirza Mehdi Hasan Mirza.

We think it proper also to add the following directions to be carried out by the Court below in distributing the estate and preparing the final decree. The debts will be paid first, namely, the sum due to Nawab Wazir Begam for her dower and the debt owing to Lala Brijbukhan Das, the fourth defendant, with whom, admittedly, the heirs of Faghfur Mirza have pawned certain of the moveable property belonging to the estate.

The sum due to the plaintiff in respect of costs in the Court below (as amended by this Court's decree) will then be deducted and the balance of the estate will then be distributed, subject in the case of the defendants Khurshed Mirza and Baqar Mirza to deduction in equal proportions from their shares, when ascertained, of the amounts due by them to Wazir Begam on account of costs in the Court below as modified by this Court's decree, and of the amounts which they are liable to pay to Wazir Begam and the plaintiff respectively on account of the costs of this Court.

Appeals accepted in part; Decree modified.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12—Appeal, delay in presenting—Sufficient cause—Stamp not procurable—Copies, time spent in obtaining, exclusion of.

Appellant applied for copies of the judgment appealed against on 12th June, and on the same day filed some folios and stamps. On the 13th he was informed that some more folios would be required which were supplied on the 15th. Copies were delivered on the 18th. On the last day of limitation stamps were not procurable and the next day being a holiday the appeal was presented on the next following day on which the Court was open:

Held, (1) that the appellant was entitled to the exclusion of the whole of the time from 12th to 18th June from the computation of the period of limitation under section 12 of the Limitation Act, and

(2) that the delay caused by appellant's inability to get stamps on the last day of limitation should be excused under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Saran, dated the 17th July 1914, rejecting an appeal from a decision of the Munsif, Chapra, dated the 30th May 1914.

Mr. Krishna Sahai (for Mr. Probash Chandra Mitter with him Mr. Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh for Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick), for the Appellant.

Mr. Gursaran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The decree was signed on the 6th of June 1914; application for copy was made on the 12th of June 1914 and on that day some folios and stamps were filed. On the 13th of June 1914, information was given to the appellant before the District Judge that more folios were required. On the 15th of June the balance of the folios was supplied. The copies were delivered on the 18th of June; the appeal was filed on the 15th of July. There having been no unreasonable delay on the part of the appellant to supply folios and to follow up his application for copy of the 12th of June, I think the appellant was entitled to the whole of the time from the 12th of June 1914 to the 18th of June 1914. The appeal would, therefore, have been in time if filed on the 13th of July. Now the appellant filed an affidavit before the District Judge stating that he could not get a stamp on the 13th of July; the 14th of July was a holiday and the appeal was filed on the 15th of July. The appeal was, in my opinion, in time. It would seem that the learned Judge is in error in holding that the appeal would have been barred if presented on the 13th of July and I invite his attention to Dulali Bewa v. Saroda Kinkar Paulit (1). The learned District Judge does not say that the affidavit is false and if the affidavit is correct, then the delay of two days from the 13th of July to the 15th of July ought to have been excused under section 5 of the Limitation Act. The appeal is decreed with costs and the District Judge is directed to hear the appeal.

Appeal decreed; Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r. 89, object of—Auction-sale, application to set aside, by judgment-debtor after transferring property, if maintainable—Transferee of property, right of, to apply to set aside sale

A judgment-debtor who has transferred his interest in the property to a third person after the Court-sale has still a right to make an application to have the sale set aside under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1903, being in the eye of the law the person owning the property. PANDURANG LAXMAN UPHADE v. GOVINDA DADA UPHADE.

The object of rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not merely or not specifically to preserve the immoveable property in the hands of the judgment-debtor, but to ensure, so far as may be possible, that immoveable property shall not at Court-sales be sold at inadequate prices. [p. 213, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Batchelor, J.—The change brought about by rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, may be understood as embodying the desire of the Legislature to make it clear that a purchaser acquiring title before the auction-sale is competent to apply under this provision of the law. JUDGMENT.

[BATCHELOR, J.—The question raised in this application is one of some difficulty and arises under Order XXI, rule 89, of the present Code. The circumstances under which it arises are these:—In execution of a decree the judgment-debtor's property was sold by auction and was purchased by the present applicant for a sum of Rs. 166. Thereafter, and before the auction-sale was confirmed, the judgment-debtor for a sum of Rs. 500 privately sold the property to one Gangaram, a stranger. Then within thirty days of the auction-sale the judgment-debtor applied under Order XXI, rule 89, to set aside the sale. The Trial Court dismissed his application, but the District Court has allowed it, and from the District Court's order this application is brought by the auction-purchaser.

The question is, whether it is open to the judgment-debtor to make this application under Order XXI, rule 89, after he has by private sale transferred or attempted to transfer the property to a third party, such private sale being made after the sale by auction. Under Order XXI, rule 89, an application such as this can be made by any person either owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before the Court sale. It is not pretended that the judgment-debtor can come in as a person holding an interest acquired before the Court sale, but it is claimed that he can apply as being in the eye of the law the person owning this property. Now the words which I have quoted from rule 89 differ from the words in which in the Code of 1882 the corresponding enactment was phrased. For there under section 310A of the Act, a section which was introduced by the Amending Act (V of 1894), such an application as this could be made by "any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter." No doubt at first sight it would appear that the generality of the words of section 310A has been cut down and restricted by the phraseology of the present rule 89. But it appears to me that the alteration of language effected by the present rule is sufficiently explained by reference to the conflict which there previously was as to the position of a purchaser acquiring title before the auction-sale. In Srinivasa Ayyangar v. Ayyathorai Pillai (1), for instance, it was held that such a purchaser could apply, whereas the contrary view was adopted in Ramchandra Dhondo v. Rakhmabai (2). I think, therefore, that the change brought about by rule 89 may be understood as embodying the desire of the Legislature to make it clear that a purchaser acquiring title before the auction-sale was competent to apply under this provision of the law.

So far, therefore, there would appear to be no reason for doubting the correctness of the District Judge's view. But the applicant has relied upon the decisions in Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (3) and Adapa Subbarayadu v. Tippabhotlallakshminarasamma (4), which are undoubtedly in favour of that construction of rule 89 for which he contends. I need not discuss the Madras decision in detail, because the stronger case in the applicant's favour is admittedly the Allahabad ruling. It is enough to say, with respect, that I am not able to adopt the view that it is open to the subsequent purchaser to apply under this rule, for, as it seems to me, he is excluded by the terms of the rule. The decision in the Allahabad High Court followed upon the argument that rule 89 gave judgment-debtors a last chance of saving the property for themselves and that it was no part of the Legislature's intention that the property should be saved for persons to whom it might be privately sold after the auction-sale had taken place. While fully conscious of the weight due to this argument both on its own merits and by reason of its acceptance by the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court, I cannot but think with very sincere respect that there is another aspect of the question which also must be regarded. For, as I understand these provisions of the law, their object is not merely or not specifically to preserve the immoveable property in the hands of the judgment-debtor, but to ensure, so far as may be possible, that immoveable properties shall not at Court-sales be sold at inadequate prices. If that is an important consideration, then it follows that in such a case as this it is no answer to the judgment-debtor to say that even if his application be granted, the immoveable property will still be lost to him. The reply would be that the loss of the immoveable property is now inevitable, but that the Court will be realizing the intentions of the Legislature if it construes these provisions so as to ensure that the monetary loss falling upon the judgment-debtor be as little as possible. For myself I can see no serious difficulty in holding that for the purposes of the rule the judgment-debtor in the position of the present applicant is still the owner of property in the eye of the law, the auction-sale being still unconfirmed. That position must, I think, be held either by him or by the subsequent vendee, and in my view it clearly does not belong to the subsequent vendee, because he has not acquired any title nor can he acquire any title until the auction-sale has been set aside. The case does not, I think, essentially differ from the case where there is nothing between the judgment-debtor and the third party, except an agreement that the third party will purchase at a higher value if the judgment-debtor can succeed in getting the auction-sale set aside, and in that case it appears to me clear that the judgment-debtor would be entitled to come in under rule 19. I do not think that he is in any materially worse position because there has passed between him and the stranger a conveyance which confessedly is not and cannot be operative, inasmuch as the auction-sale is still subsisting.

On these grounds I am of opinion that the view taken by the District Court is right, and I would discharge the Rule with costs.

SHAH, J.—After hearing the arguments again in this case, I am of opinion that the judgment-debtor has a right to apply to have the sale set aside as a person owning the property sold in execution of the decree within the meaning of rule 89, Order XXI, in spite of the fact that he has transferred his interest in the property after the Court-sale. The transfer by him after the auction-sale is, in my opinion, inoperative so long as the sale subsists, and it could take effect only if the sale is set aside on an application under rule 89.

Having regard to the object and scope of this rule, it seems to me that the judgment-debtor must be deemed to own the property for the purposes of the rule. There is no reason to suppose that the object of the rule is to save the immoveable property only for the benefit of the judgment-debtor. But it seems to me that it is within the scope of the rule to enable the judgment-debtor, if possible, to prevent the sale of his property by the Court for an inadequate price. One of the ways in which the judgment-debtor could secure this result would be that he might procure a purchaser for a higher price and thereby enable himself to deposit the necessary amount as required by the rule. He might either agree to sell or sell the property to a third person subject, of course, to the condition that the Court-sale is set aside. This very case affords an apt illustration of the manner in which the judgment-debtor may be able to take advantage of this rule. The property in question is sold to the auction-purchaser for Rs. 166, whereas the judgment-debtor would be able to realize Rs. 500 for the same property by a private sale. Even though the judgment-debtor would not be able to retain the immoveable property if the sale were set aside, it is clear that the setting aside of the sale would be highly beneficial to him under such circumstances. It cannot and ought not to make any difference in the result whether he merely agrees to sell or actually sells the property subject to the auction-sale being set aside.

I do not see any reason to hold that the rule refers to the ownership or interest as existing at the date of the application. It seems to me that a person owning the property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before the sale is within the rule, provided he owns it or holds an interest therein at the date of the sale by the Court. The words "at the date of the application" are not to be found in the rule, and I do not see any good reason to read the rule as if the words were inserted therein.

Apart from the decided cases there is no difficulty in accepting the view which has found favour with the lower Appellate Court in this case. The learned Pleader for the applicant here has, however, relied upon Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (3) and Adapa Subbarayadu v. Tippabhotlakshminarasamma (4), which undoubtedly support his contention that the judgment-debtor who has transferred his interest in the property to a third person after the Court-sale has no right to make an application to have the sale set aside under rule 89. I have carefully considered these decisions. I regret that I am unable to follow them. These two decisions do not seem to me to be quite consistent with each other; and both of them appear to me to be based either upon too restricted a view as to the object and scope of the rule or upon an interpretation involving the reading of certain words in the rule which do not occur therein.

I, therefore, agree that the Rule should be discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 42—Assets, absence of, whether ground for annulling or refusing adjudication.

Absence of available assets is no ground either for refusing an order for adjudication of an insolvent or for annulling an adjudication once made.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 5th June 1915, annulling the order of adjudication.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.

Lala Kishan Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Lyallpur annulling an adjudication of an insolvent under section 41 of Act III of 1907 on the ground that he has no assets. I can find no authority in support of such an order.

The District Judge himself previously held that the absence of available assets was not a sufficient ground for refusing an order of adjudication, and his present order is inconsistent therewith.

What was not a sufficient ground for refusing adjudication is not one for annulment of an adjudication once made. I, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the order of annulment.

No order as to costs. The order staying execution is confirmed.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the father, who has never had the care or custody of his infant child, can successfully call upon the Court by an application under the Guardians and Wards Act for an order upon the person in whose custody the infant is to hand him over. The learned Joint Judge holds that the father has two courses only open to him, viz., to file a regular suit for the custody of his boy, or apply to the High Court for an order in the nature of habeas corpus under section 491 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In regard to the Criminal Procedure Code, section 491, the learned Judge is in error, for such an application could only be made in a case falling within the limits of the ordinary civil jurisdiction of the High Court, whereas this is an Ahmedabad case. That a suit can be filed for the custody of the boy may be conceded on the authority of two decisions in this Court, one being Sharifa v. Mune Khan (1) and the other being referred to in the report in that case. We are not prepared to hold that the dictum of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) to the effect that a suit inter partes is not the proper proceeding, was intended to be of such general application as virtually to overrule the decision of this Court in Sharifa v. Mune Khan (1).

The only question remaining then is whether the learned Judge was right in refusing to make an order on the application under the Guardians and Wards Act. It may be taken on the authority of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) that the jurisdiction of the District Court is defined by the Guardians and Wards Act, and that it has no inherent powers to make orders with reference to minors which are not expressly conferred upon it by that Act. The chapter of the Act relating to the appointment and declaration of Guardians is Chapter II. Section 12 provides for the summoning before the Court of the minor for whom an application has been made for the appointment of a guardian, and for the interim custody of the minor pending the hearing of the application under section 13. Then section 17 lays down matters to be considered by the Court in appointing a guardian and clause 4 of that section lays down the respective rights of parents claiming guardianship where those parents are European British subjects. In such cases the Court will appoint one or other of them a guardian, and the minor will then be given to such parent as is appointed guardian. But where the parents are not European British subjects, section 19 lays down that nothing in the chapter shall authorize the Court to appoint or declare a guardian of the person of a minor whose father is living, and is not, in the opinion of the Court, unfit to be guardian of the person of the minor. Now if a father has had the care and custody of his infant child, he may be within the definition of the Act a 'guardian', and the provisions of sections 24 and 25 may then apply to him. But that is not the case where he has not had the custody of his infant child. Section 25 cannot apply to this case for the ward has never left or been removed from the custody of his guardian; nor again can the provisions of section 24 be invoked, which were held on a liberal interpretation by the Allahabad High Court in Utma Kuar v. Bhagwanta Kuar (3) to justify the Court in obtaining and delivering over the custody of a minor to a Mahomedan mother who had been appointed guardian by the Court. It appears to us that on the peculiar facts of this case the learned Joint Judge is right, and the only remedy of the father is to file a suit. We think that under the circumstances of the case we should make no order as to costs.

Order confirmed.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 43—Divorce, decree nisi for, in suit by husband—Costs of appeal, wife's right to get from husband—Custody of children of marriage on decree for divorce.

In a proper case, on the application of a wife who prefers an appeal against a decree nisi for divorce, the Appellate Court may, in its discretion, make an order directing the husband to provide for the costs of the wife's appeal. [p. 219, col. 2; p. 221, col. 2.]

On making a decree for dissolution of marriage it should be the duty of the Court to look to the interests of the children of the marriage and carefully to weigh the comparative advantages and disadvantages of giving the custody of all or any of them to the one parent or to the other, but no general rule on the subject can be laid down. [p. 217, col. 1; p. 220, col. 1.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—The Court, though not precluded from making an order giving the divorced wife access to the children, is most reluctant to make such an order and never places the indulgence of the parents above the welfare of the children. [p. 220, col. 1.]

The doctrine that the husband who brings a suit for divorce should provide costs to the wife, to enable her to make her defence and to prosecute her appeal when a decree is passed against her, should be very cautiously scrutinised, as such a doctrine is an encroachment upon the ordinary rule that costs follow the event. [p. 221, col. 1.]

In a suit for divorce brought by a husband for the adultery of his wife, the wife did not deny the charge of adultery but pleaded condonation, connivance and collusion on the part of the husband and the Judge, having decided against the defences, made a decree nisi and gave the custody of the children of the marriage, two daughters, aged respectively 10 and 20, to the husband. The wife then preferred an appeal and made an application to the Appellate Court asking that the Court should make an order restraining the husband from sending the two daughters out of the jurisdiction of the Court until the disposal of her appeal and directing him to pay to her Solicitors such sum as might be fixed by the Court for and towards the costs of her appeal:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case it would be wrong to interfere with the discretion which the law vests in the father who is the proper and legitimate guardian of the children, and that the facts of the case were not of such a nature as to justify an order that the husband should make provision for his wife's costs of the appeal. JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—(April 17, 1916).—This is an application by Beatrice Alice De Ste Croix, asking that this Court should make an order that the children of the marriage between herself and her husband should remain within the jurisdiction of this Court until her appeal is disposed of. It is a matter of painful nature, as so many applications in divorce cases are, and this case is peculiarly painful, because it is that of a woman who had been married for a number of years and who has been a mother for a considerable time and who is struggling for the right of her continued access to her two daughters, CROIX, DE STE, B. A. V. CROIX, PHILLIP DE STE.

The principle upon which an application such as this ought to be considered was laid down in the case of Symington v. Symington (1) which was cited to us, the passage to which I desire to refer being at page 420: "It should be the duty of the Court to look to the interest of the children and carefully to weigh the comparative advantages and disadvantages of giving the custody of all or any of them to the one parent or to the other." I am at a loss to conceive how any general rule upon such a subject can be laid down.

Now, in this case the facts are that the applicant was the respondent to a petition for divorce. During the course of the hearing, she through her learned Counsel stated that she was not in a position to deny the fact that adultery had been committed by her. But she set up other defences to the effect that her husband had condoned the adultery she had committed, and that he had also condoned the adultery. A decree nisi was made by the learned Judge who heard the case, having decided against the defences set up by the respondent. The daughters in question are respectively twenty and ten years old, and the elder daughter will be twenty-one this year in July, and it is in evidence before us that she is engaged to be married and she is herself desirous of going to England and intends returning to India by December of this year. The husband has sworn an affidavit in which he said that even if this unfortunate matter had not occurred and if he and his wife had been still living together as man and wife, he would have thought it right to send home his other daughter who, as I have said, was ten years old, in order that she might be put to school. What he proposes to do is to send the daughters to Jersey, where he has property and where he has some sisters, and that the younger girl should be put to a school which is called Jersey Ladies' School.

Now, under those circumstances, can this Court possibly say that the course which the husband proposes to take is an unreasonable one. Speaking for myself, I do not think it is. I think, it is often to the advantage of an English girl, ten years old, that she should leave this country, at all events for sometime, for the sake of health and perhaps also for the sake of education: and, one must remember that the person who proposes so to deal with these girls is the father who has certain well-known rights and duties which were referred to in the case which I have already mentioned, as follows: "The father's right to the guardianship of his child is high and sacred. Our law holds it in much reverence and it should not be taken from him without gross misconduct on his own part and danger of injury to the health and morals of the children." Now, in this case, having regard to the finding of the learned Judge, there is nothing to be said against the morals or the conduct of the father: nor is there anything in the course which he proposes to take which is calculated to injure the morals or the health of the children. In my opinion, it would be wrong for us to interfere with the discretion which the law vests in the father, who is the proper and legitimate guardian of the children under the circumstances of this case. Therefore, in my opinion, that part of the application must be refused.

With regard to the other part, as to the costs, we think this is a matter of considerable general importance, and, therefore we think it right to take time to consider our judgment.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the husband brought a suit for divorce, and the learned Judge granted him a decree nisi, on the ground of the respondent's adultery: subsequently an application was made by her to this Court applying first of all that her husband should be restrained from sending the children of the marriage out of the jurisdiction of this Court. That matter was disposed of on the hearing of the application. It was further prayed that the petitioner in the divorce suit should be ordered to make provision for the costs of her appeal to this Court, and we reserved our judgment upon that point.

The principle upon which the husband has been directed to make provision for his wife's costs in these cases has been laid down in Robertson v. Robertson (2), and the passage to which I wish to refer is at page 122. I am now reading from the judgment of Sir George Jessel, where he says: "Now on principle it is plain that the whole foundation of the rule depends on the liability of the husband to pay the necessary and fair costs of the wife's defence. I take it that that rule is founded on the old English Law, which gave the whole personal property of the wife to the husband, and gave him also the income of her real estate; so that in the absence of a settlement (which, as we all know, is a comparatively modern introduction) she was absolutely penniless, and, therefore, the Ecclesiastical Court not only provided for the costs of her defence, but also gave her alimony pendente lite so as to provide for her maintenance." There is another passage at page 123, where the learned Master of the Rolls says: "I have given what I believe to be the true view of the origin of the liability of the husband; but I am not oblivious to the nobler view, if I may so express it, held in the House of Lords, that no gentleman, indeed, no man of right feeling would wish that his wife should not have the means of fairly investigating and fairly defending herself against so odious a charge as that of adultery. Really, if there had not been, as I do believe there is, the common and pecuniary reason for fixing the husband with the costs, I think that that reason ought to be sufficient to all right-minded men." That principle was endorsed by Lord Justice Brett and also by Lord Justice Cotton at pages 124 and 125. In a subsequent case, Otway v. Otway (3), there is passage which is material at page 155, and it is to be noticed that this is a judgment of Lord Justice Cotton who was a party to the decision in Robertson v. Robertson (2). He says: "Then as regards the appeal I doubted very much whether we ought to allow any costs of the wife on the appeal, we having decided against her on the ground that she had already been found guilty of adultery before any of the proceedings in the appeal were taken. But I think the case we have been referred to, of Holt v. Holt (4), settles that question. If after she had been found guilty of adultery she had herself actively brought the matter before this Court, then I should have thought no provision ought to be made for her costs; but here she was only defending herself against a proceeding taken by the husband, and that being so, I think that, following what is laid down in Holt v. Holt (4), it was reasonable for her to instruct a Solicitor and Counsel to appear. Therefore, although her adultery prevented her from pledging the credit of her husband, and prevented her getting any alimony or allowance from the husband, yet, in my opinion, it does not prevent her from requiring her husband to provide for the costs reasonably incurred in bringing her case against his appeal before the Court. Therefore, I think we ought to allow her her costs of this appeal, as well as the costs of the proceedings in the Divorce Court." There is one other passage which I think is material to notice, and it is as follows: "There is one point I said I should mention, namely, with reference to the recent legislation as to the position of married women. If this marriage had been after the Act of 1882, we should have had to consider how far that old rule would apply where a woman was put, after that Act, in the position of a feme sole, retaining all her property and being in a position to sue and be sued." That observation would, of course, affect the principle which was referred to by Sir George Jessel in Robertson v. Robertson (2), but it would not affect the second principle to which he refers at page 123 where he says: "but I am not oblivious to the nobler view.....held in House of Lords, that no gentleman, indeed, no man of right feeling would wish that his wife should not have the means of fairly investigating and fairly defending herself against so odious a charge as that of adultery."

Now, there are two passages in Halsbury's Laws of England, 16th Volume, to which I think right to refer, because each of them deals with the question of practice. At page 561 and in clause 1139 there is this to be found: "If a woman obtains a decree, and her husband appeals, she is entitled to defend herself, and he must provide her costs of the appeal. The fact that she has committed adultery does not necessarily affect the matter; but if she, being herself found guilty, actively brings the matter before the Court, he need not make such provision." Then after that is cited Otway v. Otway (3). But there is a note to be found on the top of the notes at page 562 in which reference is made to an unreported case, Campbell v. Campbell, 'in which the House of Lords ordered the sum of £ 150 to be paid to the wife to enable her to carry on the appeal;' and it is also noted that 'a similar result happened in the case of Yelverton v. Longworth or Yelverton (1864) not reported.' It is not quite clear whether in either case the wife was the appellant, but as I read the words it looks to me as if she was the appellant—we have not had the opportunity of getting further information as to the record in either of the cases, and, therefore, I am entirely depending on the notes.

The other passage is at page 604 (that is, article 1235), and it is this: "Where the wife, having obtained an order in the Court below, is the respondent to an appeal, the practice is to allow her her costs of the appeal even if it is successful, and the husband may be ordered to pay into Court or give security for her costs of the appeal, the hearing being stayed until he does so; but this practice has no application where the wife is the appellant."

As far as I know those are the only authorities or references to which our attention was drawn during the argument of this case. In my judgment we ought not to make an order that the husband should make provision for the costs of the wife's appeal in this case, having regard to the facts which are set out in the petition of the lady, in the various affidavits which are now before the Court. I need not refer to these facts in detail, but it is sufficient to mention that during the course of the case it was stated by the lady's learned Counsel in effect that she was not in a position to deny the adultery. Her case was based upon an allegation that her husband's conduct conduced to the adultery and that he in fact condoned it. This case has been held to be unfounded by the learned Judge. As I have said before, I do not wish to enter into the details which are set out in the affidavits; but, in my opinion, the facts are not such as to justify us in making an order that the petitioner in the divorce suit should make provision for his wife's costs of the appeal. I wish to make it clear that I do not decide that this Court has no jurisdiction to make an order on the application of the wife who is an appellant to this Court. On the contrary I think this Court has jurisdiction to make such an order in a proper case if the Court thinks right so to do upon the facts of the case, even where the wife has had an order nisi made against her in the first Court, and where she herself is the appellant. I desire to confine my decision in this case simply and solely to the facts of this case, and to say that in this case the wife is not entitled to the order for which she asks.

WOODROFFE, J.—The petitioner prays that the respondent may be ordered to pay to the applicant's Solicitors such sum as may be fixed by the Registrar towards the costs of her appeal. The husband filed a suit for divorce alleging adultery; and the usual provision was made for the wife's costs. Though adultery was originally denied, it was and has been before us admitted and a decree was made for the dissolution. The petitioner wishes to appeal on the grounds of condonation, inducement to adultery and collusion which have disentitled plaintiff to the relief notwithstanding the adultery found. On the statement of facts made to us at the hearing there does not appear to be any substance in any of these grounds. It is unnecessary to decide the question of our power to make the order asked for. It is sufficient to say that I do not think that this is a case in which we should make such an order. I would, therefore, refuse the application.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an application by a wife who has appealed against a decree nisi made by Mr. Justice Greaves on the 11th April 1916, in a suit for dissolution of marriage instituted by her husband on the ground of her adultery. The petitioner did not deny the charge of adultery, but pleaded condonation, connivance, and collusion. These pleas were not established to the satisfaction of the Trial Judge. The decree nisi was consequently made, and the custody of the children of the marriage, two daughters, was given to the husband. By a consent order made pendente lite, the petitioner is entitled to be paid a sum of Rs. 340 monthly by her husband by way of alimony, and also a specified sum towards her costs of the proceeding; the decree further directs the husband to pay her costs of the suit and trial. In the present petition, she prays, first, that her husband may be ordered to keep the children within the jurisdiction of the Court until the disposal of her appeal with a view to enable her to have access to them and not to send them away to Jersey as he intends to do, and secondly, that her husband may be directed to pay to her Solicitors such sum as may be fixed by the Court for and towards the costs of her appeal.

The Court has already refused her first prayer on the ground that the paramount consideration in a matter of this description is the benefit of the children and that in the present case, it was not for their welfare that they should continue to reside here longer: Symington v. Symington (1), D'Alton v. D'Alton (5), Philip v. Philip (6). In fact, the Court, though not precluded from making an order giving the divorced wife access to the children, is most reluctant to make such an order and never places the indulgence of the parents above the welfare of the children:

(5) (1878) 4 P. D. 87; 47 L. J. P. 59.

Handley v. Handley (7), Kelly v. Kelly (8)

The Court, however, took time to consider its decision upon the second prayer in the application. Reliance has been placed in support of that prayer on the principle that as a wife should not be precluded by want of means from establishing her case, either as a petitioner or respondent, the husband should make a deposit or give security for the estimated costs that might be incurred by her. One reason usually assigned for this rule is that the law assumes that on her marriage all the property of the woman presumably passes to her husband, so that, for her protection, it is necessary that not only should she not be made liable to pay costs but that she should litigate at the expense of her husband: Wells v. Wells and Hudson (9), Clarke v. Clarke (10), Miller v. Miller (11), Milne v. Milne (12), Robertson v. Robertson (2), Smith v. Smith (13), Otuay v. Otuay (3), Earnshaw v. Earnshaw (14). A second reason was assigned by Pigot, J., in Young v. Young (15): "inasmuch as the wife, in discharge of her duties as mistress of the household, is wholly occupied, it is impossible for her to acquire any property and.....that consideration might fairly be used to influence the Court in determining whether in cases such as these, the wife might not be entitled to obtain the necessary costs from the husband, apart from any question of right to her property." A third reason sometimes assigned in justification of the rule is that as a wife can bind her husband for necessities, her costs, incurred in a litigation about her matrimonial status, may be considered a necessity: Jones v. Jones (16), Brown v. Ackroyd (17). Whatever reasons historical or equitable may be discoverable in support of the rule, it has been generally followed in a long line of cases in this country, though sometimes not without reluctance: Fowie v. Fowie (18), Proby v. Proby (19), Georgucopulas v. Georgucopulas (20), Thomson v. Thomson (21), Boyle v. Boyle (22), Mayhew v. Mayhew (23), Payne and Co. v. Pirojshah (24), Natal v. Natal (25).

It is plain, however, that the doctrine in question is an encroachment upon the ordinary rule that costs follow the event; and speaking for myself, I am of opinion that every attempt to extend its operation should be cautiously scrutinised. In the case before us, the charge of adultery is not denied by the wife; but she seeks to test, by way of appeal, the correctness of the decision of the Trial Judge on the special grounds she assigned with a view to resist a decree for dissolution of marriage notwithstanding her misconduct. I can discover no reasonable ground on which her claim to be financed by her husband in the prosecution of her appeal in such circumstances can be justified. I can very well understand that if a wife obtains a decree, and her husband appeals, she may be held entitled to defend herself and to require her husband to provide her costs of the appeal: Holt v. Holt (4), Earnshaw v. Earnshaw (14). The fact that she has committed adultery may not, in those circumstances, necessarily affect the matter. But if she, being herself found guilty, actively brings the matter before the Court, I cannot see how her husband may be justly called upon by her, as a matter of right, to provide for her costs. The view I take is in accord with that adopted by Cotton, L. J., in Otuay v. Otuay (3): "if after she had been found (16) (1872) L. R. 2 P. & D. 333; 20 W. R. 320. (17) (1856) 5 El. & Bl. 819; 25 L. J. Q. B. 193; 2 Jur. (N. S.) 203; 4 W. R. 229; 26 L. T. (O. S.) 215; 103 R. R. 762; 119 E. R. 639. (18) 4 C. 260; 3 C. L. R. 484; 2 Shome L. R. 143; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. guilty of adultery she had herself actively brought the matter before this Court, then I should have thought no provision ought to be made for her costs." See also Earnshaw v. Earnshaw (14). I am not unmindful that the House of Lords has sometimes made an order on the husband to pay a round sum to his wife to enable her to carry on her case before the House of Lords: Robinson v. Robinson (1859 unreported), Keats v. Keats (1859 unreported), Campbell v. Campbell (unreported), Yelcerton v. Yelcerton (1864 unreported). These cases are mentioned in note (c) to Article 1139 in Volume XVI of the Laws of England edited by Lord Halsbury. The circumstances under which the orders were made are, however, not stated nor are the reasons available. These cases consequently merely show that circumstances are conceivable, in which the Court may, in its discretion, make an order in favour of the wife; but they do not lay down an inflexible rule, and I cannot treat them as authorities which oblige me to hold that the application of the present petitioner should be granted. In my opinion, her second prayer must, like the first, be refused.

Application rejected.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for Respondent No 1.

Mr. B. V. Desai, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether, where a minor acquired a cause of action to sue for possession of property and died after majority but before the expiry of three years from the date of the cessation of his disability of minority, his personal representative can, although twelve years have expired since the cause of action accrued, institute a suit on the same cause of action at any time within the three years' period which had already commenced in the lifetime of the deceased. In our opinion the personal representative can maintain such a suit. In such a suit the deceased must be included in the term "plaintiff" for the purpose of Article 142, for according to section 3 of the Limitation Act "plaintiff" includes any person from or through whom the plaintiff derives his right to sue.

The title of quondam minor had not been extinguished by twelve years of dispossession, because on attaining majority he was entitled to a further period of three years within which to sue. To use the words of section 28, "the period limited for instituting a suit for possession of the property had not determined."

It is otherwise where a minor with the cause of action more than twelve years in existence dies pending disability. In such a case no extended term has commenced for him; therefore, the cause of action which would survive up to twelve years from its origin would be extinguished on expiry of that period, notwithstanding that the minor had not been able to judge whether or not to sue; for this reason the third clause of section 7 provided a fresh term for the representative of a person with a cause of action lying under disability.

The express provision for such a case in the third clause of section 7 does not, therefore, impliedly exclude the right of the personal representative to stand in the shoes of the deceased for the purpose of subsisting causes of action, which is expressly recognised to belong to executors and administrators by section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881.

In Mahomed Arsad Chowdhry v. Yakoob Ally (1), Markby, J., observes that "the minor or his representative-in-interest after his death has a special period allotted to him for bringing the suit. There are no words whatsoever in section 7 which would give to any other person in whatever way he might happen to be connected with the minor, any other period for bringing the suit than that specified for ordinary persons". The question was whether the special period was not confined to the minor and his representatives after death to the exclusion of representatives after transfer, if the term 'representatives' could be appropriately used for transferees.

A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court came to a similar conclusion as regards transferees in Rudra Kant v. Nobo Kishore (2), though there are dicta of the Chief Justice and Mitter, J., which would confine the rights of representatives after death to the special case provided for by the third clause of section 7. Mr. Justice Wilson, who was a member of the Full Bench and of the referring Bench, gave reasons for doubting the correctness of the decisions in both the above Calcutta cases. Their correctness has been doubted also by the Madras High Court in Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar v. Siva Subramanya Pillai (3), where it is remarked that "those decisions involve the apparent anomaly that a minor cannot transfer his title to property though at the date of the transfer it is a subsisting interest so far as he is concerned". In this connection also we may refer to section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that property of any kind may be transferred subject to certain special exceptions.*

In Mahadev v. Babi (4) a Bench of this Court has indicated a preference for the reasoning of Wilson, J., in his judgments in Rudra Kant's case (2) and has expressed the opinion that Mahomed Arsad Chowdhury v. Yakoob-Ally (1) decided that section 7 limits to the minor and to his representatives after his death the privilege of computing the period, subject to certain conditions, from the date when the disability ceases or from the death of the minor before he can attain majority.

In this view we concur. We are not here concerned with the question decided in Rudra Kant's case (2) with reference to representatives by transfer. Shridhar, as whose heiress the plaintiff claims, died on the 5th August 1910 having attained majority on the 21st December 1909—this suit was filed on the 22nd of May 1912 and is, therefore, in time. We affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal with costs of 1st respondent payable by the appellant.

Chowkidari chakran lands are lands which at or before the Permanent Settlement had been appropriated or assigned for the maintenance of the Police force and by reason of such appropriation excluded from the zamindari assessment. The zamindar is precluded by Bengal Regulations I of 1793 and XIII of 1805 from utilising chowkidari chakran lands for remunerating persons who are his personal servants and perform no Police duties, but the onus of proving that the lands in dispute are so appropriated or assigned is on the Government. [p. 226, col. 2; p. 227, col. 1.]

Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra, 28 Ind. Cas. 676; 42 I. A. 30; 19 C. W. N. 65; 17 Bom. L. R. 32; 21 C. L. J. 31; 17 M. L. T. 1; 2 L. W. 11; 28 M. L. J. 457; 42 C. 710, relied on.

Where in January 1801, the zamindar of Pergunnah Nayabasan, which was settled with him in that year, executed a kabuliyat in favour of the Government under which he was bound to maintain and keep the same "sardars and paiks" that had all along existed in the Pergunnah, and to carry out whatever orders might be passed by the Magistrate on the paiks:

Held, that the sardars and paiks referred to in the kabuliyat were sardars and paiks employed on Police duty; that the document had no reference to paiks who held jagirs within the Pergunnah on tenure services personal to the zamindar himself and having no connection with the local Police; and that the zamindar was entitled to determine the employment of a paik who was in his personal service and held a jagir on service tenure determinable when his employment ceased, and to recover possession of his jagir. [p. 226, cols. 1 & 2.]

Even if it be competent to the High Court in second appeal to remit a case for re-hearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings or even suggested in the Courts below, it ought only to be done in exceptional cases for good cause shown and on payment of all costs thrown away. [p. 227, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Calcutta, dated April 27, 1910, reversing that of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated July 10, 1907, on an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Midnapore, dated January 21, 1907, and remanding the appeal for re-trial.

FACTS.—The appellant is the zamindar of Pergunnah Nayabasan, and in his zamindari are certain lands held by persons in what is known as service or chakran tenure. A predecessor-in-title of the appellant executed a kabuliyat in 1801 in accordance with Regulation I of 1793, which contained the following material clause:—

"I shall maintain and keep on the same sardars and paiks who have all along existed in the said Pergunnah. I shall carry out whatever order may be passed by the Magistrate on the paiks. I have no power to dismiss the sardars and paiks. I shall, year by year, file a list of the names of the individual sardars and paiks before the Magistrate and one such list before the Collector. I shall depute the paiks to keep watch and take care of the boundaries of the said Pergunnah and see that no theft and dacoity and any riot may take place anywhere. I shall carry out any order that may be passed by Government, as best as I can. I shall constantly be engaged for the good of the Government. I shall not neglect in any way to pay the Government revenue and to comply with the several provisions. If I do not pay the above Government revenue according to the instalments or if I act contrary to any order that may be passed at any time in respect of the paiks and (torn) as mentioned above, then the Members of the Board and of the Council shall be competent to eject me forthwith from the zamindari of the said Pergunnah and resume the zamindari of the said Pergunnah and grant the zamindari of the said Pergunnah to anybody they like (torn)".

It was the appellant's case that there were and had been from time immemorial two classes of paiks holding service lands within the zamindari. The first class consisted of Government paiks called commonly chowkidars, digars, and sardars and the second class of private paiks called commonly dal paiks, dal beharas and bhullakes. The appellant admitted that the provisions of the kabuliyat and also those of Regulation XX of 1817, section 21, applied to the first class and did not claim any power to dismiss them; but he contended that the second class were his private servants and that it rested with him to dismiss them at his pleasure.

In 1898 appellant dismissed one Suba Naik whom he alleged to be a private paik, and attempted to resume Suba Naik's jagir land. Suba Naik obtained an order from the Magistrate the effect of which was to prevent his ejectment without suit. He died and was succeeded in possession by his sons. Appellant instituted this suit against the sons and the Secretary of State claiming the land and a declaration of his right to dismiss the second class of paiks without the interference or control of Government.

The sons pleaded that they were in fact private paiks but that they had done nothing for which they could be dismissed. The Secretary of State contended that all paiks on the estate came within the terms of the kabuliyat and that even if they were of two classes Suba Naik came within the first class.

It was found by the Subordinate Judge and on appeal by the District Judge that there was a class of private paiks over whom the zamindar had absolute control, and that Suba Naik belonged to that class. They decreed the suit.

The Secretary of State preferred a petition of second appeal to the High Court raising for the first time the contentions—

(1) That the material issue was whether the lands in suit were at the Settlement dealt with as ordinary lands of the estate or as jagir lands reserved for remunerating paiks for services.

(2) That the only questions in the case were (a) whether Suba Naik's jagir existed at the Settlement and (b) what kind of duties Suba Naik had to perform at the Settlement and that this issue and these questions had not been tried.

The High Court (Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ.) remanded the case for re-hearing on the question whether Suba Naik's lands were included in those excepted from revenue because appropriated for the maintenance of the Police and whether, if so, plaintiff could resume them or dismiss Suba Naik even if only employed in zamindari duties. Costs to abide the result.

Against this decision, the zamindar appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and Raikes, for the Appellant.—Regulation XX of 1817, section 21 (2) did not provide for registers of Police Officers.

[LORD ATKINSON.—The point was not in respect of land, but in respect of estates].

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—They all paid rents.]

They were chowkidari chakran lands and the point was whether they were Government lands (Regulation I of 1793, section 8, paragraph 4).

[MR. AMEER ALI.—If there is revenue assessed for the whole mahal, then what is not assessed is outside the mahal. They may form part of mahal for administrative purposes, but not for revenue.]

RAM CHANDRA BHANJ DEO v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

[LORD PARKER.—The paiks were super Naiks and were wrongly ejected, but the Courts below held that they were rightly ejected. It was so because they held chowki-dari land.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—They say that prima facie it is Government land.]

There were concurrent findings of fact and the High Court ought not to have disturbed them, Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1). There were two points: (1) whether these persons were Police or private individuals and (2) whether they held land for one or for the other. The High Court had no power under section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code to entertain the appeal.

Sir E. Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne, for the Respondents:—This was a test case. The Raja wanted a declaration of title to this land.

[MR. AMER ALI.—Is the land within the ambit of what was let out by the zamindar?]

This issue was never tried. The Courts below had applied wrong tests in construing the kabuliyat and the whole point was whether the lands were exempt from assessment.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—You said in the lower Court that there was only one class of paiks and the Courts below were quite right in saying that there were other classes.]

Many of these paiks were engaged in both duties [Joykishen Mookerjee v. Collector of East Burdwan (2)].

[MR. AMER ALI.—You say that the question of tenure must be decided.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—You cannot ask the Court to try a thing which is not placed before it. You never filed documentary evidence about the tenure.]

It was raised for the first time before the High Court, but the right test is as laid down by the Penal Code.

[LORD PARKER.—You want that point which ought to have been tried in Courts below to be tried here.]

Yes. Section 11 of Act V of 1908, Explanation IV. The matter was raised in the pleadings. Section 100 of Act V of 1908 did not apply to construction of documents as was held in Fate's Chand v. Kishen Kunwar (3).

The proper test was that laid down in Joykishen Mookerjee Collector of East Burdwan (2) and the Courts below ought to have applied the test and, therefore, it was right for the High Court to remit it for re-trial. Section 100 did not apply to the Court of Appeal at all.

[LORD PARKER.—Both Courts held that the kabuliyat did not apply to sardars and paiks. The whole thing depends on the construction as to what sardars and paiks mean.]

The Privy Council would not interfere with the discretion of the High Court.

The appellant was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—This was an action in which the appellant, as plaintiff, sought to recover possession from the first and second defendants of a jagir containing about 29 bighas of land situate within the territorial limits of the Pergunnah Nayabasan in the District of Midnapur, of which the appellant was the proprietor. The Secretary of State, who alone has appeared as a respondent in this appeal, and is hereafter referred to as the respondent, was added as a third defendant because the Government of India disputed the right which the appellant was asserting in the action. The appellant's case was that in 1898 one Suba Naik was in his personal service and held the jagir on service tenure determinable when his employment ceased; that he had duly determined the employment of Suba Naik and given him notice to quit his jagir; that Suba Naik had refused to deliver up possession of the jagir, and had obtained from the Magistrate an order which precluded the appellant from obtaining possession thereof without civil suit; that Suba Naik had since died, and that the first and second defendants wrongfully claimed to retain possession as his heirs.

RAM CHANDRA BHANJ DEO v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The Pergunnah Nayabasan was settled in 1801 with Rani Sumitra Bhanj (the appellant's predecessor-in-title), who in January of that year executed a kabuliyat in favour of the Government. Under this kabuliyat the proprietor of the Pergunnah was bound to maintain and keep the same "sardars and paiks" who had all along existed in the Pergunnah, and to carry out whatever order might be passed by the Magistrate on the paiks. He was also precluded from dismissing the sardars or paiks, and bound to depute the paiks, to watch and take care of the boundaries of the Pergunnah, and see that no theft or dacoity and no riot occurred anywhere.

The appellant has throughout contended that the sardars and paiks referred to in this kabuliyat are sardars and paiks employed on Police duty, and that the document has no reference to paiks who hold on tenure services personal to himself, and having no connection with the local Police. This contention has been upheld, and in their Lordships' opinion rightly upheld, by all the Courts below. On the other hand, it has been throughout contended by the respondent that the provisions of the kabuliyat preclude the appellant not only from dismissing paiks whose tenure services include the performance of Police duties, but from resuming their jagir lands, even though he might provide for their remuneration in some other way. The appellant having accepted this contention, their Lordships will assume, as was assumed in all the Courts below, that it is correct.

On reference to the written statement of the respondent by way of defence to the action, it will be found that, so far as material for the purposes of the present appeal, he relied entirely on the provisions of the kabuliyat. In order to succeed, he had, therefore, to prove that Suba Naik held by service tenure involving the performance of Police duties. Curiously enough, the first two defendants put in a statement, by way of defence, repudiating this. Their case was that they were in possession by hereditary right on a service tenure which did not involve the performance of any Police duty, but that the appellant had no right to dismiss them if they were ready and willing, as they in fact were, to perform their proper services. They subsequently applied for leave to withdraw this statement and substitute another. This application was refused, but they appear to have given evidence at the trial in support of the respondent's case.

The Subordinate Judge found first that there had always been two classes of paiks within the Pergunnah (1) paiks who hold their jagirs in consideration of the performance of Police duties, and (2) paiks whose tenure services were personal to the zamindar. He also found that Suba Naik belonged to the latter class. On these findings of fact he held, and in their Lordships' opinion rightly held, that the defence of the respondent failed, and gave judgment in favour of the appellant.

The first and second defendants were content with this decision, but the respondent appealed to the District Judge, who came to the same conclusions both of fact and law as had been come to by the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

The respondent thereupon presented an appeal to the High Court. By section 584 of the Civil Procedure Code then in force, the High Court as Second Court of Appeal was bound by the findings of fact of the District Judge. In their Lordships' opinion the High Court was not at liberty to disregard the finding that Suba Naik belonged to the class of paiks having no Police duties, on the ground that the District Judge gave no reasons for coming to this finding. The reasons of the District Judge are clear. He had considered the evidence and saw no reason for differing from the conclusions at which the Subordinate Judge had arrived. The High Court, therefore, could only allow the appeal on grounds of law, and as they agreed with the Court below on the construction of the kabuliyat, it is not obvious what other questions of law arose. The respondent, however, urged upon the High Court that the Courts below had entirely misconceived the issue they had to try. This issue was, he contended, whether the lands comprised in the jagir in question were chowkidari chakran lands, that is, lands which at or before the Settlement had been appropriated or assigned for the maintenance of the Police force, and by reason of such appropriation excluded from the zamindari assessment. It is in their Lordships' opinion quite clear that no such issue was raised by the pleadings. Had this been the issue raised by the pleadings, the question whether Suba Naik was a paik with Police duties would have been of little importance if not quite immaterial. The appellant would be precluded by Regulation I of 1793 and XIII of 1805 from utilizing chowkidari chakran lands for remunerating persons who were his personal servants and performed no Police duties, but as appears from the case of Secretary of State v. Kirtibas Bhupati Harichandan Mahapatra (1), the onus of proving that the lands in question were so appropriated or assigned would lie on the respondent. The kabuliyat contains no reference whatever to any such lands.

It was admitted before their Lordships that this contention was put forward for the first time before the High Court. Such admission could hardly be avoided. The real question upon the pleadings was whether the appellant could rightly terminate Suba Naik's tenancy. The new issue suggested raises the question, not whether Suba Naik's tenancy could be determined, but whether it ought not to be determined and the jagir utilised for maintaining some Police Officer appointed by the Government. Nevertheless the High Court held that this was the real issue, and, as it had not been tried, discharged the order of the District Judge and remitted the action for re-hearing. It not only did this, but it ordered all the costs already incurred to abide the result of the re-hearing. In other words, if the appellant failed on a new case set up for the first time on the second appeal, he would have to pay whole costs of the issues on which he had succeeded in the two Courts below.

In their Lordships' opinion, even if it be competent to the High Court to remit a case for re-hearing on an issue not raised in the pleadings or even suggested in the Courts below, this ought only to be done in exceptional cases for good cause shown and on payment of all costs thrown away. In the present case the respondent showed no ground whatever for the indulgence he claimed. He did not suggest that he had been in any way taken by surprise or had discovered fresh facts of which he was unaware when the case was before the lower Courts. The possibility of the lands in question being chowkidari chakran lands, which could not, according to the Regulations, be resumed, must have been present to the minds of his advisers when his statement by way of defence was filed. It had been suggested by the Magistrate whose order necessitated the action. The action of the respondent's advisers in not raising the point must have been deliberate. With knowledge of it, he elected to fight the action on the question whether Suba Naik could rightfully be dispossessed of his jagir rather than on the question whether he ought not to be dispossessed and the jagir utilised for Police purposes. The record contains little or no evidence pointing to there being any chowkidari chakran lands which could not be resumed within the Pergunnah. On the contrary, the rubokari in Persian, the genuineness of which was accepted by the District Judge, points the other way. The respondent does not suggest that he has any further evidence.

Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed with costs here and below, and that the order of the District Judge should be restored, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Appeal allowed.

those cases should be referred to the High Court under the section which are not open to further appeal.

A Government notification taking away the right of pre-emption in respect of certain property would be fatal to the case of a plaintiff in whose favour no decree had been passed at the date of the notification, but it would not affect the rights of a plaintiff in whose favour a decree had been passed before the date of the notification, merely because that decree was under appeal at that date.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs in this case sued to pre-empt, and obtained a decree on condition of payment of Rs. 1,000 by a certain date. The vendees appealed to the District Judge. While the appeal was pending in the District Court, the Local Government issued a notification taking away rights of pre-emption with respect to agricultural land within the limits of a Municipality. The learned District Judge has now referred to this Court the question whether Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1) covers the case of a pre-emptor, who has already obtained a decree but against whom the vendee-defendant has lodged an appeal prior to the issue of a Government notification taking away the right of pre-emption.

The order of reference quotes section 113 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that section should be read in conjunction with Order XLVI, rule 1, which provides for reference to a High Court only in cases not open to further appeal. But as the question is a simple one, and as both sides have been represented in this Court, we think it better in the interests of all concerned that we should answer the question put to us.

It is clear that all rights to pre-empt with regard to land like the land in suit ceased from the date of the notification. But before that date the plaintiff in the present case had already obtained a decree and thereby he became more than a mere plaintiff seeking to enforce a claim to pre-empt. He became a decree-holder entitled, immediately he paid in the pre-emption money, to the status of full owner, provided, of course, that the decree of the first Court was not upset on appeal. In the Appellate Court he is a decree-holder, defending the decree which has already been passed in his favour, and unless fault can be found with that decree it should be upheld. If the decree was right on the day it was passed the subsequent Government notification cannot make it wrong, as the notification has no retrospective effect. It is clear then that the case differs from Bishen Singh v. Ganda Singh (1), in which the notification was issued before the plaintiff had obtained any decree. In this connection, too, we may refer to Sat Bharai v. Sat Bharai (2), a case in which a reversioner sued for a declaration that an alienation should not affect her reversionary rights. Her suit being dismissed by the first Court, she appealed, still seeking a declaratory decree but during the pendency of the appeal the alienor died, and the appeal was then dismissed for the reason that succession having opened out the plaintiff had lost her right to obtain a mere declaration. So, too, in the present case, had the plaintiff's suit been dismissed by the first Court, and had the plaintiff been the appellant in the District Court, we take it that a Government notification issued while the appeal was pending and taking away the right to pre-empt would have been fatal to the plaintiff's chance of success. But as we have already pointed out, the plaintiff is not now seeking to enforce a right to pre-empt, but he is a decree-holder defending his decree, and we hold that the notification is no bar to his defence.

The case is returned to the District Judge, who will dispose of the appeal on its merits. Pleaders' fees in this Court Rs. 16 each side, which will be costs in the cause (vide Order XLVI, rule 4).

An application for execution of a decree having been dismissed for default, it was, on the application of the decree-holder under Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, restored in Execution Petition No. 36 of 1913. In Execution Petition No. 39 of 1913 the judgment-debtors applied for a review of the restoration order on the ground that it was passed without notice to them. The Court granted the review and set aside the order of restoration. The decree-holder then applied in Execution Petition No. 52 of 1913 for review of the original order dismissing the execution petition for default, which was granted:

Held, that Execution Petition No. 52 of 1913 was not in effect for a review of the order in Execution Petition No. 39 of 1913, whose scope could not be enlarged by implication so as to affect the order of dismissal of the original execution petition, which was liable to be reviewed independently. JUDGMENT.—The respondents are decree-holders whose application for execution was originally dismissed for default. They obtained its restoration under Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, by presenting Execution Application No 36 of 1913.

The appellants, the judgment-debtors, then applied to the District Munsif in Execution Application No. 39 of 1913 to review his order of restoration, on the ground that it had been passed without notice to them. He granted a review and set aside his order of restoration.

Respondents then in Execution Application No. 52 of 1913 applied for a review of the original order dismissing the execution petition for default. The District Munsif granted a review and set aside the dismissal in the order, which is the subject of the present proceedings. The District Judge dismissed the appellants' appeal with reference to Order XLIII, rule 1 (w) and Order XLVII, rule (7), of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We have before us an appeal and a revision petition, but the conclusion we have come to on the merits, makes it unnecessary for us to decide whether the former will lie.

Both are argued on the ground that the District Munsif's order on Execution Application No. 52 of 1913 was passed without jurisdiction because it offended against Order XLVII, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, being in effect an order reviewing the previous order refusing to restore the original execution petition, which he passed after granting a review on Execution Petition No. 39 of 1913.

In order to deal with this argument, close attention to the course of the proceedings is necessary. Execution Application No. 39 of 1913 was disposed of on the legitimate grounds that (1) Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure required notice to the other side, which had not been given; (2) Order IX does not apply to execution proceedings at all [vide, Hajrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiunnissa Begam (1) and Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (2), authorities which have not lost their validity]. Under the present Code (1) would no doubt have justified only a re-hearing after notice had been given. But (2) was a sufficient ground for the lower Court's re-call of its order of restoration at once, the result being only that Execution Application No. 36 of 1913 stood dismissed. It is not possible to enlarge the scope of this order by implication and hold that it in any way affected the order of dismissal of the original execution petition, since that order had never been the subject of any subsequent proceedings. In fact the whole effect of the order on Execution Application No. 39 of 1913 was that the proceedings subsequent to the order of dismissal were a nullity. There is accordingly no foundation for the contention that Execution Application No. 52 of 1913 which in terms asked for a review only of the original order of dismissal, was for a review of the later order on Execution Application No. 39 of 1913 or that the order passed on the former was for a review of the latter.

The appeal against appellate order and civil revision petition fail and are dismissed with costs, one set only allowed, those in the civil revision petition.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The evidence is ample to show that the money was borrowed for the purpose of a trade which was an ancestral one and carried on under a direction in the father's Will. It was argued as a matter of law that the appellants would not be liable except to the extent of their shares in the assets of the business, and in support of that proposition a ruling of this Court in Sanka Krishnamurthi v. Bank of Burma (1) was cited; but that case does not bear out the contention of the learned Pleader. It is clear from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in that case that so far as the Hindu Law is concerned, which is the law governing the parties in this suit, he accepted the rulings in Ramlal Thakursidas v. Lakhmichand (2) and Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (3) as correctly laying down the law on the subject. Those decisions held in clear terms that in the case of an ancestral business, all the members of the family including the minors are liable for debts incurred in the course of the business to the extent of their shares in the family property, and that seems to be only reasonable because a business like the one in question is carried on on the credit of the entire family property. The family property is swelled by the profits earned in the business and it would be not only unjust to confine liability to the extent of the share in the assets of the business but it would be impossible in a case of this nature to say what is the extent of the

But all that was held there was that in cases of this class, the separate property of the minor would not be liable. The reasoning in that case on the other hand makes it clear that, in the opinion of the learned Judges, the share of the minor in the whole of the family property would be liable.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A mortgage of moveables can be as validly effected by parole as by a writing and the immediate effect of such a mortgage is to pass the property in the chattels mortgaged from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It is altogether unnecessary that actual possession of the chattels should be given. [p. 233, col. 2; p. 234, col. 1.]

Sections 108 and 178 of the Contract Act are enacted for the protection of bona fide purchasers and pledgees and are grounded upon principles of estoppel. [p. 237, col. 2.]

If the true owner of property puts another in ostensible possession of it and holds him out to the world as being fully capable of disposing of and conferring a good title to it, and such a person does dispose of it, the true owner has no good ground of complaint against the bona fide purchaser for value. JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—The plaintiff in this suit, a money-lender, claims to have a preferential right over all the creditors of the deceased Gabriel F. Vaz in respect of certain hypothecated property, being the press machines and other accessories of the Minto Printing Press.

The Official Assignee, a party defendant in this suit, has taken no part in it. I suppose that is because the deceased Vaz has no other assets worth troubling about than the subject-matter of the present suit.

The defendant D'Mello alleges that, on the 3rd of October 1914, he put Rs. 3,000 into what was thereon constituted a partnership between himself and Vaz for the working of the Minto Printing Press. He, therefore, contends that the plaintiff's claim, if in all other respects proved to be valid, must be restricted to a half share of the assets of that partnership upon a proper winding-up.

On the one hand, the defendant contends that the writings of hypothecation of the 11th of March 1913 and the 27th of February 1915 are fabrications, and that, if there was any transaction at all between the plaintiff and Vaz, it went no further than an ordinary money loan secured by promissory notes. On the other hand, the plaintiff contends that D'Mello paid no consideration whatever for his half share in the partnership and that if any transaction of the kind actually occurred in October 1914, it was entered into designedly in order to defraud him.

A great deal of evidence has been recorded, much of it to prove the respective contentions I have just barely outlined and much of it directly to prove that the plaintiff not only obtained the hypothecation of the property in suit in March

TEHILRAM GIRDHARIDAS v. LONGIN D'MELLO.

1913 but actually took constructive possession thereof by affixing boards on the premises announcing to the public that he was a mortgagee in possession.

The defendant is not now in a position to prove that the plaintiff's principal document, Exhibit B in the case, dated the 11th of March 1913, was not what, on the face of it, it purports to be. Vaz died on the night of the 22nd or early morning of the 23rd of April 1915 by his own hand. He appears to have taken poison on or about the 19th of April and succumbed during the night of the 22nd. D'Mello has no knowledge of the transaction evidenced by Exhibit B in the case and can only argue upon general grounds that the writing of that date, viz., the 11th of March 1913, and the later writing of the 27th of February 1915, are fabrications made to support the plaintiff's case. Exhibits B and F, the document creating the second charge, are signed by Vaz. They are written in the vernacular, and the defendant's suggestion is that the plaintiff got Vaz's signature to papers the contents of which he did not understand. I may briefly dismiss the evidence and state my conclusions upon it. I see no reason on this record to hold that Exhibits B and F are not genuine papers, although I confess that I view them and their proprietor, the plaintiff, with considerable suspicion. Nor do I see any sufficient reason to doubt but that D'Mello paid Rs. 3,000 on the 3rd of October 1914 as consideration for a half share in the partnership thereupon constituted and evidenced by the partnership deed of that date, Exhibit No. 3 in the present case. There has been a great deal of dispute over the payment of this consideration, and the fact that the deed bearing date the 3rd of October is said, by some of the witnesses, to have been executed on the 5th. I attach little or no importance to these matters. I am satisfied that D'Mello gave valuable consideration for his share in the partnership, thenceforward intended to work the Minto Printing Press. I am further satisfied that D'Mello had no notice of the plaintiff's claim in October 1914. It is possible that the plaintiff may have occasionally stuck up his board on the Printing Press, but the evidence on behalf of the defendant is far too good and far too strong to allow me to entertain any doubt but that a very great part of the plaintiff's evidence on this point is entirely false. And the defendant's evidence is such as to satisfy me that neither by means of these boards nor in any other way was notice given to D'Mello by the plaintiff of his alleged mortgage of the whole of the Printing Press plant. I could easily amplify my reasons for these conclusions, summarily stated, by an examination of the evidence more in detail, but I do not think it necessary to do so. Speaking generally, wherever that evidence conflicts with the defendant's evidence, I should not hesitate to reject the testimony given by the plaintiff, his nephew and his bhayas. With the single exception of Baptista, who appears to have acted very much in the plaintiff's interest in these matters, the whole of the plaintiff's evidence is of a character inviting the comment that it is completely subject to his control. It is of the quality to be expected from witnesses of that class. On the other hand, the defendant, D'Mello, has not only given what appeared to me to be candid and straightforward evidence himself but has supported some of his contentions at least by the testimony of credible and unimpeachable witnesses such as Brewin and Templeton. There cannot be the least doubt, I think, but that D'Mello not only purchased a share in the partnership but immediately assumed predominant control of it and from the 3rd of October 1914 to the 19th of April 1915 was in effect the sole manager of the Printing Press without any notice or suspicion of the plaintiff's claim to be a mortgagee of the entire plant. On the 19th of April 1915, becoming aware, I suppose, of Vaz's intended suicide, the plaintiff and his men hastened to the Press to assert their rights and declare that the plaintiff was mortgagee in possession. This led to a serious fracas on the morning of the 22nd. Complaints were made in the Police Court and the plaintiff was fined for trespass.

These being the material facts, all of which I hold to be proved beyond reasonable doubt, I have to consider what is the legal position of the parties and to determine their relative rights and liabilities in the light of the facts so found.

I should mention that the first mortgage, Exhibit B, was for Rs. 2,000 at 18 per cent. interest. On the 27th of February 1915, about three months after the partnership between D'Mello and Vaz had been constituted, Vaz is alleged to have borrowed a further sum of Rs. 1,000 from the plaintiff and to have executed a further charge, at the same time re-affirming the earlier mortgage, by the document F in the present case. That paper contains no allusion whatever to what was then an undoubtedly existing partnership between Vaz and D'Mello. It contains a list of all the Press plant and a statement that that plant had been assigned by a writing to the plaintiff on the 11th of March 1913. The rate of interest upon the total sum of Rs. 3,000 thus charged upon the plant of the Minto Printing Press was thenceforward to be 12 per cent. per annum.

The case has occupied me a considerable time, because it raises questions which have long interested me and upon the true legal answers to which I have for years felt much doubt. For that reason I have throughout suggested points and invited Counsel to collect authorities bearing upon them, which might serve, if possible, to elucidate some definite and intelligible principle. I am much indebted to the industry and patience of the learned gentlemen on both sides, who have laid before me in this way a very great number of cases, both Indian and English, so enabling me to take a comprehensive survey of the whole of this most difficult and much vexed field of the law. Many of the cases cited proved to have no direct bearing upon what I understand to be the material question of law standing here to be answered, but all of them have illustrated other points of equity or law indirectly bearing upon the main question. I think that the result has been to show how very difficult it is to extricate, from the mass of authority thus entangled by many converging and interpenetrating doctrines of the English Law, any satisfactory ground upon which to rest, in this country at any rate, what seems to have become settled as the legal doctrine of the mortgage of moveables. I have always felt almost insuperable theoretical difficulties in the way of making any such doctrine suitable for practical application by the Courts in this country: indeed of its establishment at all as a proper extension of the corresponding doctrine governing the mortgage of immoveables. It might be thought that what is easy to state theoretically and administer practically in regard to immovable might be as easy to state and apply in regard to moveable property. This is by no means the case, and were the matter res integra, I should have no hesitation in deciding upon grounds of public policy, quite apart from theory, that the Courts have no business to recognise the mortgage, in the wider sense, of mere chattels. In the Statute Law of India it would be difficult to find anything making it imperative upon Courts to acknowledge any such doctrine. In the 3rd section of the Transfer of Property Act, amongst other definitions, the definition of a chose in action mentions the hypothecation of moveables as though that were an accepted part of the law of this country, and, again in the Stamp Act, section 2, clause 7, the like words are to be found. Elsewhere I do not believe that it would be easy to discover in the sufficiently voluminous Statute Law of this country any warrant for the assertion that the Courts of India are bound to recognise a mortgage of moveables. Nor after having considered the case-law, both of this country and England, which has gone to establish that doctrine, very carefully and critically for many years, am I able to discover any authority, in reason or equity, adequate to establish it. If, however, it is to be taken as a part of the law of India, and in the existing state of the case-law I suppose it must be, then it is very necessary to examine the essential ingredients of the mortgage of moveables and so arrive at a clear understanding not only of the nature of the legal notion but of all its legal consequences in relation to others who may have dealings with or rights in the moveables so mortgaged.

We may take it on the authority of all the text-book writers that a mortgage of moveables can be as validly effected by parole as by a writing, and that the immediate effect of such a mortgage is to pass the property in the chattels mortgaged from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It is altogether unnecessary that actual possession of the chattels should be given. Thus, unlike a mortgage of immoveable property, which, no matter what its value, can only be effected in this country by a writing or a transfer of possession, mortgages of chattels, having the effect of immediately transferring the property thereunder from the mortgagors to the mortgagees, can be made by mere parole and without the transfer of possession. It is only necessary to dwell for a moment upon this, in particular relation to the known conditions of life in India, to realise how heavily weighted such a doctrine must be with the gravest potentialities of mischief. I can hardly imagine any other legal doctrine that might be more mischievous or open a wider door to fraud and interminable litigation. There is no possibility, as far as I can see, of drawing any distinction between the so-called mortgages of moveables made by a few spoken words, unaccompanied by possession, and the like mortgages made by the most correct and artificial documents, accompanied by possession. The only possible justification which occurs to me for having accepted and enforced the principle of the mortgage of chattels in this country lies in the needs of considerable traders. Very true, in times of pressure and difficulty a trader may need large advances on the security of his stock-in-trade, and that security might be withheld if the stock-in-trade, whatever it might be at the time the payment was called for, could not be made primarily liable. Obviously too, the creditor could not take more than symbolical possession of the stock-in-trade without defeating the very object of the loan. So that in cases of that kind there might be a reason for permitting the hypothecation of moveables on a large scale by the execution of properly drawn formal documents duly registered. But as the doctrine has been imported in its entirety from England, its application in this country must be regarded as co-extensive with its application in England before a plentiful crop of abuses had necessitated the passing of the Bills of Sale Acts. And in England it was quite enough for any one borrowing to hypothecate orally anything and everything of which he might then be or in future become possessed as security for the loan. In such cases where possession is not taken, it is very easy to see practical difficulties of the most serious kind and put cases in which the results must be anything but equitable. Take the following two very simple illustrations of what is at the present moment passing through my mind. A being in need of money and possessing a gold watch goes out into the street and successively mortgages it to B, C, D and E, in each case for £ 5, the four transactions all occurring on the same day. Now, what are the resultant rights of the mortgagees B, C, D and E? In England the text-book writers at any rate have gone the length of saying that once a mortgage of chattels is created, all the subsequent dealings are to be treated on the same footing and governed by the same principles as the like subsequent dealings in relation to a mortgage proper. But analysis shows that that can hardly be the case where chattels are made the subject of what is called a mortgage immediately transferring the legal estate; because we come at once in conflict with the principle to which expression is given in sections 108 and 178 of the Indian Contract Act. The mortgage of chattels, whether by parole or by a writing, instantly transfers the property in the goods from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, that is to say, immediately on the payment of the price, or loan or mortgage advance. But let this be regarded from whatever point of view be chosen, it works out to this and nothing else, that every hypothecation of that sort is an out-and-out sale subject to a condition that the vendee will re-sell the chattel to the vendor at a certain price and upon certain conditions. But if it be an out-and-out sale, then in the case supposed, the chattel mortgaged remains in the possession of the vendor with the consent of the vendee, and each subsequent oral mortgage becomes a sale in turn. In the case supposed, there could be no possibility of such circumstances existing as would put the second, third and fourth mortgagees, respectively, upon guard, while the possession of vendor would in each case be with the consent of the true owner. So that as far as I can see, in law the last mortgagee would be the only owner of the watch and the three prior mortgagees would have no claim upon it whatsoever. Or upon another view the first mortgagee might have the better claim and the others none. It could hardly be said that like the puisne mortgagees of real estate each had no more than a right to the equity of redemption. For that altogether ignores the very salutary and necessary principle of section 178 of the Indian Contract Act regulating what actually occurs when these mortgages of chattels are effected. The subject is doubtless confused by substituting the word 'mortgage' with all its legal associations for the word 'sale.' But slurring over difficulties by the use of this or that word or the application of special terminology to the matter in hand is but too shallow a way of dealing with what is really going to the root of the principle. And the second illustration I give is that of a trader in active business to whom A lends, let us say, £1,000 on the general faith of his solvency as exhibited by his possessions and more particularly by his stock-in-trade. Ten days later, B advances the same trade £1,000 upon an oral mortgage of every stick and chattel of which he is then or may in future be possessed. And later the trader becomes bankrupt or A takes out execution against him. Adopting the law of the mortgage of chattels, it is obvious that in both cases B will be the secured creditor with all preferential rights over A if in the former he has demanded the possession a day before the bankruptcy, though I am entirely at a loss to see what superior equity he has. It may be argued that A has been lending money upon the faith of reputed chattel possessions and takes his risk of their disappearing before he seeks re-payment. That is undoubtedly true. On the other hand, apart from the doctrine of the mortgage of moveables and assuming that the possessions (chattels) upon which the money is really, though not in so many words stated to be, lent in specie at the time the loan falls due, and supposing there is no question of preference, it is obvious that a creditor's remedy is exactly the same at law whether there be or be not any hypothecation, that is to say, in any money-decree a creditor may attach and sell any or all the property of his judgment-debtor. It thus becomes clear that it is only for the purposes of preference that there is the least need for this hypothecation of moveables. And then, again, it could only be in cases where they, or, at any rate, a part of them or substitutes, in law their equivalents, exist in specie at the time the question of priority arises, that the hypothecation can be of value to the mortgagee. So that it really comes to this, that quite apart from any true equity, the creditor, who has been wise enough to stipulate in so many words that the money he advances is advanced on everything chattel which the borrower may then or thenceforward possess, is to have preference on that account over equally bona fide lenders, unaware of the oral contract, who have not been far-sighted enough to make such a contract of their own at the time of the advance; and it certainly appears to me that here we are faced with a very real difficulty, and with a doctrine of law, which, carried out logically, would certainly do more injustice than justice. For a man in a seemingly good way of business might go on for years borrowing money from creditors lending in good faith upon his apparent prosperity, while in fact everything moveable belonging to him may have been hypothecated orally to some other and earlier creditor, and so upon a case of preference arising, all later creditors would be unable to recover any part of their money: or in the event of each of them in turn having stipulated for the like hypothecation of all the debtor's moveables, a problem would arise, as I have already indicated, of which I do not believe any logical legal solution is possible.

I have felt it necessary to indicate, indeed within the compass of a judgment I can do little more than indicate, some points and lines of reasoning, which, being thoroughly exhausted and followed up, have convinced me that it is eminently desirable that the law of hypothecation or mortgage of moveables is in need of radical reform. This law, it is to be observed, has been transferred bodily from England to India as part of the old common law, and must, therefore, be administered here as it was in England before public policy required its correction and curtailment by the various Bills of Sale Acts. There are no such Acts in this country, and, in my opinion, we should be much better without them, provided that it were legislatively enacted that no Courts should recognize any mortgage of moveables for a less sum than, say, Rs. 5,000 evidenced by a registered writing. That would suffice to meet the legitimate exigencies of trade; and smaller loans upon the hypothecation of chattels, especial or general, should, I think, be ignored, unless they fulfil all the requirements of a pledge. In this country we have a very precise and easily administered law of a pledge. Where money is really advanced upon a chattel and the property in that chattel thereupon passes to the creditor, it is only right that he should take possession of it and so prevent other people lending money to his debtor on the faith of his being the ostensible owner of goods which really do not belong to him. I may note in this connection that several of the cases cited by Mookerjee, J., in the case of Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (1), in support of his conclusion that a mortgage of moveables is recognized and established in this country as well as in England, appear to me to be cases which fulfil all the requirements of a pledge, and the only point with which the English Judges were concerned in those cases was the remedy of the mortgagee. The remedy of a pledgee is limited to sale, whereas in those cases the mortgagee was seeking foreclosure. That is a point with which I am not concerned here, inasmuch as I do not suppose that any Court in this country has yet decreed foreclosure of a chattel alleged to have been mortgaged.

Another point occurs to me in connection with the principal contention of the parties. The facts I have found show that the plaintiff's first loan was made to Vaz before Vaz entered into partnership with D'Mello. The question naturally suggests itself whether in such circumstances a creditor can recover against the partnership in excess of the share owned by his debtor therein. I do not think that the answer to that would be affected by any stipulation such as is to be found in Exhibit No. 3, that the partnership shall not be liable for any pre-incurred debts. It must, at once, I think, be conceded that in the case of a simple money loan not in form professing to be a hypothecation made to a debtor, at that time not a member of any partnership, it could not possibly be enforced against the partnership, that is to say, in the case of a man, for example, who was not engaged in trade at all at the time he borrowed money but a year afterwards enters into partnership and carries on business. Is that conclusion affected by a change in the circumstances? Let it be supposed that A is a sole trader and borrows a sum of money for the purposes of his business. Presently, he takes B into partnership with him. Can the creditor now sue the partnership as a partnership for the money advanced to A as a sole trader? If that money has been employed upon the business and so entered as an ingredient into what actually became the subject-matter of the later partnership, there might be a strong theoretical reason for holding that the partnership was liable as a whole for the antecedent debt. The point is one of considerable nicety. In England the law seems to have been once at least laid down, without any doubt, or for that matter without giving any elaborate reasons, to the effect that A dealing with B, and B thereafter taking C into partnership and notifying A of the fact, A is put to his election upon the receipt of the notice whether to make B solely, or B and C jointly, answerable to him for the result of the dealing: British Homes Assurance Corporation, Limited v. Paterson (2). And in another and much earlier case, Jackson Ex parte (3), the Chancellor was very much perplexed over the law proper to be applied to such a state of facts. There the real debt was an ordinary bond-debt, and the debtor subsequently took two other persons into partnership. I gather from Lord Eldon's judgment that his opinion was that the partnership could not be made liable, if it were a genuine trading partnership, for the pre-existing debt. On the other hand, reasons could easily be suggested why that law might operate very harshly and unjustly. If A advances to B, a sole trader, a large sum of money on the faith of his stock-in-trade, and the next day A having no other means takes nine other persons into partnership with him, it is obvious that a very great injustice might be done to the lender. Such considerations are peculiarly proper to cases of ordinary loans, and having regard to the established legal doctrine of the mortgage of moveables, I do not think that unless a general proposition be firmly established that every partnership was liable for all antecedent debts incurred in the same business prior to the partnership, it could be of any practical value for the purpose of my present discussion, and I am not at all sure that such a general legal proposition ever did warrant it.

I must, therefore, start once more upon the found facts from the point that, on the 11th of March 1913, the whole plant of the Minto Printing Press passed out of the hands of Vaz into those of the plaintiff. The plaintiff on the execution of Exhibit B appears to have become in law, according to the old English doctrine, the true owner of all the property, the subject-matter of this suit. He allowed that property to remain in the possession of Vaz. I shall not again cover the ground in this judgment which I attempted to examine minutely and exhaustively in my judgment in the case of Nandlal Thakersey v. Bank of Bombay (4), touching the true meaning of the word 'possession.' Ever since the enacting of sections 108 and 178 of the Indian Contract Act, notwithstanding the fact that they are designedly worded quite differently from anything to be found in the old English Factors Act and the like, the Courts in India appear to have struggled to confine the application of those sections within the very much narrower meaning prescribed by the terminology of the English Acts. Over and over again very learned and eminent Judges have interpreted those sections as though the word 'possession' meant something very much more than in any known legal sense it does. But if the word had the meaning thus sought to be given to it and no more, many of the very cases which those sections were intended to cover would be excluded from their operation. Reading the sections as they stand, it is only too obvious that they were advisely worded to have much larger and freer scope than the English Factors Act. Commentators, I notice, referring to the discussion which arises over these sections before the Indian Contract Act was passed record, objections to them on the score that they convert the whole of India into a market overt. But confining myself to section 108, at any rate, such an objection appears to be out of place. It is essential that possession should be with the consent of the true owner, and that, just as the proviso to section 178, excludes all cases of property which had been stolen or acquired by any dishonest means. And if the intention of the Legislature had been as the Courts have often enough interpreted it, that is to say, that possession in those sections should mean possession for a limited and specified purpose, it would have been easy enough to say so. The truth is that the sections are enacted for the protection of bona fide purchasers and pledgees and are really grounded upon principles of estoppel. If the true owner of property puts another in ostensible possession of it and holds him out to the world as being fully capable of disposing of and conferring a good title to it, and such a person does dispose of it, the true owner, as far as I can see, has no good ground of complaint against the bona fide purchaser for value. I am not, therefore, disposed now any more than I was in the year 1909 to adopt the very narrow construction put upon these sections in the various decisions of the Indian High Courts. Their language appears to me to be too plain to admit of any doubt, and I do not think that we have any right to go behind that language and limit it by reference to a supposed historical tradition.

In the present case, then, I find that while the true owner of the plant of the Minto Printing Press in October 1914 was the plaintiff, Tehilram Girdhardas, Vaz was in possession with his consent. That being so, had Vaz sold the whole or any part of the property in suit to D'Mello without notice and in the absence of any circumstances putting D'Mello upon inquiry, and D'Mello had paid the sum in good faith, believing Vaz to be the real, as he was the ostensible, owner, then I should have no doubt whatever in holding that D'Mello had acquired a perfectly good and valid title against Tehilram. Unfortunately, that is not what occurred. And a further difficult question arises, viz., what actually passes in such a transaction as that evidenced by Exhibit No. 3 in the present case. It cannot be said that Vaz sold any part of the Printing Press machinery to D'Mello. The contract is that D'Mello is to put Rs. 3,000 into the business and thenceforward is to become a jointowner with Vaz of all the Printing Press plant, etc. Now, persons entering into agreements of partnership, cannot be said to buy anything at all from each other. Both persons remain, as long as the partnership exists, joint owners per mie et per tout of all the partnership assets, and it is impossible to say at the date of the institution of the partnership what any partner may have acquired as consideration for the money he has paid in order to become a partner. That can only be ascertained upon a dissolution of the partnership when all the assets of the partnership, as they stood at the time it was constituted, may have finally disappeared. The most that any partner can be said to buy by putting money into a business in consideration of a partnership share in it is the right upon a dispute to a partnership account and division of any of the assets ultimately found due. It is clear that, on the 3rd of October 1914, D'Mello cannot be said in law to have purchased any part of the property left in the possession of Vaz by the true owner Tehilram. Nevertheless it might be contended that by parity of reasoning and on analogy, D'Mello, in equity, at any rate, should be entitled to exclude from the materials available for the satisfaction of Tehilram's debt one half of the partnership assets after such should have been ascertained upon a winding-up; and that is the view I should very much like to take because I think it is most consistent with the justice of the case; but long and anxiously as I have pondered over it, I am unable to discover any solid legal ground upon which to put it. If there was no sale of any definite chattel to D'Mello in October, it follows that he cannot take the benefit of section 108; and there is no other section in our Statute Law which extends that principle to a case like this. It could be by analogy and by breaking new ground altogether that D'Mello could be brought within the protection of section 108. In my opinion, although the equity of the case is very strongly on his side, as long as this very mischievous doctrine of mortgage of chattels is part of the law of the country, I see no escape from the consequence that Tehilram, the plaintiff, was, on March 11th, 1913, and has since remained, and still is, the true owner of the property in suit covered by the mortgage-deeds of the 11th of March 1913 and the 17th of February 1915. It is not really a case of preference at all. As I understand the law, it is a case of property supposed to belong to A being found to belong to B; and if that be so, any one in possession of it admittedly from A, or claiming through A, would have no case against B. That I take to be the true legal position occupied respectively by D'Mello and the plaintiff in this case.

I have come to this conclusion only after long and anxious reflection and the study of a very great number of cases. I have come to it, too, with great reluctance; because it rests upon a doctrine which I should like to see wholly abolished, or, at any rate, confined within such narrow limits as to make it incapable of lending itself to further frauds and injustice. I am not in a position to make new law. I can only administer the law as I find it to be and understand it. Since there has been no transfer by sale or pledge of any part of the property belonging to Tehilram and left by him in possession of Vaz, it appears to me that his rights over it acquired in 1913 remained wholly unaffected by the illusory partnership, purporting to cover it, entered into between D'Mello and Vaz on the 3rd of October 1914.

I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff, Tehilram, is entitled to bring all the property in suit to sale under his mortgage-deed of the 11th of March 1913, Exhibit B. And as to the second mortgage of the 22nd of February 1915, although there might be some theoretical difficulty in supposing that the amount is advanced on the security of his own property, yet being his own property in law I suppose it will have to be conceded that he is entitled to recover the amount of that charge also from the sale-proceeds.

This suit must now be decreed against both the defendants with all costs.

The order of the 5th of July 1915 to continue.

Liberty to both the sides to apply.

The sale to be effected after six months within which time D'Mello may redeem or settle with the plaintiff if he likes.

Suit decreed.

OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), ss. 70, 79, 80, 85—Date of confirmation of sale—Sale certificate, whether conclusive as to date of confirmation of sale—Adverse possession—Defaulting proprietor adverse possessor of part of estate sold for arrears of, revenue, when becomes—Limitation Act (IX of 1903), Sch. I, Art. 144.

An entry in a sale-certificate as to the date of confirmation of sale cannot possibly affect the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 80 and sub-section (3) of section 85 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. Such entry cannot, under section 85 of the Regulation, be conclusive evidence as to the date of confirmation of sale and the Court is competent to look beyond the sale-certificate to determine the date of confirmation of sale. [p. 240, col. 2.]

Title to property purchased at a sale held under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation vests in the purchaser from the date when the sale becomes final under section 80, and the possession of a person who occupies portions of it becomes adverse to the purchaser from that date, and not from the date when possession is delivered to the purchaser by the Revenue authorities. [p. 240, col. 2.]

A person whose adverse possession of part of an estate has not, at the time of the revenue sale of the estate, continued for the statutory period so as to ripen into ownership, cannot be deemed a defaulting proprietor at the date of the sale. [p. 240, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether Article 144 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit for recovery of possession of part of an estate on declaration of title by a purchaser at the revenue sale from a person who has been in possession as a trespasser. [p. 239, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the first defendant in a suit for declaration of title to land and for recovery of possession thereof. The plaintiffs-respondents claim title to the disputed property by purchase of a share of an estate at a sale for arrears of revenue held on the 25th October 1887, under section 70 of Regulation I of 1886. On the 17th November 1888 the Sub-Divisional Officer issued to the purchasers a sale-certificate, in which it was stated that the sale had been held on the 25th October 1887 in accordance with the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and had been confirmed on the 31st October 1888. The present suit was commenced on the 26th October 1900. On behalf of the defendants, it was contended in the Court below that the suit was barred by limitation. This contention has been overruled by the Subordinate Judge. In this Court, in answer to the contention of the defendant-appellant that the suit is barred by limitation, the plaintiffs-respondents have argued that Article 144 of the Second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act governs the matter. We shall assume that the rule of limitation applicable is contained in Article 144, which provides that a suit for possession of immoveable property, not otherwise provided for in the Limitation Act, must be brought within 12 years from the date when the possession of the defendant became adverse to the plaintiff. The question in controversy is, when did the possession of the defendants become adverse to the plaintiffs in the case before us? On behalf of the plaintiffs it was argued in the Court below that as the sale-certificate recited that the sale was confirmed on the 31st October 1888, the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiffs from that date. This position was contested by the defendants, who raised a question as to the date when the sale became final under the provisions of the Regulation. The Subordinate Judge held that under section 85 the certificate was conclusive evidence as to the date of confirmation of sale. In our opinion this view is clearly erroneous, for sub-section (3) of section 85 lays down that the certificate granted to the purchaser is conclusive evidence of regularity of the proceedings, and does not provide that the certificate is conclusive evidence of the date of confirmation of sale. It is worthy of note that the expression 'confirmation of sale' does not find a place either in section 80 or section 85 of the Regulation. Sub-section (1) of section 80 provides that a sale, on which the purchase-money has been paid and against which no application under section 79 to set it aside has been preferred, shall, subject to the provisions of sections 81 and 82, be final at noon of the sixtieth day from the date of sale, reckoning the date of sale as the first of the sixty days. Sub-section (2), which deals with the case where an application has been preferred to set aside the sale, lays down that a sale against which such an application has been preferred and has been dismissed by the Chief Commissioner or Commissioner, shall, subject to the provisions of sections 81 and 82, be final from the date of dismissal, if more than sixty days from the day of sale, or, if less, then at noon of the sixtieth day as provided in sub-section (1). In the present case, an application was made to set aside the sale. The question is, when was that application dismissed by the Chief Commissioner? We have on the record a letter from the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner to the Deputy Commissioner, in which it is stated that the Chief Commissioner directs the confirmation of the sale held on the 25th October 1887. This letter bears date the 18th September 1888. It is thus plain that the application to set aside the sale must have been dismissed by the Chief Commissioner on or before the 18th September 1888. Consequently, under sub-section (2) of section 80, the sale became final on or before the 18th September 1888, and under sub-section 2 of section 85 the title to the property sold vested in the purchaser from such date. How the entry in the sale-certificate came to be made, is fairly clear from the record. It appears that the letter from the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner to the Deputy Commissioner was communicated to the Sub-Divisional Officer by whom the sale had been held; the latter officer, on the 30th October 1888, recorded an order of confirmation of sale and subsequently issued the sale-certificate which bore date the 7th November 1888. What is stated in the sale-certificate as the date of confirmation of sale cannot, however, operate in law as the date when the sale became final under section 80. But it has been strenuously argued for the respondents that the Court is not competent to look beyond the sale-certificate, and is bound to presume therefrom that under sub-section (2) of section 85, title vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate, that is, from the 7th November 1888. This contention is obviously fallacious. Under sub-section 2 of section 85, the date of the certificate is the date when the sale became final, and under sub-section (2) of section 80 the date when the sale became final is the date of dismissal of the application to set aside the sale by the Chief Commissioner. An entry in the certificate, by the officer who drew up and issued the document, that the sale was confirmed on the 30th October 1888, could not possibly affect the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 80 and sub-section (3) of section 85. We hold accordingly that in this case the sale became final on or before the 18th September 1888. From that date, the title vested in the plaintiffs as purchasers at the revenue sale, and the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiffs prima facie from such date. Consequently, under Article 144 the suit is barred by limitation.

It has been argued as a last resort that as possession was delivered to the purchasers by the Revenue Authorities on the 29th November 1888, the possession of the defendants must be taken to have become adverse to the plaintiffs only from such date, and, in support of this contention, reliance has been placed upon the decision in Mozuffer Wahid v. Abdus Samad (1). That case, even if it be assumed to have been correctly decided, is clearly distinguishable and has no application to the circumstances of this case. In that case, this Court applied to a revenue sale of an entire estate the principle laid down by the Full Bench in Juggobundhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (2) in relation to delivery of possession as between a decree-holder and a judgment-debtor. It was ruled by the Full Bench that in such a case, in contemplation of law, both the parties, that is, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, must be considered as present at the time when the delivery is made and that, consequently, as against the judgmentdebtor, the symbolical delivery thus given must be deemed equivalent to actual possession. The Full Bench, however, proceeded to observe that as against third parties, that is, persons not parties to the decree, this symbolical possession, as it is called, would be of no avail, because they are not parties to the proceeding. A similar principle has been applied by a subsequent Full Bench in the case of Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (3) as between an execution-purchaser and the judgment-debtor. Even if we assume, therefore, as was done in the case of Mozuffer Wahid v. Abdus Samad (1), that this principle is applicable as between a purchaser at a revenue sale and the defaulting proprietor, the doctrine would have no application to persons other than the defaulting proprietor, as was pointed out in the case of Mir Waziruddin v. Lala Deoki Nandan (4). Now, in the case before us, the appellant was not a defaulting proprietor. The case for the plaintiffs is that the appellant had no interest in the property sold; he was a trespasser and was, at the time of the revenue sale, in adverse possession of lands which are really included in the estate sold but which he claimed as situated within a neighbouring estate owned by him. His adverse possession, according to the plaintiffs, had not at the time continued for the statutory period so as to ripen into ownership. The principle recognized in Rahim-ul-din v. Bhabingana Debya (5) had consequently no application and he could not be deemed a defaulting proprietor at the date of the sale. He was thus a stranger to the proceeding for delivery of possession, and the symbolical delivery alleged to have been effected on the 25th November 1888 could not avail as against him. We hold accordingly that the suit is barred by limitation; and in this view it is needless to discuss the interesting questions as to the true effect of sections 70 and 72 of Regulation I of 1886 which have been ably argued before us by Counsel on both sides.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside in so far as it is not a decree by consent of parties, and the suit dismissed with costs. This order will not affect the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it was a decree by consent of parties. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at fifteen gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

still several duties to perform for the principal, which almost necessarily came into conflict with the agent's interests, and that the principal was, therefore, entitled to repudiate the transactions under sections 211 and 215 of the Contract Act. [p. 245, col. 2; p. 246, col. 2.]

Where, however, a commission agent having purchased goods for future delivery from an outsider, closed the transaction on the due date by selling the same to himself on the market rate, the latter transaction was held binding on the principal, as the transaction was not disadvantageous to the principal and brought about no conflict of interests between the agent's duty to his principal and his own interests as a purchaser. The agent, however, was held not entitled to any commission on such a transaction. [p. 247, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Assanmal Bulchand, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue as commission agents in Karachi to recover from defendants a sum of Rs. 2,522-3-0, alleged to be due on their account for the purchase and sale of grain for the defendants, a firm trading at Bareilly in the United Provinces. The account referred to is in respect of only two contracts on behalf of the defendants, the first for the sale of 150 tons of barley and the second for the purchase of 50 tons of wheat and the subsequent transactions relating to those contracts.

The defendants in their written statement plead (1) that these contracts were in direct contravention of their instructions and are, therefore, not binding on them, and (2) that the transactions in question were also otherwise illegal. They claim, therefore, that the suit should be dismissed with costs. Without prejudice to the above, they further submit that they are not liable in any case for brokerage, commission, etc. The following issues were accordingly framed:

1. Did plaintiffs buy and sell goods for defendants according to the instructions of the defendants?

2. If not, were plaintiffs entitled to buy and sell as they have done?

3. Are plaintiffs entitled to brokerage, commission, and interest? If so, how much?

4. What is due to plaintiffs?

At the trial the 2nd issue was found to be based on the allegation that the plaintiffs had dealt on their own account in the business of the agency with regard to two contracts in question, and the issue is really narrowed down to one, whether the defendants are entitled to repudiate the transactions sued on under section 215 of the Indian Contract Act.

The main facts are as follows:—The defendants had admittedly sent one Badriparsad or (Badridas) to Karachi as their representative for certain purposes, and the two contracts referred to above appear to have been entered into on his initiative.

On the 9th July 1912, the plaintiffs sent a telegram in Badridas's name to the defendants to the effect that they had sold 150 tons of barley at the rate of Rs. 24-12-0, and the next day they wired that they had bought 50 tons of wheat at the rate of Rs. 31-1-0 on the previous day (Exhibits 22 and 23). On the 11th July they sent a letter to the defendants confirming these two telegrams, with the exception that the rate of wheat is given in the letter as Rs. 31-2-0 instead of Rs. 31-1-0, and stating that Badriparsad had made these transactions on defendants' account (Exhibit 58). Accompanying this letter were two contract notes of which the first (Exhibit 59) states that 150 tons of barley had been sold in the market. On the 15th July, the defendants, wrote a post card (Exhibit 9) to the plaintiffs acknowledging receipt of this letter and stating that they had credited and debited the amount accordingly. They added, "but in future do not sell or purchase without my writing to you. Please note that. Be writing to me".

No further correspondence appears to have passed between the parties until the 24th August 1912, when defendants wrote a letter (Exhibit 63) to the plaintiffs. In that letter the defendants, after mentioning that plaintiffs had not written before and asking them to write to them, state that Badridas had fallen ill and returned. They then gave instructions to the plaintiffs to receive 1,107 bags of barley from one Hiranand Versimal at Rs. 24-12-0 and to purchase 700 bags from the market with profit and give delivery. This must have been received by the plaintiffs about the 28th August, on which date they sent a telegram (Exhibit 24) to the defendants saying that they were taking delivery of 1,107 bags from Hiranand Versimal, and that they had bought 700 bags at Rs. 28. There was, however, some hitch about getting the bags from Hiranand and on the 31st August plaintiffs sent defendants an urgent telegram (Exhibit 25) informing them of this and asking them to wire Hiranand to give the barley. The next day they sent another telegram (Exhibit 26) informing defendants that they had bought 1,100 bags of barley at Rs. 29-8-0. Meanwhile on the 29th August, plaintiffs had sent defendants a letter (Exhibit 61) acknowledging receipt of defendants' letter (Exhibit 63) and confirming the telegram (Exhibit 24). They added that Hiranand had promised to give delivery of the goods, but that if he failed to do so by 31st August they would on that day purchase on defendants' account from the market and make delivery.

As regards the wheat contract nothing further appears to have passed between the parties until the 28th of September, when plaintiffs sent a telegram (Exhibit 27) as follows:—

"No reply. Wheat 29-6 reply in wire 48 hours put in fix or sell otherwise will sell market rate" On the 30th September they sent a further telegram (Exhibit 28) "No wire sold wheat 50 tons 29-4 new rule."

The plaintiffs' accounts regarding these transactions (Exhibits 16 and 29) show (and it is not disputed) that the 150 tons of barley, August delivery, sold by the defendants were purchased not by any outside merchant but by plaintiffs themselves, although in Exhibit 59 they informed the defendants that the barley had been sold "in the market". In Exhibit 16 it is stated that the 150 tons were bought for the plaintiffs through brokers Chiranjilal and Rughunath, but plaintiffs' witness Radhakishen admits that he can show no entries of payments to the brokers, and the only one of them that was called as a witness, namely Rughunath, says nothing about being paid the amount of brokerage on this transaction. This is, however, explicable, as it appears brokers are not paid separately for each transaction, and there is evidence that at any rate Rughunath was employed as a broker, for he produces a kobala of 9th July 1912 (Exhibit 51) regarding 75 tons of barley, in which the plaintiff Jankidas Banarasidas is shown both as purchaser and seller. I think this kobala is genuine, but it is rather difficult to see why a broker should be employed in a transaction where the purchaser and the seller are the same person, unless it is done merely with a view to justify a charge for brokerage in the constituent's account. So far as I am aware, there was no constant fluctuation of market rates so as to make the employment of a broker desirable for the purpose of settling the rate [cf. Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, 3rd Edition, page 566, foot-note (s)].

In this kobala the last date for delivery is given as the 30th August, but Rughunath explains that he does not know whether there are 30 or 31 days in August and that he wrote 30th August under the supposition that it was the last day of the month. This explanation is probably true, and in any case the point is of no material importance. As already mentioned, the defendants on 28th August sent instructions regarding the delivery of barley in fulfilment of their contracts of sale and in Exhibit 63 told the plaintiffs to purchase 700 bags from the market. Admittedly, however, these 700 bags were sold to the defendants by the plaintiffs themselves at Rs. 28-8-0 on the 28th August 1912 (Exhibits 12 and 17), although in Exhibit 6 the plaintiffs impliedly represent the purchase as one from the market. In Exhibit 17 the words 'dookan khata' (shop account) showing that the transaction was made by plaintiffs themselves has admittedly been first written and then scored out, and the transaction is shown as one on the account of "Murlidhar Pahalajrai", which is admittedly a pseudonym for plaintiffs' private transactions. The 1,100 bags, which, in Exhibit 61, the plaintiffs said they would purchase from the market on the 31st August, in the event of Hiranand failing to give delivery, were also really sold to the defendants by plaintiffs themselves, see Exhibits 18 and 45 in which the bags are shown as sold on the account of the same "Murlidhar Pahalajrai". These bags were also sold to the defendants not on the 31st August, but on the 1st of September. In the plaintiffs' account, Exhibit 31, regarding these barley transactions there is a further debit to the defendants of Rs. 191-12-0 on account of $6\frac{1}{2}$ candies of barley, which admittedly were not purchased by them. It is apparently inserted because the 1,800 bags of barley already referred to only accounted for $506\frac{1}{2}$ candies instead of 513 candies which make up 150 tons (Exhibit 12).

As regards the contract for the purchase of wheat, the plaintiffs' sowla noonah entry regarding this shows 50 tons of wheat, September delivery, as sold to the defendants on the account of Javhermal Hemandas through broker Radhakishen (Exhibit 20). The defendants' Pleader contended that this was a fictitious entry and that the wheat was really sold to the defendants by the plaintiffs. In support of this, at the time of his closing arguments, he relied on the fact that the entry, Exhibit 48, regarding the original purchase of this wheat by Javhermal Hemandas first showed it as of August delivery, subsequently corrected to September delivery.

The original entry of August might, however, have been a mistake, and in order to clear up this point I allowed plaintiffs to adduce further evidence. The original contract with Messrs. Ralli Brothers Exhibit 69 has been produced and shows clearly that the contract referred to in Exhibit 48 was really for September delivery. Radhakishen, Exhibit 12, says that Javhermal was a constituent of the plaintiffs, and although there is no full evidence on the record about it I see no reason to disbelieve his statement. The remaining 50 tons out of the contract for the purchase of 100 tons from Ralli Brothers are alleged to have been bought for Shival Charanjilal and Dilsukhdas Gobindram, and Exhibits 66 to 68 point to these being genuine transactions. Similar evidence had not been adduced as regards Javhermal, but I think on this point the plaintiffs' account books may be relied on and that if the transaction had really been one for plaintiffs' own shop account it would have been shown as on account of Murlidhar Pahalajrai as in the case of the transactions regarding the barley contract referred to in Exhibits 17, 18 and 29.

Though, in my opinion, the plaintiffs did not sell the wheat to defendants, yet they admittedly bought it from defendants on the 30th September, (Exhibits 12 and 21). The transaction resulted in a loss to defendants, as they bought the wheat at Rs. 30 a candy (new rules) and sold it to the defendants at Rs. 29-4-0. Similarly Javhermal incurred a loss, as he bought from Ralli Brothers at Rs. 30-8-0 a candy and sold it to defendants at Rs. 30. This sufficiently explains why no payment was made or credit given to Javhermal on account of the defendants' failure to carry out their contract with him; and objections of this kind which were raised by defendants' Pleader, only wasted time and confused the real issue.

The main question in this suit is, whether the defendants are entitled to repudiate the transactions sued on (a) as being contrary to their directions or (b) because plaintiffs dealt on their own account in the business of the agency without defendants' knowledge or consent (sections 211 and 215, Contract Act). So far as the first point is concerned, the defendants clearly ratified their servant Badriparsad's action in entering into the two contracts of 9th July by their post-card Exhibit 9. It is, therefore, unnecessary to inquire what authority Badriparsad had to make those contracts on defendants' behalf, nor would any oral evidence regarding this be likely to be reliable. But Badriparsad in his evidence on commission (Exhibit 11) says that he asked the plaintiffs to sell the 150 tons of barley in the market and he never told them to buy the goods themselves at the market rate. So far as the statement is concerned, I think his evidence may be safely accepted, because it is corroborated by the fact that plaintiffs, though they really bought the 150 tons themselves, represented to the defendants in Exhibit 59 that they had been sold "in the market" and said nothing about their being the purchasers. If Badriparsad had authorised them to buy the 150 tons themselves, this would almost certainly have been stated in their letter Exhibit 58, and the misrepresentation in Exhibit 59 would not have appeared. But even if Badriparsad gave no definite instructions to plaintiffs on the question whether they should get the defendants' offer to sell accepted by an outsider, or accept it themselves, if they wanted to the effect will be just the same. Plaintiffs themselves represented that the 150 tons had been sold in the market, and under section 193 of the Contract Act the ratification of the defendants by Exhibit 9 must be taken as one limited to a sale in the market, as opposed to one to plaintiffs themselves. By Exhibit 59, plaintiffs themselves practically show that their instructions were to sell the 150 tons in the market, as Badriparsad says they were; and the subsequent ratification by Exhibit 9, for the reason just given, does not help plaintiffs: cf. Damodar Das v. Sheeram Das (1). Consequently I hold that plaintiffs did not act according to the instructions of defendants in regard to this contract.

The sale to plaintiffs also, I think, clearly comes within the scope of section 215 of the Contract Act as a transaction which can be repudiated by the principal. In the first place, the fact that plaintiffs had bought the barley was concealed from the defendants; not only that but there was a misrepresentation on the point. I think that there can be no doubt whatever that this concealment was dishonest. It was done with the intention of causing wrongful gain to the plaintiffs (cf. section 24 Penal Code), because they were thereby in a better position to keep any benefit which might result from the transaction contrary to the provisions of section 216, Contract Act, and to charge for brokerage, etc., as if it was a transaction with an outsider. The entry of the purchase in the khata of Murlidhar Pahalajrai (Exhibit 29) is also one which savours of dishonest concealment, although it is only fair to plaintiffs to say that they have made no attempt to conceal the fact that this khata is the one relating to shop transactions. At the same time it is doubtful whether the words 'any material fact' in section 25 include the fact of the agent dealing on his own account with the business of the agency, and the context and illustration (a) rather suggest the contrary. I do not, therefore, rely on this point in holding that the case falls under section 215.

The dealing of plaintiffs on their own account was, however, clearly disadvantageous to the defendants, because the contract was one for future delivery, and plaintiffs as agents for defendants still had duties to perform for defendants which would almost necessarily come into conflict with their interest as the actual purchasers from the defendants.

The mere possibility of the agent's duty to his principal and his own interests being in conflict is, I think, sufficient to bring the case under section 215, since the possibility of this conflict is in itself a disadvantage to the principal. This has been recognised in the case of Damodar Das (1) already cited, where at page 734 it is stated: "An agent must never place himself in a position in which it is possible that his duty to his principal and his own interests would stand in opposition to each other, and on this principle it has been held that an agent employed to settle a debt cannot purchase it on his own account." Again in Jochimson & Co. v. Meghji Valji (2), Chandavarkar, J., citing the passage in Story on Agency, page 262, section 210:—"In matters touching the agency agents cannot act so as to bind their principals where they have an adverse interest in themselves," describes it as "a principle which is fully recognised in the Indian Contract Act." In the same paragraph 210, Story says:—

"This rule is founded upon the plain and obvious consideration, that the principal bargains in the employment for the exercise of the disinterested skill, diligence, and zeal of the agent, for his own exclusive benefit. It is a confidence necessarily reposed in the agent, that he will act with sole regard to the interests of his principal, so far as he lawfully may; and even if impartiality could be possibly presumed on the part of an agent, where his own interests are concerned, this is not what the principal bargains for, and in many cases it is the very last thing which would advance his interests."

(2) 3 Ind. Cas. 801; 34 B. 292 at p. 307; 11 Bom. L. R. 779.

This paragraph in Story on Agency was cited with approval in the two English cases of Salomons v. Pender (3) and Andrew v. Ramsay and Co., (4). In cases like this, where the agent's duty to his principal continued after the purchase of defendants' forward contract to sell, I think the law in India must clearly be treated as the same as it is in England.

There is also evidence that this conflict of interests on the part of the plaintiffs was in fact disadvantageous to defendants. In their post card of 15th July (Exhibit 9) defendants told plaintiffs not to sell or purchase in future without instructions from them in writing, and asked plaintiffs to keep writing to them. It appears, however, from defendant's letter of 24th August (Exhibit 63) that plaintiffs had not written to them at all upto then. Also the evidence of Rallis' clerk, Exhibit 64, shows that there was already a rise in the rate of barley from Rs. 25 to 28 in August. If plaintiffs had been wholly disinterested they might have sent defendants information about this rise, which would have enabled defendants to buy barley earlier in August at a cheaper rate than that eventually charged against them: but the plaintiffs gave them no such information, and on the contrary it was in their interests as prospective sellers to defendants to wait as long as possible, so that they might get an advantage to themselves from the rising rates, and they even charged defendants the higher rate of September 1st, instead of the rate of August 31st, which should have been charged in view of their letter Exhibit 61.

No doubt the rate at which the plaintiffs bought the barley from defendants is now shown to have been below the market rate. The rate of Rs. 24 (new rule) quoted by Rallis' clerk (Exhibit 64) was for barley deliverable by 25th July and not 31st August; and even if it be taken to be the right rate for August delivery, it is only about $1\frac{1}{2}$ anna over the rate of Rs. 24.12.0 (old rule) at which the contract in suit was made. This difference might be due to Rallis' being able to obtain slightly better rates than native merchants in the bazar, and plaintiffs have shown that they entered into other barley contracts on the 9th July at Rs. 24-6 0 and Rs. 24-9-0 (Exhibits 53 and 54). So far then as the rate is concerned, the transaction was not disadvantageous to defendants. But this is not sufficient to counteract the other disadvantages already mentioned, and in view of those disadvantages the defendants are entitled to repudiate this transaction under section 215. For the reasons already given they can also repudiate it under section 211.

The same remarks apply to the cross-contracts of purchase of 1,800 bags of barley in August on defendants' behalf. These were sold to defendants by plaintiffs themselves, although defendants' instructions regarding the 700 bags were to purchase them 'from the market' (Exhibit 63) and plaintiffs had similarly undertaken to buy the 1,100 bags from the market. They would scarcely have undertaken this unless they understood these to be defendants' instructions, as in the case of the 700 bags. Accordingly these purchases were not in accordance with defendants' instructions. The sale of 1,100 bags at the rate of 1st September instead of 31st August was also contrary to plaintiffs' own undertaking in Exhibit 61. Defendants are entitled to repudiate these transactions both under section 211 and section 215. There was dishonest concealment of the fact that the sale of the bags was by plaintiffs themselves (Exhibits 17, 18, 45 and 61) of a kind already mentioned in regard to the original contract; and the rate of Rs. 29-8-0 charged in respect of the 1,100 bags and the fictitious $6\frac{1}{2}$ candies was disadvantageous to defendants, having regard to the fact that plaintiffs had undertaken to purchase on 31st August (Exhibit 61), when according to their own books the rate was Rs. 29-4-0 (Exhibit 44).

I, therefore, hold that plaintiffs are not entitled to the difference of Rs. 2,066-4-9 claimed in respect of these barley transactions. The authorities already cited show they are also not entitled to brokerage, commission or interest in respect of these transactions. In any case the brokerage claimed in respect of these transactions has not been proved.

The wheat transactions are, however, on a somewhat different footing. In this case, for the reasons already given, I hold that the sale of 50 tons to defendants on account of Javhermal Hemandas was a genuine transaction, and not a sale by plaintiffs themselves. The cross-contract of sale to the plaintiffs on 30th September was not disadvantageous to the defendants merely on account of any conflict of interests between plaintiffs' duty as agents and their own interests as purchasers, because the transaction closed the wheat contract and plaintiffs no longer owed any duty as agents to defendants with regard to it. It did not matter to defendants to whom the wheat was sold, so long as this was done at the market rate. No doubt according to Exhibit 64 the rate for barley—ready goods—on 30th September was Rs. 29-8-0 and not Rs. 29-4-0, the rate charged to defendants in Exhibits 21 and 41. But the difference may be explicable as already suggested; and I think that this evidence alone is insufficient to justify the Court in holding that Rs. 29-4-0 was not the proper rate in the market on the 30th September. In fact there was some doubt in the evidence (cf. Exhibit 64) as to whether Rs. 29-4-0 or Rs. 29-8-0 was the rate for that day, as the former was the rate that he first gave but subsequently corrected to Rs. 29-8-0.

In this transaction there was also not the same misrepresentation that the sale was 'in the market' as there was in the barley transactions. Also plaintiffs did not withhold information as to the state of the market from defendants, as they did in the other case. In Exhibit 61 the rate for wheat, September delivery, is given, and the opening words "No reply" in plaintiffs' telegram of 28th September (Exhibit 27) afford, I think, reliable evidence that plaintiffs had made some communication to defendants about the wheat contracts, which has been withheld by defendants. In this telegram they asked for instructions and gave defendants notice that otherwise they would sell at the market rate (not 'in the market') so in this case there was no implied promise not to sell to themselves. As defendants gave no contrary instructions, though they had time to do so, the ordinary rule that 'silence gives consent' applies, and the sale was not one contrary to any instructions of the defendants.

No doubt, if it was shown that plaintiffs had made a profit out of their sale of 50 tons of wheat to the defendants, the defendants would be entitled to claim this from the plaintiffs, but this is not shown, at any rate as regards the wheat itself. It has not been shown at what price plaintiffs sold the wheat which they bought from defendants, nor is any such claim set up in defendants' written statement. The case is quite different from that in Damodar Das v. Sheoram Das (1), where the agents first substituted their grain for the principal's and then sold the latter at a profit, and where a distinct claim to this profit was made by the principal. As pointed out in Joachimson & Co. v. Meghji Valji (2), section 216 is merely enabling and if a principal does not claim the benefit of it, he cannot come in under it. But defendants have distinctly challenged plaintiffs' right to commission, and so far as that is concerned defendants are entitled to take advantage of section 216. The principle laid down in the leading case of Salomons v. Pender (3) applies here. As Bramwell, B., said in that case: "It is true that . . . the defendant has had the benefit (if it be one) of the plaintiff's services. But the defendant is in a position to say, 'what you have done has been done as a volunteer, and does not come in the line of your duties as agent'". Accordingly I hold that plaintiffs are not entitled to any commission in respect of the sale by defendants to plaintiffs of 50 tons wheat. It appears from Exhibit 41 that the commission at 8-annas per cent. has been calculated on the price of wheat bought by defendants (viz. Rs. 5,136-1-8), that is the opening transaction, whereas in Exhibit 31 it has been calculated on the later of the two transactions. In Exhibit 43 it has been calculated on the first transaction. Comparing these entries it is clear that plaintiffs' practice is to calculate it on whichever transaction gives the higher figures and so put more commission in their pockets. In the circumstances half of the commission must fairly be allocated to each of the two transactions. Therefore I hold, that plaintiffs are not entitled to recover Rs. 12-13-6 out of Rs. 25-11-0 charged as commission in respect of the wheat transactions.

The claim for brokerage in respect of this account has also not been proved. The broker Radhakishen through whom the purchase from Javerhmal is alleged to have been made (Exhibit 20) has not been called as a witness, and the broker's noondh book was not filed in Court (Exhibit 12, line 260), nor have any entries of payments for brokerage been shown or proved. With the brokerage must also go out the charges for charity, etc., which really form part of the brokerage charges.

The telegram and postage shown in Exhibit 13 have not been disputed and may be allowed, except as regards the postage charges included in the item of Rs. 15-14-6, which have not been shown separately.

I, therefore, disallow the item of Rs. 2,181-2-0 in respect of the 150 tons of barley, and allow only Rs. 147-3-0 instead of Rs. 174-11-6 in respect of the 50 tons of wheat.

The result is that plaintiffs' claim (excluding interest) is reduced from Rs. 2,365-1-0 to Rs. 157-6-6. I allow interest on this sum at 6 per cent. per annum from 1st October to date of suit, i.e., Rs. 9-10-0.

Before concluding I may note that, as the question is of considerable commercial importance, I have taken time to consider this judgment. But the law embodied in sections 215 and 216 of the Contract Act is clear and must, I think, be given effect to in this case. It may no doubt be true that commission agents in Karachi are in the habit of dealing on their own account in the business of the agency without the knowledge and consent of their constituents: they probably profit by doing so, and unless the practice is checked by the Courts, it will doubtless continue. Some evidence has been given by plaintiffs as to such a practice, but it is certainly quite insufficient to establish a notorious trade usage which would bind defendants. And according to the law in England such a usage, even if proved, being both illegal and unreasonable, would not be binding on a principal not proved to have known it and agreed to be bound by it: see Robinson v. Mollett (5) and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 10, pages 269, 270, sections 492, 493. The remarks in section 493 are appropriate to this case, viz.:

"When a considerable number of men of business carry on one side of a particular business, they are apt to set up a usage which acts very much in favour of their side of the business. So long as they do not infringe some fundamental principle of right and wrong, they may establish such a usage; but if on dispute before a legal forum it is found that they are endeavouring to enforce some rule of conduct which is so entirely in favour of their side that it is fundamentally unjust to the other side, the Court has always determined that such a usage, if sought to be enforced against a person in fact ignorant of it, is unreasonable, contrary to law, and void".

No doubt under section 1 of the Indian Contract Act, a trade usage may be valid, though it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Contract Act: Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandas (6). But before giving effect to any such usage the Courts will, of course, require strict proof of it. In Bombay a usage of the kind in question has been held legally established in the case of what are known as 'pakki adat' transactions: Bhagwandas Narotamdas v. Kanji Deoji (7) but such a usage was held to be unavailable in a case where (as in this one) the plaintiffs sued as commission agents and neither pleaded nor proved the usage sought to be relied on: Chandu Lal v. Sidhruthrai (8).

For the above reasons I pass a decree for the recovery of Rs. 156-13-0 from defendants and dismiss the rest of plaintiffs' claim. As plaintiffs have substantially failed they must bear their own and half defendants' costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 23—Occupancy holding, rendering unfit of, for tenancy—Holding market on portion of holding, whether makes it unfit for tenancy—Injunction, grant of.

The withdrawal of one-tenth portion of an occupancy holding from actual cultivation for a purpose totally unconnected with agriculture, such as the establishment of a market, renders the holding unfit for the purpose of the tenancy within the meaning of section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Where some of the landlords of an occupancy holding, in whose favour a deed of release has been executed by the tenants and to whom possession of one-tenth portion of the holding has been relinquished for the purpose of enabling them to hold a market thereon, attempt to erect structures and hold a market thereon, the other landlords are entitled to restrain them from executing their design [p. 250, col. 1.]

Section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is applicable not only to cases where the land (of an occupancy holding) is made permanently unfit but also to cases where it is made temporarily unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 20th March 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, Chikandi, dated the 28th March 1912.

Babus Joges Chunder Roy and Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Satis Chandra Bhattacharya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this appeal is a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding. The first three defendants hold this tenancy, which comprises 20 bighas of land, under the plaintiffs-respondents and the other defendants, now appellants, as their landlords. It appears that the tenant-defendants on the 5th January 1911, executed a deed of release in favour of the landlords-defendants, to whom they also relinquished possession of one-tenth of the area of the entire holding. The object of this release was to enable the landlords-defendants to erect structures thereon and to hold a market on the site. This, indeed, is admitted in the written statement of the landlord-defendants, who allege that as the plaintiffs had oppressed the shop-keepers of the neighbouring market, the defendants attempted to set up another market in order to protect the shop-keepers from tyranny and for the convenience of the people of the village. It has also been found that the defendants had commenced to construct huts on the land when this suit was instituted on the 18th January 1911 for a two-fold purpose, namely, first, to eject the defendants, and secondly, to obtain an injunction to restrain the defendants from altering the character of the land. The Trial Court granted complete relief to the plaintiffs. Upon appeal by the defendants, the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the claim for ejectment on the ground that partial surrender by the tenants in favour of the landlords-defendants did not operate as a forfeiture of their tenancy, though it might not bind the plaintiff landlords. The Subordinate Judge, however, has maintained the decree for injunction. On the present appeal, the defendants have urged that the injunction should be withdrawn.

Section 23 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which defines the incidents of occupancy right, provides that when a raiyat has a right of occupancy in respect of any land, he may use the land in any manner which does not materially impair the value of the land or render it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. In the present case, it has not been disputed that the purpose of the tenancy was agricultural. As there is no evidence to show that the land would be materially impaired in value by the establishment of the proposed market, the only question in controversy is whether what the defendants have done or intend to do on the land is calculated to render it unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. It has been argued, with reference to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Hari Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narayan Singh (1), that in order to determine this question, it is essential that the Court should have regard to the size of the holding, the area withdrawn from actual cultivation, and the effect of such withdrawal upon the fitness of the holding taken as a whole for profitable cultivation. But the case mentioned is clearly distinguishable. There the purpose for which a portion of the holding was withdrawn from actual cultivation was, according to the finding of the District Judge, directly connected with agricultural pursuits, namely, the erection of buildings suitable for indigo manufacture. In the case before us, the purpose for which a portion of the land is sought to be withdrawn from actual cultivation is totally unconnected with agriculture, for what the defendants seek to do is to establish a market on the site. It is immaterial that the market will occupy not more than one-tenths of the area of the entire holding; that circumstance cannot affect the nature and character of the unauthorized act. This is clearly a case where, if the defendants are permitted to execute their design, they will render the holding unfit for agriculture, for which purpose alone the land was let out to the tenants-defendants. It has been argued, however, that the establishment of the market would not permanently render unfit the land for the purposes of the tenancy and that consequently the act is not objectionable under section 23. We are not prepared to accept this contention as well-founded on principle. Section 23 is applicable not only to cases where the land is made permanently unfit, but also to cases where the land is made temporarily unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. The main contention of the appellants, consequently, fails and the order for an injunction must be supported.

It is plain, however, that the injunction has been too broadly formulated and requires modification. The injunction which restrains the defendants from changing the character of the disputed land in any way so as to render it unfit for agriculture, merely reproduces the phraseology of the Statute without any attempt to adapt it to the facts of the special case before the Court. We direct accordingly that the order of the Court below be modified and that the injunction do run in these terms: The defendants are restrained from erecting structures on the disputed land and holding a market thereon. The respondents are entitled to their costs of this appeal, as the appellants have substantially failed. •

Appeal dismissed; Order modified.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 37—Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 213—'Fraudulent preference,' meaning of—Plea of fraudulent preference, whether can be put forward by debtor to avoid liability.

In order to succeed on a plea of 'fraudulent preference' it must be shown that the substantial or dominant object in making a payment was to give preference to a particular creditor in order to prevent the rateable distribution of the property of the debtor among all his creditors. [p. 251, col. 2.]

It cannot be inferred where a creditor has been pressing for his debt and payment is made to avoid the pressure. [p. 251, col. 2.]

Fraudulent preference cannot be pleaded by a debtor in defence to a suit filed against him in order to avoid his own obligation and not for the benefit of the creditors generally. It can be pleaded, if at all, only in the Insolvency Court. [p. 252, col. 1.]

Mr. Mulchand T. Asarpota, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Hirdaram Mewaram, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, the endorsee, sues to recover Rs. 1,000-0-0 and interest from the defendant No. 1, the drawer of a promissory note drawn in favour of the defendant No. 2, the Sind Baluchistan Bank.

The defendant No. 1 pleads that the promissory note was never intended to be acted upon but was drawn merely for the accommodation of the Tatta Branch of the Bank and that there was no right of negotiation conferre don the defendant No. 2, the Sind Baluchistan Bank. Defendant No. 1 also pleads that no consideration was paid for the negotiation, and that in any case the negotiation was of no effect as it amounted to fraudulent preference on the part of the Bank.

The defendant No. 2, the Sind Baluchistan Bank, has not contested this claim. It is under liquidation under the Companies Act.

Now it appears that when the People's and Credit Banks failed difficulties arose for the Sind Baluchistan Bank and on the 26th September 1913, the promissory note in suit (Exhibit 14) was drawn by defendant No. 1 in his private capacity in order to bolster up the credit of the Tatta Branch of the Bank. The defendant No. 1 was interested in the matter, being the manager of the Karachi Branch of the Bank and being a share-holder of the Bank. The promissory note was negotiated on the 25th of November 1913 according to the endorsement upon it. It has been suggested that the negotiation was actually made on a later date, but no evidence has been adduced to that effect. On the 29th of November 1913, the Sind Baluchistan Bank closed its business and it has been alleged, though the date has not been definitely proved, that in the following February a petition was filed for winding-up the affairs of the Bank under the Companies Act.

There can, in my opinion, upon these facts, be no doubt that the promissory note was negotiable and was validly negotiated by the endorsement upon it on behalf of the Sind Baluchistan Bank. The defendant No. 1 has alleged that the promissory note was drawn simply for the purpose of being shown to the customers of the Tatta Branch of the Bank, but was not actually to be used to raise money to support the credit of that branch. He has not, however, been corroborated by any other evidence and his allegations cannot stand. It would, moreover, amount to pleading his own fraud—namely, that he had deliberately drawn a bogus promissory note to deceive customers into the belief that the sum mentioned therein was available to meet the liabilities of the Tatta Branch and to prevent their withdrawing their deposits from the Bank. No evidence at all has been adduced to show that the endorsement on the promissory note was not made authorizedly on behalf of the Bank. And the presumption that it was a valid endorsement must prevail under section 118 (g) of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

There was also, in my opinion, good consideration for the negotiation. A sum of Rs. 500 was still due to the endorsee upon an unpaid fixed deposit and as cash was not available, the promissory note was endorsed in his favour on the understanding that he should recover therefrom the Rs. 500 due to him and pay the balance of the money, when recovered, to the Bank. This has been proved by the endorsee's statement corroborated by the documents (Exhibits 15 and 16) and the evidence of Mr. Chabaldas, the attorney for the liquidator of the Bank. No evidence, on the other hand, has been adduced to displace the presumption in favour of consideration arising under section 118, clauses (a) and (g), of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Lastly, the defendant cannot, in my opinion, succeed on the plea of fraudulent preference. Such a plea could only be successful if it were proved that the substantial or dominant object was to give preference to the particular creditor in order to prevent the rateable distribution among all the creditors of the property of the Bank. That has not been proved here, for the evidence of the endorsee has clearly established the fact that he had been vigorously pressing for the repayment of the amount due to him on the fixed deposit, and he has been corroborated by the documents (Exhibit 15) including his Pleader's letter and by the evidence of the attorney of the liquidator of the Bank. No evidence whatever has been adduced to show that the offer to pay came from the Bank. The precise meaning of the term "fraudulent preference" has been clearly indicated in paragraph 471 of Volume 2 of Halsbury's Laws of England, where it is shown that it cannot be inferred in such circumstances.

But apart from this it has not, as a matter of fact, been proved that the alleged fraudulent preference occurred within three months of the liquidation, for it has not been definitely proved on what date in February, if it was in February at all, that the liquidation petition was filed. No fraudulent preference has, therefore, in any case been established within the meaning of section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act read with section 213 of the Companies Act, 1882. Finally, fraudulent preference cannot apparently be pleaded here, where it has been raised merely with the object of avoiding the debtor's own obligation and not for the benefit generally of the creditors. It could be pleaded, if at all, only in the Insolvency Court as pointed out in the case of Willmott v. London Celluloid Co. (1) and in the same case on appeal [Willmott v. London Celluloid Co. (2)]. The same conclusion results from a consideration of the words "invalid accordingly" and "wound up under this Act" occurring in the 1st clause of section 213 of the Companies Act of 1882.

It follows from what has been said that my findings on the issues must be:—On the issue—whether the promissory note was validly endorsed, in the affirmative; on the issue whether it was endorsed for consideration, in the affirmative; and on the issue whether the negotiation amounted to fraudulent preference, in the negative. There must, therefore, be a decree for Rs. 1,000 principal with Rs. 33-13-8 interest upto date of suit and with further interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit to payment with costs against both defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Suit decreed.

In an auction sale held under section 70 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, what is sold is the estate and the purchaser is entitled to take that estate as against the defaulting proprietors. [p. 253, col. 1.]

Where, at the time a revenue sale takes place under section 70 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, 1886, a person has by adverse possession acquired a good title to a portion of the estate sold, he is also a defaulter by reason of section 63 of the Regulation and cannot assert a good title as against the purchaser as an unrecorded proprietor. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof with mesne profits. The litigation, which was commenced on the 24th August 1900 and has lasted well nigh for fifteen years, has passed through various stages; but the facts material for the decision of the question in controversy at this the final stage may be briefly recited.

The plaintiff purchased an estate sold under the provisions of section 70 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, on the 14th February 1890. The sale was confirmed on the 23rd August 1890. The plaintiff asserts that the lands now in dispute are comprised in Mouza Ghora Dumbar included in the estate purchased by him. The defendants contend on the other hand that the lands are comprised in Mouza Pitaboi owned by them; and they concede that they have no interest in Mouza Ghora Dumbar. The Judge has found that according to the thak map prepared in 1861 the lands in dispute are comprised within the estate purchased by the plaintiff; but he has also found that the defendants have been in possession ever since the time of the thak. The question in controversy is, what are the rights of the plaintiff as purchaser at a sale under section 70 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, as against the defendants? It is not disputed that the plaintiff at the time of his purchase was an unrecorded proprietor of the estate. Consequently, the provisions of section 71, which lays down that the property sold under section 70 shall be sold free of all encumbrances previously created thereon by any other person than the purchaser, have no application; for the third clause to the proviso to that section expressly lays down that nothing in the section shall apply when the purchaser is a recorded or unrecorded proprietor or settlement-holder of the estate. The rights of the plaintiff must accordingly be determined with reference to the terms of section 70 alone. That section is in these terms: When an arrear has accrued in respect of a permanently settled estate or of an estate in which the settlement-holder has a permanent, heritable and transferable right of use and occupancy, the Deputy Commissioner may sell the estate at an auction. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, it has been argued that what is sold is the estate and that the purchaser is entitled to take that estate as against the defaulting proprietors. This contention is clearly well-founded. What, then, is the position of the defendants? They have failed to establish that the disputed lands are comprised within their property. They have, however, proved possession for more than 12 years before the date of the revenue sale. Consequently, at the time when the revenue sale took place, they had by adverse possession acquired a good title to the disputed land as against the proprietors of the estate in which it was included. No doubt, they professed to hold these lands as part of their estate; but that could not affect the position of the Government nor effect a division of the estate for revenue purposes. Consequently, on the 14th February 1890, when the sale was held by the Deputy Commissioner, the estate was the property of the original proprietors as also of the defendants who had acquired a good title to a portion thereof by adverse possession. In these circumstances, it is clear from the terms of section 63 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, that the defendants were defaulters; and once it is held that they were at the time defaulters, the inference is irresistible that they cannot assert a good title as against the purchaser.

The result is that the declaration of title and the decree for possession made in favour of the plaintiff by the District Judge must be maintained. But it is plain that the title to this property has been in great uncertainty, as is amply indicated by the varying fortunes of the parties in different stages of this protracted litigation. This is pre-eminently a case where no costs should be allowed to the successful litigant, nor mesne profits decreed. While, therefore, we maintain the decree of the Court of Appeal below as regards declaration of title and possession, we vary it in two respects: we direct that each party pay his own costs throughout the litigation and we disallow all claim for mesne profits up to this date.

Appeal dismissed; Decree modified.

ASWINI KUMAR AICH—PLAINTIFF—

versus

SARADA CHARAN BASU AND OTHERS—
DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. X, ss. 106, 109, scope of—Withdrawal of suit under s. 106, when bars civil suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1 (3).

Order XXIII, rule 1 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, in the absence of permission to bring a fresh suit, precludes the plaintiff from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim from which he has withdrawn; but the withdrawal of a suit without permission to bring a fresh suit under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, for a declaration that the entry of the defendant's name in the Record of Rights as the owner of a share in a houla was not correct, does not bar a suit in the Civil Court for declaration of the plaintiff's title to and for recovery of possession of the said share. [p 255, cols. 1 & 2]

The bar under section 103 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar only in respect of matters which are legally the subject-matter of the investigation made under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 255 col. 2.]

ASWINI KUMAR AICH v. SARADA CHARAN BASU.

Questions relating to declaration of title to and recovery of possession of immoveable property are entirely foreign to the jurisdiction of a Revenue Officer under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, his work being confined to a decision of the point whether the entry in a Record of Rights is correct or not. [p. 255, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Backerganj, dated the 23rd December 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Perojpur, dated the 23rd July 1913.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysack (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghosh), for the Appellant.—The prayer expressly was that we might withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, that was our application and the order passed thereon was “permitted to withdraw suit.” The order does not reject the suit, otherwise the order would have been such, nor there are the words ‘with liberty to bring fresh suit’ added to the order. Moreover, under Order XXIII, rule 1, one may withdraw from the suit at any time or abandon part of the claim. What was the subject-matter of the suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act? The proper scope of a suit under section 106 is the matter which is contained in a Record of Rights. There cannot be a suit for ejectment under section 106, vide, Pran Krishna Saha v. Trailakhya Nath Chowdhury (1), an earlier case is that of Kali Sundari Debya v. Girija Sankar Sanyal (2). This section is confined to proceedings to see whether entries are correct or not. In the present plaint there is no prayer for correction of entry. None of these prayers is a proper prayer under section 106. A suit can certainly be brought for declaration of title and possession. It sounds strange that a suit about property, say, of the value of Rs. 10,000 can be shut out, which should have gone up to the Privy Council, by the judgment of the Revenue Officer in a proceeding under section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 107 of the Bengal Tenancy Act finality is attached to the decision of a Revenue Officer. There is no decision here. Decision here means decision on the merits. If the case is dismissed for default [see Parbati v. Toolsi Kapri (3)] or withdrawn, then there is no decision. Decision means adjudication on the merits and does not include dismissal for default. The present suit cannot be barred by section 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Even assuming for the sake of argument that the scope of section 106 is the same as the scope of the present suit, still there is no res judicata; as there is no decision on the merits, it cannot have the effect of a decree. Section 109 also cannot help the other side, it must have a restricted application. A suit in the Civil Court for fair rent would have the same scope as a proceeding under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act; and if the suit is withdrawn without liberty to bring a fresh suit, a fresh suit in a Civil Court is not barred under section 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, Oheolath v. Tulsu Singh (4). Section 109 is not a bar where there is no decision on the merits.

Babu Asita Ranjan Ghose, for the Respondents.—The order here is “permitted to withdraw the suit” and nothing more, and we cannot go behind the records. The order implies that the Judge was against him as to leave being granted to bring a fresh suit. Section 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, is clearly a bar and section 109 too is a bar to bring a fresh suit for recovery of possession. This section does not mean that the suit is to be finally decided. What is the utility of section 109 if it was not to prevent multiplicity of suits? In the present case the property is the same and the parties are the same. The plaintiff cannot bring a fresh suit to frustrate the ends of justice. If he loses the suit under section 106, can he bring a fresh suit with respect to the same property in a Civil Court? I submit he cannot.

Reply not called.

JUDGMENT.—In a Record of Rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff was recorded as the owner of $\frac{2}{3}$ rd of a howla and the defendant

(2) 11 Ind. Cas. 184; 15 C. W. N. 974.

KASHINATH VINAYAK BHAVE v. RAMA DAJI KALE.

of the remaining $\frac{1}{3}$ rd. The plaintiff brought a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for a decision that the entry was not correct. That case was heard and remained pending for delivery of judgment. In this state of things, the plaintiff made an application to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The order on the application was: "The plaintiff is allowed to withdraw." No order was made that he was permitted to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action.

The plaintiff then brought this suit in the Civil Court and his prayers are, first, that his title to the $\frac{1}{3}$ of the howla recorded in the name of the defendant be established; secondly, that his title by adverse possession to the same be established; thirdly, for recovery of possession of the same, if necessary; and fourthly, for any other relief that he may be entitled to.

Among other issues, issue No. 3 framed by the learned Munsif was—"Is Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act a bar to the maintainability of the present suit?" At the hearing, this issue was not pressed. In his judgment, he says: "Issue No. 3 was not pressed at the Bar" and he decreed the plaintiff's suit.

The defendant appealed and in his grounds of appeal he did not even mention that any provision of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a bar to the suit. The learned Judge, however, at the hearing took up the issue in bar under Chapter X and held that the suit was barred under Order XXIII, rule 1, sub-rule (3) of the Civil Procedure Code, because the plaintiff had not obtained the permission of the Court to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action.

We are clearly of opinion that the learned Judge is wrong in his conception of the law on this point. Order XXIII, rule 1, sub-rule (3), in the absence of permission to bring a fresh suit, precludes the plaintiff from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim from which he has withdrawn. Now, the subject-matter of the petition under section 106 was the correction of the Record of Rights; the subject-matter of the suit in the Civil Court, however, is not the same. The plaintiff does not even make any prayer of this kind. The prayer is for declaration of title and for recovery of possession. These matters are entirely foreign to the jurisdiction of the Revenue Officer under section 106, his work being confined to a decision of the point whether the entry in the Record of Rights is correct or not. Supposing he holds that the entry is correct, that does not preclude the plaintiff from bringing a suit in the Civil Court to have his title declared and possession restored. The bar under section 100 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar only in respect of matters which are legally the subject-matter of the investigation made under the chapter and of decisions thereunder.

In this case, the subject-matters of the two proceedings, that is, of the proceedings under section 106 and of this suit, are entirely different and whether the suit under section 106 was disposed of in one way or another, the present suit is not barred.

In this view of the case, we set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the case for decision on the merits.

Costs will abide the result.

KASHINATH VINAYAK BHAVE v. RAMA DAJI KALE.

A holder of a decree for sale upon a mortgage, in default of payment of instalments ordered under section 15 (b) (1) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not required to apply under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, 1903, to make the decree final before he can apply for sale of the necessary portion of the property under section 65 (b) (2) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. [p. 256, col. 1.]

Civil Reference made by the District Judge, Ahmednagar.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, amicus curiæ, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. A. G. Desai, amicus curiæ, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—We are obliged to the learned Pleaders who, as amici curiæ, have assisted us with their arguments in this case.

This is a reference under Order XLVI, rule 1, from the learned District Judge of Ahmednagar, and the question, which is propounded to this Court, is in the learned Judge's words this: whether a holder of a decree for sale upon a mortgage, in default of payment of instalments ordered under section 15 (b) (1) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, must apply under Order XXXIV, rule 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, to make the decree final before he can apply for sale of the necessary portion of the property under section 15 (b) (2) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

In my opinion the answer should be in the negative.

It is true that by section 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act it is provided that, except in so far as the Civil Procedure Code is inconsistent with that Act, the Code shall apply in all suits and proceedings before Subordinate Judges under that Act. But, as it seems to me, the kinds of procedure laid down by the Civil Procedure Code and the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act respectively in the matter of sales in mortgage suits are inconsistent one with the other. By rules 4 and 5 of Order XXXIV of the Code a plaintiff-mortgagee must obtain both a preliminary decree for sale and upon his separate application a final decree for sale before the mortgaged property or sufficient part thereof can be sold. But section 15 (b), sub-sections 1 and 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which provide for the sale of mortgaged property under that Act, contain, as I read them, materially different provisions. Sub-section 1 of the section empowers the Court, in its discretion in making a decree for sale, to direct that the amount payable by the mortgagor under the decree shall be payable in instalments, and sub-section 2, which is the important provision, is in these words:

"If a sum payable under any such direction is not paid when due, the Court shall, except for reasons to be recorded by it in writing...order the sale of such portion only of the property as it may think necessary for the realization of that sum."

It is necessary to contend on behalf of the judgment-debtor, and accordingly it has been contended, that the words which I have read mean no more than that the Court shall make a decree directing that in default of payment of the instalment the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof shall be sold. But the words which I have cited do not say that: they say a great deal more than that, and, as I think, must be taken to mean what they say, that is, that the Court shall make an out-and-out order for sale; nor is there anything in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to suggest that anything more than this order is required for the purpose of bringing the property to actual sale.

Although, as Mr. Desai has urged, the general scheme of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is to assist or favour the indebted defendant, I can see nothing repugnant in the construction which I have put upon the words of section 15 (b). For, the scheme of this section, making special allowance for instalments and requiring that only a portion of the mortgaged property shall be sold, seems to me to differ entirely from the general scheme of Order XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code. Under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the mortgagor is favoured in these two respects, that he is enabled to make easy payments and that only a sufficient portion of his property is sold on the failure to pay any instalments. I see no difficulty in holding that that is the limit of the concessions which the Legislature was making in his behalf, and in my view neither the principle of those concessions nor the words of the Statute suggest that the intention was that, on the failure to pay each particular instalment, the mortgagee would not only have to obtain a definite order under sub-section 2 of section 15 (b), but would also have to follow it up at some later period by making a fresh application in each case and obtaining from the Court a fresh order. I am of opinion that the order made by the Court under subsection 2 is the order contemplated by the Legislature as effecting without more the sale of the requisite portion of the property.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Answered accordingly.

Specific performance of contract for sale, suit for—Plaintiff, what to show—Tender.

In a suit for the specific performance of a contract the plaintiff has to show, first, that he has performed or has been ready and willing to perform the terms of the contract on his part to be then performed and secondly, that he is ready and willing to do all matters and things on his part thereafter to be done. A default on his part in either of these respects furnishes a ground upon which the action may be resisted. [p. 257, col. 2; p. 258, col. 1.]

A plaintiff who as purchaser brings a suit for the specific performance of a contract for sale, is not entitled to the assistance of the Court if he defaulted to tender the balance of the consideration on or before the date fixed for the completion of the contract, even though it is proved that such tender, if made, would never have been accepted by the defendant-vendor. [p. 258, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendant in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale, made orally on the 1st February 1911. The price was fixed at Rs. 400; one rupee was paid on the date of the agreement, which was to be carried out and completed within ten days. The case for the plaintiff is that on the 5th February, he paid a second instalment of the consideration, namely, Rs. 104 and, that, although he subsequently offered to pay the balance, Rs. 295, the defendant did not accept the money and wrongfully refused to execute the conveyance. The defendant denies the alleged payment of Rs. 104, and the Courts below have concurrently found in his favour on this point. He contends that this is not a case where a Court of Equity will decree specific performance, for the plaintiff has failed to perform his part of the obligation, and never tendered Rs. 399 as the balance of consideration. The Trial Court gave effect to this contention, refused specific performance and made a decree for refund of one rupee. The Subordinate Judge has reversed this decree and has held the plaintiff entitled to specific performance as soon as he pays into Court Rs. 399 to the credit of the defendant. On the present appeal, the decision of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed as erroneous in law.

The principle applicable to cases of this description is well-settled. The plaintiff who seeks specific performance of the contract has to show, first, that he has performed or been ready and willing to perform the terms of the contract on his part to be then performed; [Bungseedhur Mullick v. Calcutta Auction Company (1); Ram Tunoo Koondoo v. Mullicka Dossee (2); Ghillis v. McGhee (3); and secondly, that he is ready and willing to do all matters and things on his part thereafter to be done [Walker v. Jeffreys (4); Vishvanath Atmaram v. Bapu Narayan (5)]. A default on his part in either of these respects furnishes a ground upon which the action may be resisted [General Bill-posting Company v. Atkinson (6)]. In the case before us, it was obligatory upon the plaintiff as the purchaser to tender the balance of the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 399 to the vendor-defendant on or before the 11th February 1911. This he did not do; consequently, there was a default on his part in the performance of an essential term of the contract. But he contends that this default is immaterial, for a tender of what has now been found by the Courts below to be the true amount of the unpaid purchase-money, would have been of no avail because, as the Subordinate Judge has found, the defendant was anxious to resile from the contract and would have unquestionably refused to accept the money. The argument in substance is that non-performance on the part of the plaintiff is really attributable to the default of the defendant, and the defence is not sustainable, because, as pointed out in Hotham v. East India Co., (7), non-performance of the plaintiff is excused when that has resulted from the default of the defendant. Here, however, the default on the part of the plaintiff was not due to default on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff defaulted to tender the balance of the consideration; all that is urged is that tender of the full amount would never have been accepted by the defendant. That, if true, does not, in our opinion, improve the position of the plaintiff. There was a breach of obligation on his part, and he is, consequently, not entitled to the assistance of the Court.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below. The amount, if any, deposited by the plaintiff pursuant to the decree of the Subordinate Judge will be returned to him.

Appeal allowed.

Bill of exchange—Consignment of goods—War, declaration of, effect of—Acceptance—Royal Proclamation (12th December 1914), whether retrospective—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 32, 43.

A German resident in Hamburg drew a bill of exchange upon the defendants on the 24th June 1914 in favour of the plaintiffs for a certain amount payable at thirty days' sight to the order of the plaintiffs—value received—which the drawees were to place to the account of the drawer as advised. The bill purported to be drawn upon the defendants against 50 bales of goods bearing a certain mark per S. S. Lichtenfels, a German steamer. It was presented with the shipping documents and accepted on the 20th July 1914 payable at the office of the plaintiffs in Bombay. The S. S. Lichtenfels reached Bombay just before the outbreak of the war and in order to evade capture left Bombay and took shelter in a neutral port. The bill was presented for payment on the due date with the shipping documents for the 50 bales attached but was dishonoured by non-payment. The plaintiffs brought this suit, alleging that the British Government had made arrangements by which consignees of cargo per S. S. Lichtenfels could obtain delivery and they averred their readiness and willingness to hand over the documents against payment of the amount due under the bill.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed, inasmuch as if the acceptance was unqualified the defendants were bound to pay on the due date, and if the acceptance was qualified they were bound to pay "at or after maturity" when the money was demanded after the Proclamation dated the 12th December 1914, whereunder consignees were permitted to take delivery of goods from enemy ships in neutral ports. [p. 260, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Proclamation of the 12th December 1914 is not retrospectively operative for the purpose of validating a contract rendered invalid by the war but operates to permit performance, before it is too late, of the condition alleged. [p. 260, col. 2; p. 261, col. 1.]

MOTISHAW & CO. v. MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LTD.

Mr. Strangman (with him Mr. Campbell), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are a British Bank carrying on business in Bombay. The defendants are a firm of merchants, British subjects, carrying on business also in Bombay. On the 24th June 1914, George Alberti, a German, resident in Hamburgh, drew a bill of exchange upon the defendants in favour of the plaintiffs for £65-0-6 payable at thirty days' sight to the order of the plaintiffs—value received—which the drawees were to place to the account of the drawer as advised. The bill purported to be drawn upon the defendants against 50 bales of goods bearing a certain market per S. S. Lichtenfels, a German steamer. The plaintiffs allege, and it is not disputed, that the bill was purchased by them in London for its full value and sent out to the plaintiffs in Bombay. It was presented to the defendants for acceptance with the shipping documents relating to the bales of goods mentioned in the bill. It was accepted on the 20th July 1914 payable at the office of the plaintiffs in Bombay. The bill, therefore, would fall due for payment on the 22nd August. The S.S. Lichtenfels reached Bombay just before the outbreak of war and in order to evade capture left Bombay and took shelter in the neutral port of Marmagoa, where she has since been lying. The bill was presented for payment on the due date with the shipping documents for the 50 bales attached but was dishonoured by non-payment. This suit was filed on the 30th September 1915, and it has been alleged in the plaint that the British Government had made arrangements by which consignees of cargo per S.S. Lichtenfels can obtain delivery, and the plaintiffs averred their readiness and willingness to hand over the documents against payment of the amount due under the bill.

The defence is contained in paragraph 4 of the written statement. It is to the following effect—that the documents consist of an invoice signed by an alien enemy, a bill of lading signed by the captain of a German steamer with a blank endorsement thereon by an alien enemy, and an open policy of insurance of the North China Insurance Company countersigned by a German firm; and the defendants submit that the acceptance was a qualified acceptance, subject to the condition that the documents should be tendered to the defendants by the plaintiffs and that the defendants should be put in a position to get the delivery of the goods referred to in the bill of lading on C. I. F. C. I. terms. They admit the presentation of the bill for payment on due date, but submit that war having broken out in the meantime and in view of the Royal Proclamation issued on the 5th August 1914 and the Ordinances and Orders issued by the British and Indian Governments, the defendants were precluded from accepting the shipping documents tendered, against which the payment of the bill was asked for, and that consequently it became impossible for the plaintiffs to perform their part of the contract subject to which the defendants accepted the bill of the exchange.

The Proclamation relied upon was published in Simla on the 10th of August 1914 and in Bombay on the 13th of August. It warns all persons not to obtain from the German Empire any goods, wares or merchandise, or obtain the same from any person resident, carrying on business, or being therein; nor to trade in any goods, wares or merchandise coming from the said Empire, or from any person resident, carrying on business, or being therein; nor to enter into any new commercial, financial, or other contract with or for the benefit of any person resident, carrying on business, or being in the said Empire. By a Proclamation, dated the 12th December 1914, all British subjects residing or carrying on business in British India were authorised to make payments for the purpose of obtaining their cargoes in neutral ports to the agents of shipowners resident in an enemy country. At the time of suit, therefore, the plaintiffs were in a position to tender documents to the defendants under which the latter would be able to get delivery of the goods referred to therein.

The plaintiffs contend that the defendants' acceptance was unconditional and that, as the shipping documents for the goods mentioned in the bill of exchange were tendered at the time of presentation for payment, they are entitled to payment according to the terms of the bill and the acceptance.

They rely upon the cases of Robinson v. Reynolds (1), Thiedemann v. Goldschmidt (2) and Leather v. Simpson (3), all cases of bills drawn against bills of lading found to be forged and presented by indorsees for value. It is doubtful whether these cases can be used in favour of a party to a negotiable instrument. The plaintiffs here are the payees for whose protection the bill of exchange was drawn.

The law applicable to the case is contained in sections 32 and 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Section 32 provides: "In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the maker of a promissory note and the acceptor before maturity of a bill of exchange are bound to pay the amount thereof at maturity according to the apparent tenor of the note or acceptance respectively, and the acceptor of a bill of exchange at or after maturity is bound to pay the amount thereof to the holder on demand"; and section 43 provides: "A negotiable instrument made, drawn, accepted, indorsed or transferred without consideration or for a consideration which fails, creates no obligation of payment between the parties to the transaction."

The drawee's acceptance here may be regarded from two points of view. The plaintiffs say it is an unqualified and absolute acceptance, as the acceptor has added no qualifying words. The acceptor says it is qualified being drawn on him against goods and he need not pay till he is put in a position to receive the goods.

From either point of view the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed. If the acceptance was unqualified the defendants were bound to pay on due date; as Beaman, J. said: "they accepted unconditionally the obligation to repay the moneys advanced really on their account by the Bank to Alberti before the war broke out,"—if the acceptance was qualified they were bound to pay "at or after maturity" when the money was demanded after the Proclamation of December whereunder consignees were permitted to take delivery of goods from enemy ships in neutral ports. Time is not of the essence and the claim of the plaintiffs may be enforced so long as it is not barred by limitation: see Snith v. Fertue (4).

It was contended on the authority of Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank (5) that the property had not passed to the defendants who would not be entitled to claim the goods from the S. S. Lichtenfels as owners. But it is stated by Cotton, L. J., in the case cited that "if the bill of lading has been dealt with only to secure the contract price, there is neither principle nor authority for holding that in such a case the goods shipped for the purpose of completing the contract do not on payment or tender by the purchaser of the contract price vest in him." That is precisely the case here. The vendor dealt with the plaintiffs and drew the bill of exchange in their favour only to secure the contract price, which was to be treated in the defendants' accounts as paid to the vendor: therefore, on payment to the plaintiffs the defendants can claim the goods.

The fact that by the declaration of war the German shipowner's contract became void is not conclusive of the case, as it was in Esposito v. Bowden (6) followed in the recent case of Karberg v. Green (7). The contract here was between the British acceptor and the British payee, subject possibly to a condition which might be fulfilled after due date. All that was necessary for the fulfilment of the condition alleged was a license to take delivery from the enemy ship. That license was conferred by the Proclamation of the 12th December 1914. The Proclamation is not retrospectively operative for the purpose of validating a contract rendered invalid by the war, but operates to permit performance, before it is too late, of the condition alleged. The consideration for the acceptance, therefore, did not fail.

As soon as the last-mentioned Proclamation was notified the plaintiffs were, to use the terms of the 4th issue, in a position to make a valid tender of the documents relating to the goods. There must be a decree for the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' suit was only filed, however, on the 30th September 1915. We think that a fair order regarding interest on the amount of the bill of exchange sued on will be that it should only run from that date, though it must not be inferred from this that the plaintiffs would not, in our opinion, be entitled to succeed but for the Proclamation of December. Subject to this variation, we affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

A lambardar Gaontia of a village in the District of Sambalpore has authority, according to custom, to make settlement of raiya lands without the consent of his co-sharer Gaontias. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether he can grant a permanent lease of such lands. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Sambalpore, dated the 4th February 1913, reversing that of the Munsif, Sambalpore, dated the 19th August 1912.

Babu Satish Chandra Ghose, for the Appellants, Babu Surat Kumar Mitra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiffs prefer this appeal. They are co-sharer Gaontias in a village in the District of Sambalpore to the extent of twelve annas. Defendant No. 1 is another co-sharer Gaontia with an interest of two annas, and he is also the lambardar Gaontia. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are co-sharers to the extent of the remaining two annas.

The case for the plaintiffs is that the lambardar took proceedings in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner for the ejectment of two tenants from their lands, obtained an order for their ejectment and took possession of their land on July 21st, 1909; and then without their approval granted a lease of the land to defendant No. 5, Dibakar. The plaintiffs say that the lambardar had no authority to grant such a lease, and that they served a notice on him warning him not to grant a lease, and they claim to be put in khas possession of the land to the extent of their interest.

The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit, but this decision was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge on appeal.

The suit as originally framed related to the land of a third tenant also, but in the lower Appellate Court that part of the claim was withdrawn. So we are concerned now only with the land from which two tenants were ejected under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner.

The lower Appellate Court has reversed the Munsif's finding about the notice said to have been sent by the plaintiffs to the lambardar, and consequently we need not consider whether such a notice would affect the lambardar's powers.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the lambardar did grant a permanent lease of the land to defendant No. 5, and settled that defendant on the land after ejecting other tenants, and that in settling the defendant on the land he acted within the scope of his authority. We are asked to hold that this decision is wrong, and that the lambardar could neither settle a tenant on the land still less grant him a permanent lease without the consent of the co-sharers, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to khas possession. For information about the status of Gaontias and the lambardar Gaontia we have consulted Mr. Russell's Report on the Settlement of Sambalpur District, published in 1883. That contains a full account of the whole matter. It appears that the first point to be decided is the nature of the land, that is to say, whether it was included in the Gaontia's bhagra-land or was part of the land let to tenants on a rent assessed by the Settlement Department. It was cultivated land, so it must fall within one of those two classes. The Munsif does not refer to this point at all, but before the learned Subordinate Judge it is clear that the land was treated as rai-yati land, that is assessed land held by rai-yats, for the Judge more than once refers to it as rai-yati land, and no objection is taken to this description in the grounds of appeal.

JOGESWAR RAI v. KESHO PERSAD SINGH.

Now as the land was assessed land, for the rent of which the lambardar was liable to Government, it would seem to be the duty of the lambardar after ejecting one set of tenants to settle another tenant on the land as quickly as possible. As pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, the lambardar does settle tenants: Bhagirathi (P. W. No. 2) says, "Whenever any tenant surrenders, he (i.e., the lambardar, for defendant No. 5 must be a mistake for defendant No. 1) takes it; whenever any tenant has to be ejected he ejects him; * * * he gives leases to tenants for all kinds of lands." In the light of this statement by one of the plaintiffs it is clear that the lambardar was acting within the authority allowed to him by custom in settling the land with defendant No. 5. It follows that the plaintiffs cannot obtain khas possession. It is not necessary to consider whether the lambardar could grant a permanent lease. All that is decided by the lower Appellate Court is that the lambardar had authority to make the settlement, and that, therefore, the claim for khas possession must fail.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

Landlord and tenant—Joint tenancy—Rent, suit for—Parties, necessary—Tenant, liability of, to pay whole rent.

Ordinarily a rent suit is not properly constituted unless it is brought against all the recorded tenants. [p. 263, col. 1.]

There is no presumption in Bihar that in every joint tenancy there is also a several promise by which each joint tenant agrees to be bound for the whole rent. [p. 263, col. 1.]

Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Narain Bhadra, 7 Ind. Cas 840; 12 C. L. J. 642; 15 C. W. N. 191; Ram Taran Chatterjee v. Asmatullah, 6 C. W. N. 111, referred to.

Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi, 11 C. W. N. 1026, not relied upon.

Plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of rent against three joint tenants of an occupancy holding, two of whom filed a compromise petition admitting the rate claimed, and a decree was accordingly passed. The third defendant got the decree set aside as against himself, on the ground that he had not been properly served. In a subsequent suit for arrears of rent against the same persons, he was again not served:

Held, (1) that the admission of the rate of rent claimed by the two defendants did not amount to a promise to pay the whole of the rent themselves; [p. 263, col. 1.]

(2) that as the third defendant had not been properly served the suit must be dismissed. [p. 263, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 31st July 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Buxar, dated the 9th January 1914.

Moulvi Mohammed Mustafa Khan, for the Appellant.

Rai Bahadur Krishna Sahay (with him Messrs. Pravash Chandra Mitter, Susil Madhav Mullick and Chandra Sekhar Prasad Singh), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the landlord and the first and second defendants are two brothers Jogeswar and Baleswar, who are minors represented by their uncle Gharbaran Rai, and the third defendant is Ram Autar, son of Madho Rai; all three defendants jointly hold an occupancy holding. In 1905 the plaintiff brought a suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Madho Rai for the rents for the years 1309 to 1311 Faslis at the rate of Rs. 136-6 per year. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appeared in that suit and filed a compromise petition accepting the rate claimed. A decree was accordingly passed at that rate, but Madho Rai subsequently brought a suit and got the decree as far as he was concerned set aside on the ground that he was not properly served.

In 1909 the plaintiff again came to Court and brought a suit for the arrears for 1312 to 1315 Faslis impleading defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Madho Rai. All the three defendants contested the suit and admitted only a rental of Rs. 70. The Court, finding that Madho Rai was not a party to the compromise by which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had admitted the rate of Rs. 136-6-0, gave a decree only for the admitted rental of Rs. 70 and left the question of the real rate open.

The present suit is the third and is laid against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and for the years 1316 to 1319 Faslis at the rate of Rs. 136-6-0. The Munsif decreed the suit at Rs. 70. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has decreed it at Rs. 136-6-0 against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and has dismissed it as against defendant No. 3.

The present second appeal is by defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Now ordinarily a rent suit is not properly constituted unless it is brought against all the recorded tenants. It is found as a fact that the defendant No. 3 has not been served in the present suit and, therefore, the suit cannot proceed, unless the plaintiff can show that there was a special contract between him and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by which these defendants agreed to be responsible for the whole rent not only jointly but also severally. There is no question of representation in this case. Now there is no presumption that in every joint tenancy in this Province there is also a several promise by which each joint tenant agrees to be bound for the whole rent. The case of Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadro (1) is authority for this proposition. The appellants rely on Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (2), but it is not known whether in that case the facts showed that each tenant had contracted to pay the whole rent jointly and severally. On the other hand, Ram Taran Chatterjee v. Asmatullah (3) shows that even where one of several joint tenants without the authority of the others gives a kabuliyat for the whole rent, he is liable not for the whole but for his proportionate share of the rent if there are materials before the Court for determining that share.

But it is contended that the compromise petition of 1915 constitutes a several promise by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to be responsible for the whole rent at the rate of Rs. 136-6-0. I do not think this contention can prevail. The petition is not before me, but from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it would seem that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admitted that they held 22 bighas at Rs. 136-6-0. They nowhere contracted to pay the whole of this rental themselves.

There can, therefore, be no decree against them alone for the whole rent.

As there is no evidence of what their share is, the whole suit must be dismissed, the amount of rental being left open. The appeal succeeds and is decreed with costs throughout.

Appeal decreed.

Mr. Kunga (with him Mr. Inverarity), for the Appellants.

Messrs. Setalvad, Desai and Moos, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We have to construe a deed the purport of which may be briefly summarised thus. There were three brothers, Vasta, Kalidas and Narsi, sons of Kallianji. They were the principal parties to the deed which was executed on the 8th September 1887. The deed provides that the property of the brothers, which is described as joint family property, is divided into three separate lots, one for each brother. There is also a house for residence and some provision for charity, but that is immaterial for the present purpose. The whole property is vested in four trustees out of whom the brothers are three. The object of the trust is thus described :

"And whereas the said three brothers, Vasta Kallianji, Kalidas Kallianji and Narsi Kallianji, are desirous of apportioning all and singular the said immoveable properties, all of which are of the estimated value of Rs. 64,392, for the benefit and use of themselves jointly during their joint lives, and afterwards for the benefit and use of the survivor of them and of the family or families of such of them as may have predeceased and after the decease of the last survivor of them for the benefit and use of the respective families of each of the said three brothers in manner hereinafter appearing and for certain charitable purposes."

Then one of the lots which are entered in detail in Schedules A, B and C, is recited to have been allotted to Vasta, another to Kalidas and the third to Narsi. The operative part contains certain provisions as to residence and charity. Then comes this provision :—

"The said trustees shall hold and stand possessed as regards the several hereditaments and premises described in Schedules A, B and C hereunder written upon trust to recover, receive, collect and take the rents and profits thereof and pay the same after defraying all outgoings to them the said Vasta Kallianji, Kalidas Kallianji and Narsi Kallianji jointly for the use of themselves and their respective families during the joint lives of them all."

Next comes the provision for what is to be done after the death of any one of the three who may die first. Broadly speaking, each of the two surviving brothers is to be paid separately the rents and profits of his lot so long as he lives, and elaborate and special provision is made as to what the trustees are to do with the profits of the lot of the brother who dies first. There is no provision for what is to happen as regards the lot of the brother who next dies, when he dies; and similarly when the third brother dies. The specific trust continues in regard to the lot of the brother who dies first, but there is no specific trust in regard to the lots of the brothers who die second and third, after the death of each; though there may be a resulting trust.

What has happened is this : all the brothers are now dead. Vasta and Narsi left no issue. Kalidas, who died last in 1910, left three sons living and the widow of a fourth son who predeceased him. The widow sues and claims, as an heir, one-fourth share of the profits of the portion of the lot which constituted the share of Kalidas according to the deed, i.e., of the profits of the properties described in Schedule B. The defendants, the three surviving sons of Kalidas, oppose the claim.

The Trial Court decreed the claim and the defendants have appealed. The Trial Judge wrote as follows:

"I do not think there can be any doubt that the trust was to Kalidas for life, remainder to his sons for life, remainder to their heirs. If any son of Kalidas dies in lifetime of Kalidas, his heirs take his place, and on death of Kalidas succeed to that son's life estate, just as the heir of a son of Kalidas dying after the death of Kalidas would take for life that share."

But he did not give detailed reasons for his decision.

The exact terms of the operative provision in respect of each lot are as follows mutatis mutandis:—

"And further to pay and apply the rents and profits of the hereditaments and premises described in Schedule B hereunder written after making suitable provision thereout for repairs, maintenance taxes and all outgoings payable for the said premises to the said Kalidas Kallianji if he be one of the survivors of them three; the said Vasta Kallianji, Kalidas Kallianji and Narsi Kallianji, for his natural life and if he be not one of such survivors then to the son or sons of the said Kalidas Kallianji and if more than one in equal shares for their respective natural lives, and after the death of the last survivor of such sons in trust to apportion or sell the said several hereditaments and premises described in the said Schedule B hereunder written, and in the event of a sale to divide the proceeds thereof amongst the respective heirs of such son or sons of the said Kalidas Kallianji per stirpes, provided always that on the death of any son of the said Kalidas Kallianji during the lifetime of his brothers the heirs of such deceased shall until final division as aforesaid be entitled to be paid by the said trustees the proportionate share of the said rents and profits which such deceased son himself would have been entitled to, if alive."

It is contended that the provisions in the operative part of the deed should be expanded by reference to the recital which purports to express the desire of the settlors in making the settlement. That recital is, as I read it, of a desire to apportion the properties scheduled A, B and C among the three settlors for the use and benefit of themselves jointly during their joint lives and afterwards for the benefit and use of the survivor of them (i.e., the three settlors) and of the family or families of such of them as may have predeceased and after the decease of the last survivor (of the three settlors), for the benefit and use of the respective families of each in manner therein after appearing. In other words, the joint user is to continue till the death of the last of the three settlors and the distribution into severalty according to the schedules among the respective families of each is to be postponed till that event. But the Court is not agreed as to the intention expressed in this recital.

In the view above expressed the operative provisions of the deed depart from the proposed intention treating the settled properties as to be enjoyed jointly only until the death of the first dying of the three settlors. I think therefore, the construction of the operative provisions will not be advanced by reference to the recital.

Upon the operative part, in so far as it concerns the scheduled share falling to Kalidas' family, two questions arise; first, does the remainder in favour of his sons take effect only if he is the first settlor to die or does it take effect on his death at any time; and, secondly, does the substitutionary proviso in favour of the heirs of a deceased son apply to the heirs of a son predeceasing Kalidas?

In my opinion both questions should be answered in favour of the respondent.

As regards the first question, the joint enjoyment by the three brothers of the scheduled property is necessarily broken by the death of any one of them, and two alternatives would then naturally arise: either the sons of the first deceased brother would then take his scheduled share or the joint tenancy of such sons and their uncles would continue for the lives of the other surviving settlors. The operative clause, however, clearly provides for the sons of the first deceased brother taking their father's scheduled share. It cannot, however, have been the intention that the limitations regarding each scheduled share should not be read alike, viz., that, on the death of each brother, his scheduled share should go to his family. Such a reading necessitates the addition of the words "or having survived he die" after the words "one of such survivors." It appears to me that this is permissible in the circumstances—a similar case is Greenwood v. Greenwood, (1) where under a bequest in trust for the testator's widow for her life in trust for her children, followed by power of maintenance and advancement after the widow's death with an ultimate gift over after her death in default of children attaining vested interests, the Court supplied the words "and after her death" after the words "for her life."

As regards the second question, the words are "on the death of any son of the said Kalidas during the lifetime of his brothers the heirs of such deceased shall until final division be entitled," etc. This substitution is not limited in terms to heirs of sons surviving the testator; the only condition being that the heirs should be of a son of Kalidas predeceasing his brothers. Naturally every son of Kalidas must predecease the last surviving brother whose death marks the period of division and distribution. We have in a subsequent provision regarding the expectant shares of minors an indication that on the death of Kalidas as also of his brothers "remoter issue" (presumably remoter than sons) might in the contemplation of the settlors be entitled in expectancy to a share of the trust funds. This would only be possible if the substitutive proviso included sons predeceasing Kalidas.

The result is in accord with the conclusion arrived at in the lower Court. We affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal. We make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Adjournment—Discretion of Court—Process-fee to be filed within reasonable time.

The question of granting time is always one of discretion and that discretion cannot be properly exercised until the general conduct of the party applying for time throughout the case has been scrutinized.

When a date is fixed for a case, it is the business of the litigant to see that the processes for the attendance of witnesses are placed in the hands of the Court within reasonable time for securing their attendance upon the date fixed. If he chooses to file a process-fee only two days before the date fixed for hearing, any order passed by the Court for the issue of those processes must be understood to have been issued at the risk of the party in fault, and it is not for the Court to grant an adjournment when the case comes on for hearing.

First appeal from a decision of the 1st Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 13th July 1912.

Mr. Khurshed Hasnain, for the Appellant's.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Respondent,

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, refusing a petition for time put in by judgment-debtors in a proceeding for the making absolute of a decree upon a mortgage. Two grounds are taken in support of the appeal. Firstly, that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in taking into consideration the number of times the defendants had taken adjournments in the original suit upon the mortgage, and, secondly, because on the 11th July, two days before the date upon which the application for time was rejected, an order had been issued for the summoning of witnesses, the Court was wrong in proceeding with the case until the summonses had been issued and the presence of the witnesses secured.

In the first of these contentions there is no force whatever. The question of granting time is one always of discretion and that discretion cannot be properly exercised until the general conduct of the defendants throughout the case has been scrutinized. It is clear, upon the face of the record, that throughout the proceedings the defendants have taken time far more often than parties genuinely interested in the defence of the suit should have been allowed to take.

In the second point also it is clear that there is no force. When a date is fixed for a case, it is the business of a litigant to see that the processes for the attendance of witnesses are placed in the hands of the Court within reasonable time for the securing of their attendance upon the date fixed. If he chooses to file a process-fee only two days before the date fixed for hearing, any order passed by the Court for the issue of those processes must be understood to have been issued at the risk of the party in fault, and it is not for the Court to grant an adjournment when the case comes on for hearing.

Mr. Wadhmal Udham, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff Mr. De Vertueil, a practising Barrister-at-Law, seeks an injunction against the Cantonment Committee, Karachi, restraining them from taking possession of the house No. 29, European Lines, for the purpose of handing it over to a Military Officer. As the Cantonment Magistrate threatened to eject plaintiff by force, notice was issued to the defendant Committee to show cause why a temporary injunction should not issue pending disposal of the suit and, in the meantime, an interim injunction was granted.

Mr. Elphinstone has appeared to show cause and has put in correspondence and documents which disclose the whole history of the case.

The provisions of the Cantonment (House Accommodation) Act 1902 are clear and precise.

Where a Military Officer desires that a house in a cantonment occupied by a civilian who is not also the owner, shall be vacated in order that he himself may occupy it, he proceeds under section 8 by making an application, through the proper channel, to the Cantonment Committee. The Committee, on receipt of such an application, inquires into the case, and before issuing a notice either to the landlord or to the occupier must satisfy itself that:—

(a) it is necessary or expedient for the Military Officer to reside in the Cantonment;

(b) that the circumstances are such as to require intervention;

(c) that the monthly rent proposed is reasonable; and

(d) that the house is suitable for the residence of the officer and that there is no vacant house in the Cantonment which is suitable for his residence.

On being satisfied on all these points the Cantonment Committee may under section 16 issue:—

(a) a notice to the owner requiring him to let the house to the Military Officer named in the notice and stating the amount of monthly rent proposed as reasonable for the house (section 9);

(b) a notice to the occupier requiring him to vacate the house within thirty days.

Where the rent of a house is registered in the Office of the Cantonment Committee, the rent so registered is presumed to be reasonable until the contrary is shown.

If the owner considers that the rent stated in the notice is not reasonable, he may demand arbitration (section 18).

If any owner, or any tenant of a house, is aggrieved by a notice issued under section 6, he may appeal to the Officer Commanding the Division (section 35) and the decision of such Officer is final (section 37).

If the tenant of a house refuses to vacate after notice, the Cantonment Magistrate can enforce its surrender after giving two hours' notice (section 13, rule 15).

Prior to October 1913, it appears to have been the practice for the Cantonment Magistrate to keep a register of applicants for certain bungalows and to allot them without reference to the owners. House-owners complained that they were not allowed to deal directly with the tenants, that they had no voice in the management of their own property and that, owing to the manner in which houses were allotted, they often lay vacant for long periods.

DE VERTEUIL V. CANTONMENT COMMITTEE, KARACHI.

In October 1913, a circular was issued from Army Headquarters reciting the various grievances of house owners in Cantonments and issuing instructions that in future no registers should be maintained and that officers should make arrangements direct with owners of the houses which they wished to occupy.

In January 1914, the Cantonment Magistrate, Karachi, issued a notice to all house-owners stating inter alia "the result of these revised orders is that neither the Cantonment Magistrate nor the Station Staff Officer can in any way be a medium between an officer and a house-owner for the occupation of a house, except in the case of a relieving regiment".

The Army Headquarters circular and the notice of the Cantonment Magistrate seem to have been misconstrued by the house-owners in the Karachi Cantonment, for it is alleged that there was induced the belief that, in future, the policy of the Cantonment Committee would be to give no assistance to officers in securing houses and that if a house were in occupation by a civilian, the provisions of the Act would not be enforced to turn him out. But neither the circular nor the notice can be fairly construed as making such announcements; it has not been contended that the circular overrode or even purported to override the provisions of the Act.

In August 1915, Mr. De Verteuil took the house in dispute on a monthly tenancy. It is alleged on his behalf that he received an assurance from his landlord that there was no possibility of his being turned out, and that on such assurance he expended a substantial sum in repairing the house and improving the garden.

On the 29th September, Captain W. A. Spong, R.A.M.C., who was residing in civil lines, having received orders to go to quarters in the Cantonment, took proceedings under section 8 of the Act with a view to obtaining possession of the bungalow occupied by Mr. De Verteuil.

The matter was laid before the Cantonment Committee on the 5th October, when it was resolved that a notice be issued under section 6 of the Act to the occupant of the bungalow. In an affidavit filed by the Cantonment Magistrate he deposes that the Cantonment Committee fully discussed the question.

Notice was issued to the plaintiff under section 6 on the 6th October.

On the 27th October, the plaintiff appealed to the Officer Commanding, Quetta Division. In his memorandum of appeal, he urged that on the strength of the circular he had been assured that he would not be turned out; that Captain Spong had some time been residing outside the Cantonment and there was no necessity for him to reside within it; that several other bungalows were available; that the Cantonment Magistrate had by his own notice led the public to believe that the Cantonment Committee would give no assistance to Military Officers in ejecting civilian tenants; and lastly that as no notice had been issued to the landlord requiring him to let the house to Captain Spong, the notice to the plaintiff was bad in law.

With regard to the last point taken, Colonel Cumberlege has stated in his affidavit that it has never been the practice to issue a notice to the landlord under section 6 unless he was refusing to let the house. As the rent of the house was registered, it was unnecessary to inform the owner what rent it was proposed should be paid by Captain Spong.

The appeal was rejected on the 15th November. On the 23rd November, the Cantonment Magistrate communicated the result to Mr. De Verteuil and gave him notice to quit forthwith. The present suit was filed on the 29th November. In his plaint Mr. De Verteuil relies on the same grounds as those set forth in the memorandum of appeal, adding only that Captain Spong had made no arrangement with the landlord.

Mr. Elphinston, in showing cause, has relied on three legal points:

(1) The suit is barred by section 80, Civil Procedure Code, no notice of action having been given.

(2) The suit is barred by section 44 of the Cantonment (House Accommodation) Act, LACHMI NARAIN MARWARI v. CHAIRMAN OF THE RANCHI MUNICIPALITY.

(3) The alleged grievance may have been finally disposed of by the General Officer Commanding, Quetta Division.

The first point involves contentious questions which will be more appropriately dealt with in the final judgment, as also will the contention of Mr. Wadhwal that upto date the Cantonment Committee has not sanctioned the defence of this suit. At present, the Court has only to consider whether plaintiff has prima facie a grievance which this Court has power to redress and of such a nature that grave and irreparable injury would result unless protection in the special form of a temporary injunction were granted.

Now what is Mr. De Verteuil's real grievance?

He deems the notice which has been issued to him under section 6 to be bad in law and ineffectual to confer upon the Cantonment Authority power to forcibly eject him, and he desires that a competent legal tribunal shall find it bad and give effect to its finding by way of injunction. But section 35 of the Act constitutes the Officer Commanding the Division the legal tribunal to which any person aggrieved by a notice issued under section 6 of the Act may have recourse and section 37 of the Act declares that the decision of the Officer Commanding the Division shall be final. Mr. De Verteuil's real grievance, then, is that the tribunal specially appointed by the Legislature to decide the question whether or not he has a right to relief has found against him. But this constitutes no legal injury which a Court of Law can redress. This Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with, or question the propriety of, an order which has been passed by a duly constituted tribunal and which the Legislature has declared to be final: see Narendra Nath Basu v. Stephenson (1), Ganjessar Koer v. Collector of Patna (2), Ganeswar Singh v. Ganesh Das (3).

Further, section 44 of the Act declares in positive terms that no suit or other legal proceedings shall lie against any person for anything done, or in good faith intended to be done, under this Act. No prima facie case has been made out of mala fides on the part of the Cantonment Authority in the action which they admittedly intend to take.

Mr. De Verteuil has no fair cause of complaint. By taking up his residence in a Cantonment he deliberately placed himself within the sphere of operation of the very stringent terms of the Cantonment (House Accommodation) Act under the jurisdiction of the Cantonment Authority and of the Officer Commanding the Division.

The petition for a temporary injunction is rejected and the interim injunction is dissolved.

After the temporary injunction was discharged, the plaintiff notified his intention to withdraw and the suit was accordingly dismissed with costs.

chased from one Piary Lal some don lands, which I understand to be lands cultivated by or fit for cultivation of paddy. About 1905 the defendants planted some trees along the road to the south of the plaintiff's lands, one of which trees was alleged by the plaintiff to have encroached upon his land. The plaintiff thereupon objected and a sub-committee of the Municipality made an investigation into the matter, with the result that the objection was found to be groundless. Thereafter in 1908 the plaintiff put a masonry wall upon the land with the permission of the Municipal Commissioners, but he proceeded to fill up a part of the land lying between that wall and the road and was prosecuted by the defendants on the ground that he had thereby encroached upon Municipal land, with the result that he was convicted and fined. The present suit is brought for a declaration of title to and recovery of possession of 10 feet of land lying between that wall and what the plaintiff considers to be the boundary of the defendants' road. The Munsif who tried the suit found the plaintiff's case proved, but as the plaintiff was willing to give up 4 feet adjacent to the road upon its southern boundary he gave a decree for only 6 feet immediately north of the wall. On appeal the learned Judicial Commissioner found that the plaintiff was entitled to only $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the wall, and that the remaining portion, namely, $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet, was the property of the Municipal Commissioners. Against this modified decree the plaintiff now prefers the present second appeal and asks for a decree in respect of the whole of the 6 feet which were decreed to him by the Munsif, that is to say, the appeal relates to $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet between the southern boundary of the portion given up and the wall.

Now the first point taken before me is that the learned Judicial Commissioner has thrown the burden of proof wrongly upon the plaintiff in saying that it is for the plaintiff to prove his case as in an ordinary action for ejectment. This part of the case is divided into 3 sub-heads. The first sub-head is that under section 106 of the Evidence Act it was for the defendants to show that the land in suit was theirs and that by reason of the special knowledge which the defendants possessed, the case is taken out of the ordinary rule which throws the burden of proof upon the plaintiff, and reliance is placed upon the case of Nubo Kishen Mookerjee v. Promothonath Ghose (1). Now can it be said that there was any fact in connection with the dispute which was specially within the knowledge of the defendants? Ordinarily every defendant who has a good title to land has special knowledge with regard to his title, but in order to apply section 106 the knowledge must be in the nature of something peculiar and so far as I see there was nothing in the knowledge of the defendant Municipality with regard to the land in suit which was peculiar. It is said that a Corporation in this matter stands on a different footing to individuals but I am unable, so far as the rule of burden of proof goes, to make any difference between Corporations and individuals, and on principle I see no reason for making any such difference; but then it is said that there is evidence to show that the defendants made a survey of the land in suit in or about 1905 and that the facts disclosed by that survey were matters specially within the knowledge of the defendants. In my opinion that would not be sufficient to bring the defendants under the operation of section 106. The case of Nubo Kishen Mookerjee v. Promothonath Ghose (1) was altogether a peculiar case, in which the defendant claimed certain land as his lakheraj against the zamindar and the Court threw the onus upon him, because it was shown that for a long number of years preceding his claim he was in possession of the land as patnidar and was in a special situation in the peculiar facts of that case which would justify the throwing of the burden upon him. But that case is different to the present case and the principle of section 106, which is always a difficult principle to apply, has no application here.

The second sub-head of this part of the learned Vakil's contention is that at any rate section 114 of the Evidence Act applies and that it was the duty of the defendants to produce a certain survey map and as they did not produce it, it must be presumed that they had no title to the land in suit. Now it is not suggested, and there is no evidence to show, that there is any general map showing all the lands of the Municipality. All that appears is that there was a map prepared for the purposes of the dispute of 1905. That was an item of evidence in the possession of the defendants and it was open to the plaintiff to call for it. He does not appear to have done so, and he cannot now say that by reason of section 114 the defendants must be presumed to have suppressed the map because they have no title. In my opinion no such presumption arises.

(1) 5 W. R. 148.

RUTTONSEY ROWJI v. BOMBAY UNITED SPINNING & MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.

The third sub-head under this branch is that the onus does not lie upon the plaintiff because this is a case which comes within the principle of Lukhi Narain Jagadeb v. Jodu Nath Deo (2), but that again was a very special case of a dispute between two rival zemindars about a large tract of land where the boundary ran between waste lands, which had not been subject to definite possession and in respect of which no satisfactory evidence was obtainable. Now the land in the present suit is a very small part in the heart of the Municipality, which, according to the evidence, was under cultivation of, or capable of cultivation of paddy. There is no analogy between the waste land involved in Lukhi Narain's case (2) and that of the present suit. It was, as the learned Judicial Commissioner observes, perfectly competent to the plaintiff to produce evidence both of his time and the time of his predecessor to show up to what extent definite acts of possession had been committed in respect of the land. The principle, therefore, which puts the plaintiff and the defendant in the position of counter-claimants does not at all apply to the present case. This disposes of the question of the burden of proof. In my opinion the learned Judicial Commissioner, although he has not gone into the different sections applicable to the case, is right when he says that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff.

The next branch of the learned Vakil's argument is that there has been a wrong admission of evidence. It is suggested that the learned Judicial Commissioner has wrongly admitted into evidence the opinions of Babu Radha Govind and Rai Saroda Charan, former Vice-Chairman of the Municipality, to the effect that the land belongs to the Municipality. Now if the Judicial

(2) 21 C. 504; 21 I. A. 39; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 408; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 966.

Commissioner had proceeded upon the mere opinions of these two gentlemen, no doubt those opinions would have been admissions within the meaning of the Evidence Act and, being admissions made by the defendants, would have been inadmissible in support of the case of the defendants. But on a careful perusal of the learned Judicial Commissioner's judgment together with the actual depositions of these two gentlemen, it is clear that the learned Judicial Commissioner has proceeded not upon the mere opinions of these two gentlemen but has adopted and accepted the inference drawn by these gentlemen from the observations made by them as to the condition of the land. That was a perfectly legitimate course for the learned Judicial Commissioner and I cannot see that he has proceeded upon the mere admissions of a party. The objection, therefore, under section 21 of the Indian Evidence Act does not apply. From the evidence of these gentlemen taken with certain other facts the learned Judicial Commissioner draws the inference that the road-side slope of the defendants' road extended to within $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet of the plaintiff's wall. That is a finding of facts which, not being vitiated by any error of law, is final. The judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner may not be satisfactory from all points of view, but I cannot say that in arriving at his finding of fact he has been guilty of any error of law which would entitle me to interfere in second appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Macleod in a suit filed by the plaintiffs, in which they claimed delivery of 113 bales of piece goods and tendered Rs. 7,236 as the price thereof. The defendants counter-claimed a sum of Rs. 20,000 which, they contended, was due to them by the plaintiffs in respect of goods not taken delivery of. Judgment was given for the defendants upon their counter-claim.

The defendants entered into various contracts, seven in number, in September and October 1913, for the sale and delivery of piece goods of certain specified descriptions. The contracts will be referred to under the letters A to G.

Contract A was for 251 bales of which the plaintiffs took delivery of some, while the contract was cancelled as regards others and 84 bales remained the subject of dispute.

Contracts B, C and D covered 658 bales of which 159 were taken delivery of by the plaintiffs who refused to take delivery of the rest, on the ground that the defendants had broken a condition not to give delivery of similar goods to other dealers during the period fixed for delivery under the said contracts.

Contracts E, F and G covered 305 bales of which 150 were taken delivery of by the plaintiffs, while as to 42 the contract was cancelled and the plaintiffs demanded the balance of 113 on payment of the contract price Rs. 7,236.

The result, therefore, was that the plaintiffs claimed to eliminate from consideration the 84 bales under contract A and 49 bales under contracts B, C and D. The defendants' counter-claim is for payment of the bales which the plaintiffs claim to eliminate from consideration.

Dealing first with the disputed bales under contract A, by a contract, dated the 1st of October 1913, the plaintiff stipulated that as regards the goods to be delivered the quality and width was to be given according to the 'Textiles' goods Nos. 29½, 999, 9,999 and 99,999 and reinforced the stipulation in his signature by repeating that 251 bales according to the 'Textiles' goods were to be taken. The price of the goods was fixed at Rs. 5-10-0 a piece, each bale containing 60 pieces. The agreement as to price and quantity was confirmed by the defendants' secretary in a document of the same date. The contract signed by the plaintiffs was in a printed form containing nine numbered clauses, which appear in all the contracts the subject of this suit. For the purpose of the dispute regarding the 84 bales under contract A, it is sufficient to set out the 8th and 9th clauses:—

"8. If we have any objection as to finish, quality, width, number, stamp and heading, we agree to refer the same to the arbitration of two members of the Bombay Mill Owners' Association. Out of them one member shall be of our selection and one member shall be of your selection. Should the arbitrators be not unanimous then they are to appoint an umpire and both the parties are to agree to the umpire's award.

RUTTONSEY ROWJI v. BOMBAY UNITED SPINNING AND MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.

"9. As to the objection mentioned in the said clause 8, we are bound to make the same known in writing within eight days after the goods are tendered and should we fail to do so, then we agree that our objection shall not at all prevail and we are bound to take delivery of the said goods."

After delivery of some of the goods had been taken under this contract, disputes arose, as the plaintiffs contended that the goods were not according to the contract. Upon this dispute a reference to arbitration took place under clause 8 of the contract. The defendants appointed Mr. Langley and the plaintiffs appointed Mr. Lalji Naranji as their respective arbitrators. The reference was made on the 8th of July 1914 in a letter addressed to the arbitrators by the plaintiffs' solicitors (Exhibit M), after a copy of it had been submitted to the defendants' attorneys on the 20th of June. The reference is in these terms:—

"Clause 8 of the contract provided for reference to arbitration of two members of the Bombay Mill Owners' Association if a difference arose between the parties. A difference has arisen between the parties under the above clause, as to whether the goods tendered are in accordance with the contract, and you gentlemen have been appointed arbitrators to decide the question. We understand you intend to make an appointment as to the time when you would go to survey."

The arbitrators were then requested to give timely intimation of the time of survey, as it was necessary for the parties to be present.

On the 31st of June the arbitrators published their award, which states that they met to settle the dispute between the defendants and the plaintiffs regarding a contract which stipulated that the goods were to be of the same quality as the goods of the Textile Mill Nos. 299½, 999, 9,999 and 99,999. That pieces of the Textile Mill manufacture were produced and inspected by both parties as a basis for arbitration and that in comparing them with pieces from the bales delivered by the defendants there was found to be a difference in finish, quality, width, and, in some cases, of design and colour. The arbitrators then proceeded to state that their award was that the buyer was entitled to an allowance of 4-annas per piece on 84 bales only and must take delivery as per terms of contract with this allowance. And they stated that in their opinion these 84 bales should be free of interest to the buyer up to the 31st of July and should be debited on that date.

Four days later the defendants' solicitors wrote to the arbitrators stating as follows:—

"With reference to your survey report of the 31st of July last regarding the dispute between our client and Mr. Ruttonsey Rowji, we are instructed to state that you were only requested to report on the quality, finish, etc., of the 84 bales in question. You had no right to state in the above report that, in your opinion, the said 84 bales should be free of interest to the buyer until the 31st of July and should be debited on that date. Our clients, therefore, do not bind themselves to accept the above statement."

The defendants were not the only objectors to the award; for, on the 10th of August, the plaintiffs' solicitors addressed those of the defendants referring to the arbitration and the award as follows:—

"We must state at once that our client has been advised that the direction in the award that our client should take the goods at the allowance specified is outside the scope of the reference. Our client is not bound to take the goods on an allowance and declines to do so."

With regard to these two letters, it is to be noted that the defendants merely stated that they did not bind themselves to accept the statement about interest and that the plaintiffs' refusal to be bound to take the goods on an allowance was not communicated until five days or more after the declaration of the European war.]

The question is whether the plaintiffs are bound to take the 84 bales at an allowance reducing the contract price. There is no such provision in the contract and, so far as there is any indication as to the result of a successful objection regarding the quality, etc., of the goods tendered, clause 9 impliedly indicates that the plaintiffs would not be bound to take delivery. The defendants' case, however, does not rest upon the terms of the contract. A day before the hearing commenced in the lower Court, the defendants' solicitors gave notice that at the hearing of the suit they would, if necessary, rely on a custom of trade in Bombay, applicable to the sale of goods to be manufactured of the quality and description referred to in the contracts in this suit, that a buyer has not a right to reject merely for difference in width, etc., provided that the difference is not unreasonable and is a matter that can reasonably be met by an allowance in the price.

At the hearing an issue was raised regarding the alleged custom. It was objected to by the plaintiffs, but was allowed by the learned Judge subject to amendment of the written statement by the defendants. Thereafter, at the trial, evidence was given of the alleged custom.

It is not contended that such evidence was inadmissible provided the custom proved did not annex an incident to the contract repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the expressed terms: see section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, proviso 5.

The defendants rely upon the custom alleged to avoid the ordinary consequences of a breach of contract for sale of goods according to sample, resulting from the provisions of section 118 of the Indian Contract Act. They contend that such a custom modifying the consequences resulting from the application of section 118 would not, within the meaning of section 1 of the Indian Contract Act, be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. Nor do the plaintiffs, as I understood the argument, contend that the custom would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Act. They insist, however, that it would be inconsistent with the provisions of the contract. The learned Judge held that the evidence conclusively proved that in the country piece goods trade, where a contract is made for unascertained goods either according to a particular sample provided by the buyer or according to a stock number of the manufacturer and the contract contains an arbitration clause under which all disputes are to be referred to arbitration, the arbitrators proceed on the footing that under the reference they are to survey the goods and either award that the goods may be rejected or must be taken with or without an allowance. This is not a custom regulating the rights of parties under the contract so as to be inconsistent with its express terms, but rather a customary incident annexed to the powers of arbitrators on their appointment under contracts of this description.

It appears to me that such a custom, as is alleged in the amended written statement, would be inconsistent with the stipulation in the contract that a certain quality of goods should be delivered in return for payment of a certain fixed price. The same question has, in England, given rise to differences of judicial opinion. In Walkers, Winsor & Hamm and Shaw Son & Co. In re (1) it was argued that the introduction of a price is merely to set up a standard of value, that is, the value of goods corresponding to the sample, and there may be a consistent custom providing for the variation in price upon a variation in quality, and Mr. Justice Channel held that if the custom went to the length of saying that there should be no remedy for any variation in quality, it would be unreasonable but being simply a custom that the buyer takes the goods with a variation in price and with the limitation imposed by the words "unless the same is excessive or unreasonable," it would not be inconsistent with the written contract. On the other hand, Lord Justice Moulton in North Western Rubber Company, and Huttenbach and Co., In re (2) expressed the opinion that such a custom contradicted the written contract relieving the vendor from his obligation and entitling him to require the purchaser to accept that which was not in accordance with the description.

It does not appear to me that the question whether such a custom, as is alleged, would be inconsistent with the written contract is affected in any way by the judgments of the House of Lords in the recent case of Produce Brokers Company, Limited v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. (3).

I agree with the learned Trial Judge in preferring the reasoning of Lord Justice Moulton to that of Mr. Justice Channel.

This conclusion, however, by no means disposes of the question regarding the 84 bales. The arbitrator Langley has deposed that he and his co-arbitrator made their award upon the footing that a custom did exist that the buyer of local piece goods must send the goods to be surveyed and is only entitled to reject if the surveyor decides the goods are so much off the sample that they are not saleable as of the quality ordered. If there is a difference which does not amount to this, he is bound to take it on an allowance. Langley and his co-arbitrator understood they were to proceed with the reference in the usual way and did so, awarding an allowance of 4 annas per piece. Lalji Naranji's evidence in examination-in-chief is to the same effect. The cross-examination was not directed to the practice before arbitrators but rather to the custom set up in the written statement.

It is permissible for arbitrators, who are experts in the trade in which the question referred to them has arisen, to act upon their own knowledge of the usages of that trade: see the judgment of Lord Loreburn in the case of Produce Brokers Company Limited v. Olympia Oil and Cake Company (3).

It is, however, contended for the plaintiffs that the practice of arbitrators in fixing allowances, even if sanctioned by custom, is irrelevant in the present case owing to the restricted terms of the reference of the 8th of July. It is contended that the arbitrators had no authority to decide any question but that stated in the reference, namely, whether the goods tendered were in accordance with the contract. This contention receives support not only from the defendants' solicitors' letter of the 3rd of August and the post bellum repudiation by the plaintiffs' solicitors but also from the decision of the Court of Appeal in England in Re Arbitration between Green & Co. & Balfour, Williamson, & Co. (4), in which it was held that under a very similar reference the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to award that the buyer should take goods found to be not up to the sample with a reduction of price. It is apparent, however, from the judgments delivered in that case that evidence would be admissible to show that the arbitrators had in fact been asked to decide something more.

In the arbitration under contract A the facts are that at the survey the plaintiffs asked Lalji Naranji, who was his nominee, to award an allowance in the hearing of Lukhmidas Vussonji, the defendants' salesman, who represented them at the survey. No objection to such a course was taken by Lukhmidas nor have the defendants ever objected to the allowance made by the arbitrators. In this respect, therefore, they must be taken to have ratified the conduct of their representative in not objecting to the request of Raoji that an allowance should be made. Under these circumstances, I see no reason to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge that it cannot be said that the question of the allowance was not properly referred to the arbitrators.

In this view of the case, the question whether the custom alleged would be inconsistent with the written contract standing alone, is not the crucial question. The plaintiffs are bound by the award made in pursuance of their request and not objected to by their opponents.

I may observe that there appears to me to be no foundation for the defendants' contention that the scope of the reference was not the subject of consideration in the Trial Court. It is, I think, perfectly clear that the learned Judge was dealing with this point in the passage in which he discusses the conduct of the plaintiffs at the time of the survey. It is equally clear that the same point has been urged on behalf of the plaintiffs in clause 10 of the memorandum of appeal.

For the reasons stated above, I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge regarding the 84 bales under contract A should be affirmed.

The remaining point is whether the defendants have broken the contracts B, C and D of September 1913, in which they agreed as follows:—

"We are to give delivery of the goods which may have been sold before this contract but we are not to give delivery of the same during your period."

Prior to these contracts the defendants had entered into contracts on similar printed forms with two other dealers for delivery of similar goods over certain periods, which were running in September 1912 but would expire before the periods for delivery of the plaintiffs' goods under contracts B, C and D would commence.

RUTTONSEY ROWJI V. BOMBAY UNITED SPINNING AND MANUFACTURING CO., LTD.

The common features of all the contracts material for the present point are clauses 1, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 in Exhibit O-I:—

"1. We have purchased the said goods under manufacture and we bind ourselves to take delivery of all the goods appertaining to this contract or a part thereof as you may give delivery."

"3. Should we fail to clear the goods within twenty-four hours of their being ready for delivery, then the goods shall remain at our risk and we are responsible for all kinds of damages.

"4. Your giving notice of the goods being ready is tantamount to your tendering the same. On the notice being posted to our address the same would be considered to have reached us.

"5. When you tender the goods we are bound to pay for and clear the same.

"6. If we do not clear the goods, then we are to pay interest at the rate of 9 per. cent. from the date on which the same should have been cleared. So also we bind ourselves to pay godown rent, insurance (charges) and whatever other expenses may be incurred.

"7. Should we fail to clear the goods in time, then you may sell the same at any time you like either by public auction or by private sale in one lot or in pieces at our risk and cost; and as to whatever loss you may suffer thereby we are to pay the same without (raising) any objection and as to whatever profit may be made we shall have no manner of right thereon."

In practice the defendants about once each month would send the buyer a delivery order in respect of such of the contract goods as were ready for delivery in the Company's godown and the buyer would sign an acknowledgment of delivery of so many bales and the goods would be debited to him by the defendants. If his obligation to clear the goods within twenty-four hours under clause 3 was not discharged, interest would begin to run as well as godown rent for the storage in the defendants' godown and insurance, other charges under clause 6 to be followed on failure to clear and pay for the goods within a reasonable time by sale by the defendants at the buyer's risk and cost. Under clause 9 of the contract objections to the goods would not prevail if not made within eight days and the buyer would be bound to take delivery notwithstanding his objections.

The defendants contend that the debiting of goods to the buyer and sending him a delivery order for signature marks the period of delivery, for within twenty-four hours the defendants would hold uncleared goods as warehousemen and bailees for the buyers.

In my opinion this contention is correct. 'Delivery' within the meaning of the added clause relates to some act to be done by the sellers, but their obligations ceased with the debiting of the goods and their transference from the defendants' mills to their godown. Thereupon constructive delivery took place: "It is a change of possession without any change of actual custody...A seller in possession may assent to hold the thing sold on account of the buyer. When he begins so to hold it, this has the same effect as a physical delivery to the buyer or his servant, and is an actual receipt by the buyer:" see Pollock and Wright on Possession, page 72. Holmes, in the Common Law, page 233, remarks that—

"Where goods remain in the custody of a vendor, appropriation to the contract and acceptance have been confounded with delivery. Our law has adopted the Roman doctrine, that there may be a delivery, that is, a change of possession, by a change in the character in which the vendor holds, but has not always imitated the caution of the civilians with regard to what amounts to such a change."

Here, in my opinion, the provisions of the contracts preclude the possibility of doubt as to the point of time when the change occurs. It is not necessary to repeat the indications noted by the learned Trial Judge of the understanding of the parties in the matter, but we may add that the award itself affords an instance of the practical effect of clause 9 of the contract. The arbitrators, experts in the practice of the trade, held that with regard to the sales debited on the 30th May and objected to on the 5th June interest should only run from the 31st of July, the date of the award upon the objections. This would be the period of change of possession, if not of custody.

The decree of the lower Court must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs on the appellants.

HEATON, J.—I agree that the appellants' contention as to contract A fails and that Macleod, J.'s judgment in this particular should be affirmed. But I am far from sure that it cannot be affirmed on the ground that there is not any contradiction or repugnance between the written contract and the contract as modified by the custom. Whenever a custom prevails, it necessarily leads to the establishing of a contract different in some particulars from the written contract, otherwise custom would be useless and would never be relied on. Variation from the written contract is, therefore, inevitable where a custom has to be relied on. But variation need not be contradiction or repugnance; in some cases it is, in some it is not. In this particular case I think it is not. I need not develop the point, as the judgment of Macleod, J., is supported on other grounds.

As to the rest of the decision I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

DEFENDANTS NOS. 6 TO 11—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage, simple—Suit by simple mortgagee, nature of—Adverse possession, title by, effect of, as against mortgagor and mortgagee—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 28—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58.

The enforcement of a title by adverse possession as against a person who has executed a simple mortgage of the property will not extinguish the right of the mortgagee to sue for his debt and realise his security within the time allowed by law. [p. 279, col. 2; p. 282, col. 1.]

Per Sanderson, C. J.—The term 'adverse possession' implies that the person, against whom adverse possession is exercised, is a person who is entitled to demand possession at the moment the adverse possession begins. [p. 279, col. 2.]

Adverse possession affects the interest, and the interest only, which the person who was entitled to immediate possession had at that time, or, in other words, only the interest which the person having the right to immediate possession has in the property, when the adverse possession begins. [p. 279, col. 2.]

Where after a simple mortgage the mortgaged property is taken possession of by a third person, the latter takes possession only of what belonged to the mortgagor, viz., his equity of redemption, and, therefore, holds it subject to the liability of its being sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage-debt. [p. 279, col. 2; p. 280, col. 1.]

Section 28 of the Limitation Act, which prescribes a rule for the extinguishment of right to property, is expressly limited to suits for possession. In respect of debts, the provisions of the Limitation Act merely bar the remedy but do not extinguish the right. Therefore, when a mortgagor in possession is dispossessed and does not institute a suit against the trespasser within twelve years of the dispossession, his equity of redemption, and prima facie nothing more, becomes vested in the adverse possessor. The dispossession of the mortgagor in a simple mortgage does not extinguish the title of the mortgagor by lapse of time under section 28 of the Limitation Act. [p. 281, col. 2; p. 282, col. 1.]

Adverse possession operates against the mortgagee only when the mortgagee is entitled to possession and time runs against him from the date when he is entitled to enter upon the land. [p. 283, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher*, whereby he set aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan.

The action was brought to enforce a mortgage-bond, dated the 27th June 1887, executed in favour of the plaintiff by the original defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Under the bond the principal was to be paid by instalments and it was provided that the whole amount remaining unpaid should become payable upon default in payment of any one of the instalments with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem. One of the instalments was not paid on 11th February 1893; there was, however, a payment of interest on 18th October 1892 and the suit was brought on the 22nd August 1905.

The dispute in this case relates to certain land which has been described as plot No. 1. It appears that on 16th February 1894, this plot of land was sold by the then owners, called Mullick, to the predecessor-in-title of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and that these defendants and their predecessors were in possession of the plot from that date until 1892.

On the 7th May 1875 the Mullicks, although they had already sold the plot, purported to execute a mortgage of the said land in favour of defendant No. 3.

On the 27th June 1887 the defendants No. 1 and 2 (as already stated) mortgaged the plot to the plaintiff.

The defendant No. 3 brought a suit on his mortgage and on the 6th February 1891 he obtained a decree. On the 7th December 1891 at an auction, held in execution of the said decree, the defendant No. 3 purchased the said land and in 1892 obtained possession thereof and from that time up to the institution of this suit, on 22nd August 1905, he remained in possession.

The defendant No. 3, having been made a party to this suit, set up the defence that he had been in adverse possession of the said land for more than twelve years before the institution of this suit.

The case having come up on appeal, two learned Judges of the High Court, in a judgment of 23rd March 1910, remanded it for the decision of this question as far as defendant No. 3 was concerned and whether the plaintiff was entitled to bring the said plot to sale as against defendant No. 3.

The Court of first instance decided against the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge, however, held that the plaintiff was not made a party to the mortgage suit brought by the defendant No. 3 and consequently she was not bound by it. Further, that if defendants Nos. 1 and 2, after executing the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, had entered into any compromise with defendant No. 3 by which they relinquished their right to the said plot (upon which he came to no definite conclusion as to the facts), the plaintiff could not be bound thereby, as she was no party to that proceeding; and finally that the possession of the defendant No. 3 could not be held to be adverse to the plaintiff before the time when she could enforce the mortgage and, therefore, the learned Judge decided in favour of the plaintiff.

The learned Judge, Mr. Justice Fletcher, held that the possession of the defendant No. 3 was adverse to the plaintiff and consequently he reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and decided in favour of defendant No. 3.

The mortgage was a simple mortgage and it is to be noted that this suit was merely one for the realisation of the plaintiff's security; the plaintiff asked for a decree for the principal and interest due and a sale of the mortgaged property.

It was held by the Subordinate Judge, when the case was first before the 1st Appellate Court, in his judgment of 4th May 1907 that the suit was not barred, for although there had been default in the payment of an instalment in February 1893, there had been a payment of interest on the 18th October 1893 and that consequently under section 20 of the Limitation Act a fresh period of limitation should be computed from the time when the interest was paid and that the suit being instituted on 22nd August 1905 was, therefore, in time.

This finding, so far as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were concerned, was affirmed by the High Court on 23rd March 1910.

The matter, therefore, in this appeal is between the plaintiff and defendant No. 3, for whom it was argued that the possession of defendant No. 3 was adverse to the mortgagors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and it must, therefore, be taken as adverse to the plaintiff, the mortgagee, and no decree for sale of the property should be made.

It was argued on behalf of the respondent (defendant No. 3) that this question between plaintiff and defendant No. 3 must be treated as if it were a claim by the plaintiff for possession of immovable property against defendant No. 3, and that Article 144 of the Limitation Act was applicable, that defendant's possession became adverse to the plaintiff in 1892, and as the suit was not brought until 22nd August 1905, the plaintiff's claim against defendant No. 3 is barred. Assuming that this Article is applicable to this suit, the question remains, when did the possession of defendant No. 3 become adverse to the plaintiff?

In my judgment the term "adverse possession" implies that the person, against whom adverse possession is exercised, is a person who is entitled to demand possession at the moment adverse possession begins.

The mortgage in this case being a simple mortgage, the mortgagee was not entitled to demand possession of the property at the time the defendant No. 3 went into possession in 1892, and indeed the plaintiff has never yet become so entitled. Consequently in my judgment Article 144, even if applicable, will not avail the defendant No. 3 to dispute the plaintiff's claim.

In my judgment the principle upon which this matter should be decided is that adverse possession affects the interest, and the interest only, which the person who was entitled to immediate possession had at that time, or, in other words, only the interest which the person, having the right to immediate possession, has in the property, when the adverse possession begins, can be affected by such adverse possession.

In this case the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff was created before the defendant No. 3 purchased the property at auction and obtained possession thereof in 1892. The position of the plaintiff, the mortgagee, then was that he had an interest in the property with a right to bring it to sale for the realisation of the mortgage-debt, but with no right to take possession of the property. When, therefore, the defendant took possession of the property after the mortgage to the plaintiff, he took possession only of what belonged to the mortgagor, viz, his equity of redemption, and in my judgment held it subject to the liability of its being sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt.

This conclusion is in accordance with the decision of this Court in Aimadar Mondul v. Makhan Lal Dey (1) and the judgment of the Madras High Court in Parthasarathi Naikan v. Lakshmana Naicken (2).

This last mentioned case, though reported in 35 Mad. was later in date than Ramasami Chetti v. Ponna Padayachi (3), which was one of the cases relied on by the learned Judge and which has now been overruled by a Full Bench in Viyapuri v. Sonamma Bai Ammani (4).

Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (5), which was considered by the learned Chief Justice in Aimadar Mondul v. Makhan Lal Dey (1), in my judgment, is not inconsistent therewith or with the principle above stated: for, in that case, if the defendant's contention had been maintained and he had been allowed to tack on to his own possession the possession of the Collector, and treat that as possession on his own behalf and adverse, then his possession would have begun before the mortgage, and in such case the operation of the adverse possession would not have been affected by the subsequent grant of the mortgage security.

It was necessary, therefore, for the Privy Council to consider the question of tacking, and their Lordships did not decide that the possession of the defendant standing by itself should be considered adverse to the plaintiff.

Nor do I think that the decision in the case of Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (6), another of the cases relied on for the respondent, covers the case now under consideration. For these reasons the appeal, in my judgment, should be allowed with the costs of both hearings in the High Court, the judgment of the learned Judge of the High Court should be set aside and the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge should be restored.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher cannot be supported.

The plaintiff seeks to enforce a mortgage security granted to her by the first defendant on the 27th June 1887. The mortgage provided that, on default of payment of specified instalments, the entire mortgage money would become repayable with interest. As the result of such default, the mortgage money became recoverable on the 11th February 1893. Thereafter interest was paid by the mortgagors on the 18th October 1893. The present suit was instituted on the 22nd August 1905. The claim was resisted by the third defendant, who had been joined as a party, because the plaintiff found him in possession of one of the properties comprised in the mortgage security. His contention in substance was that the mortgage had ceased to be operative upon the property in his hands. The Trial Court decreed the claim in full, and this decision was affirmed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal. On a second appeal to this Court, the suit was remanded to the Court of First Instance for re-trial. That Court dismissed the suit in respect of the property held by the third defendant. This decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge on appeal. Mr. Justice Fletcher next set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and restored the decree of the Primary Court. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and the question for determination is whether what has been called the first property claimed by the third defendant is liable for the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The circumstances under which that defendant claims title to the property may be briefly narrated. The property belonged originally to a family of Mullicks who sold it to the Chaudhuris (the mortgagors of the plaintiff) on the 16th February 1874. Notwithstanding this sale, the Mullicks mortgaged the property to the Samantas (now represented by the third defendant) on the 7th May 1875. The Samantas sued in 1890 to enforce their security, obtained a decree for sale on the 6th February 1891, and, in due course, purchased the mortgaged property in execution on the 7th December 1891. In 1892 the third defendant as purchaser obtained delivery through Court, and dispossessed the first two defendants (the Chaudhuris) who had meanwhile, on the 27th June 1887, granted the simple mortgage in suit. The case for the third defendant is that his adverse possession of the property from 1892 had by 1904 extinguished the title of all persons interested therein, whether as mortgagor or as mortgagee, and that, consequently at the date of the institution of the present suit on the 22nd August 1905, there was no subsisting charge on the property in his hands. Mr. Justice Fletcher has given effect to this contention.

It is desirable to observe at the outset that the defence raised by the third defendant is not a question of the rule of limitation applicable to the suit. The suit is obviously in time under Article 132 of the Indian Limitation Act, read with section 20; it is a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property and it has been instituted within twelve years from the date when interest was paid on the sum due. The question raised is in essence one of title; the substance of the defence is that the third defendant has by adverse possession for the statutory period acquired a title paramount to that of both the mortgagor and mortgagee. On principle such a question should not have been litigated in a mortgage suit. The proper scope of a mortgage suit is to cut off the equity of redemption and to bar the rights of the mortgagor and of those claiming under him; the only proper persons to such a suit are the mortgagor and the mortgagee and those who have acquired interest under them subsequent to the mortgage [Jaggewar Dutt v. Bhuban Mohan Mitra (7)] and Bhaju Chowdhury v. Ohuni Lal Marwari (8). Consequently, the third defendant should have been discharged from this suit, when he claimed a title adverse to that of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The parties, however, have deliberately adopted a different course, and the question in controversy has been raised and decided; both parties have in this Court expressed a desire that the matter in difference should be settled in this litigation, which has now lasted for over ten years. In these circumstances and in view of the qualifications to the general rule explained in the judgment in Bhaju Chowdhury v. Ohuni Lal Marwari (8), it is competent to this Court to determine, whether the third defendant holds the property free of the mortgage, in other words, whether the right of the mortgagee to appropriate the property to the satisfaction of his debt no longer exists. As there has been much divergence of judicial opinion on this topic, it is desirable to investigate it in the first instance as a question of principle apart from authorities.

Section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act defines a mortgage as the transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. Consequently when the owner of a property executes a simple mortgage thereof, the entire interest originally vested in him is thereafter vested partly in him as the mortgagor and partly in the mortgagee. A simple mortgagee as such is not entitled under the Transfer of Property Act to take possession of the mortgaged premises, he holds the property as security for the loan while the mortgagor continues in possession thereof [Sri Raja Papamma Rao v. Sri Vira Pratapa (9)]. If, then, after the grant of the simple mortgage, the mortgagor is dispossessed, what is the effect of the possession of the adverse holder upon the title, first, of the mortgagor, and secondly, of the mortgagee? The answer depends obviously upon the true construction of section 28 of the Indian Limitation Act, which is in these terms: "at the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished." It is plain that this section which prescribes a rule for extinguishment of right to property is expressly limited to suits for possession; it has accordingly been held that in respect of debts, the provisions of the Limitation Act merely bar the remedy, but do not extinguish the right [Nursing Doyal v. Hurryhur Saha (10) and Moresh Lal v. Busunt Kumaree (11)]. Consequently when the mortgagor in possession is dispossessed, he must, under Article 142, institute a suit for recovery of possession against the trespasser within twelve years from the date of dispossession; if he does not institute such a suit, his right to the property is extinguished. But what is his right to the property? Clearly the equity of redemption, which is all that remains in him after he has executed the simple mortgage and which is all that he had when the adverse possession commenced against him. From this it follows that after the lapse of the statutory period for the institution of a suit for possession, his equity of redemption, and prima facie nothing more, becomes vested in the adverse possessor, for, as pointed out in Gossian Das Ohunder v. Issur Ohunder Nath (12), Jagrani Bibi v. Ganeshi (13) and Naradkumar Dobey v. Ajodhya Sahu (14), the practical effect of section 28, when a person suffers his right to be barred by the law of limitation, is the extinction of his title in favour of the party in possession. The question next arises, what is the effect, if any, on the title of the simple mortgagee produced by the dispossession of the mortgagor? Does section 28 extinguish his interest? Obviously, the answer is in the negative. The simple mortgagee is not competent to institute a suit for possession of the property, because admittedly he is not entitled to possession either under the Statute or under the contract. Section 23 clearly contemplates that the person whose right is extinguished by lapse of time is a person entitled to institute a suit for possession of the property. Consequently, the dispossession of the mortgagor does not extinguish the title of the mortgagee by the lapse of time under section 23 of the Indian Limitation Act, and our attention has not been invited to any other statutory provision which is applicable to the present case and which operates to extinguish interest in land. The true effect of a Statute of Limitation is lucidly stated by Angell: "The principle on which the Statute of Limitation is predicated is not that the party in whose favour it is invoked, has set up an adverse claim for the period specified, but that such adverse claim is accompanied by such invasion of the rights of the opposite party as to give him a cause of action, which, having failed to prosecute within the time limited by law, he is presumed to have extinguished or surrendered. A mere claim of title, unaccompanied by adverse possession, gives no right of action to the person against whom it is asserted and consequently his rights are unaffected by Statute" (Angell on Limitation, page 308). The question of the extinction of an incorporeal right by adverse possession thus presents considerable difficulties [Lakshminarayana Aiyar v. Ulagammal (15)] and I am not prepared to accept the view indicated by Subramania Iyer, J., in Nallamuttu Pillai v. Bitha Naicken (16) where, however, the adverse possession had commenced before the date of the mortgage. The broad proposition that a hypothecation right is liable to be affected not only by lapse of time as between the creditor and the debtor, but also by possession of the hypothecated property held for the required period by a third person on a claim inconsistent with the rights of both the creditor and the debtor, was sought to be supported from the following passage of the Code (c. 7, 36, 1): "Long standing silence, supported by regular limitation, renders nugatory the action for creditors taking proceedings for their pledge unless the debtors or those who have entered into their rights, command possession of the security" (Salkowski's Roman Law tr. Whitfield 503; Mackeldy's Roman Law tr. Dropsit 287.) But it must be remembered that in later Roman Law, in the case of a pignus as in that of a hypotheca the mortgagee was entitled to possession of the mortgaged property, in the former at the time of the transaction, in the latter when the debt became due (Salkowski 485, Mackeldy 285; Munter 436, 447). This, however, is not the position of a simple mortgagee under the Transfer of Property Act, Sri Raja Papamma Rao v. Sri Viru Pratapa (9). On principle, accordingly, it is fairly plain that where a simple mortgage has been executed by a person in possession, the subsequent dispossession of the mortgagor, though it may operate by lapse of time, under section 28, to extinguish the equity of redemption in favour of the adverse possessor, does not affect the interest of the mortgagee who is not entitled to possession of the mortgaged premises either under the Statute or under the contract. This is substantially the view taken in Aimadar Mondul v. Makhan Lal Dey (1). Mr. Justice Fletcher, however, has declined to follow the rule laid down in that decision, on the ground that it is inconsistent with two decisions of the Judicial Committee, namely, Pramnath Roy Chowdhry v. Rookea Begum (6) and Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (5). The respondent has endeavoured to support the decision of Mr. Justice Fletcher by a three-fold argument, namely, first, that the rule laid down in Aimadar Mondul v. Makhan Lal Dey (1) is inconsistent with the decisions of the Judicial Committee just mentioned and cannot consequently be treated as good law, secondly, that it is in conflict with the earlier decision of this Court in Ram Coomar Sein v. Prosunna Coomar Sein (17) and consequently a reference to a Full Bench is unavoidable under the rules of Court; and thirdly, that there is weighty judicial opinion in support of this view, for instance, Ramaswami Chetti v. Ponna Padayachi (3). In my opinion, these contentions cannot prevail.

As regards the first branch of this contention, I am of opinion that neither of the two decisions of the Judicial Committee supports the contention of the respondent. In Pramnath Roy Chowdhry v. Rookea Begum (6) the plaintiff, a mortgagee by conditional sale, had obtained a foreclosure order in proceedings instituted under Regulation XVII of 1806. He then sued to recover possession of the properties as owner from the defendant, who claimed under a purchase from the mortgagor which was neither proved nor admitted. The question was raised whether the plaintiff had validly (17) (1864) W. R. 375.

foreclosed the mortgage by conditional sale so as to entitle him to bring ejectment as owner, as the proceedings for foreclosure were taken more than twelve years after the due date for the repayment of the mortgage money. The law of limitation then in force was contained in section 14 of Regulation III of 1793, whereby a suit was barred where the causes of action had arisen twelve years before any suit was commenced on account of it. Lord Kingsdown pointed out that a suit for foreclosure against the mortgagor or against persons claiming privity with the mortgagor might not be barred, while a suit for possession against a stranger who claimed to hold the property free of any mortgage might be barred; but he did not say that the mortgagee's right might be barred by the possession of an adverse claimant even if the mortgagee's right to possession had not accrued or where the mortgagee was not entitled to possession at all. It was not necessary to make such a pronouncement, because it was found that the possession of the claimant had been originally not adverse to but consistent with the mortgage title, and there was nothing whatever to show that it became adverse at any time before twelve years preceding the institution of the foreclosure suit. On the other hand, there are passages in the judgment of James, L. J., in Anundo Moyee Dossee v. Dhonendro Chunder Mookerjee (18) and in Brannonath Koondoo Chowdhry v. Khelut Chunder Ghose (19) which indicate that adverse possession operates against a mortgagee only when the mortgagee is entitled to possession and time runs against him from the date when he is entitled to enter upon the land. The case of Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (5) also does not support the contention of the respondent. There the Collector had, for protection of the Government revenue, taken possession of the property in 1861, pending the settlement of disputes between rival claimants. The mortgages were executed in 1862 on behalf of one set of claimants, namely, the daughter's sons of the last male owner. In 1863, by an award of arbitrators, the title of the defendant, who was the brother's grandson of the late owner, was established against the daughter's sons. The mortgagee was not a party to these proceedings and was not bound thereby. The Collector then made over possession of the property, together with the arrears of income of the estate in his hands, to the successful claimant. In 1874, the mortgagee sued to enforce his securities. The defendant pleaded that he had been in adverse possession for the statutory period from 1861 on the assumption that the possession of the Collector was his possession. If this contention was well founded, the case would be, not that of the dispossession of a mortgagor after he had granted a simple mortgage, but that of the grant of a mortgage by a person previously dispossessed: in such a contingency, the adverse possession which had commenced to operate against the mortgagor would not, by the grant of the mortgage, be arrested, but would operate equally against the mortgagee, for in the words of Lord Kingsdown in Prannath Roy Chowdhry v. Rookea Begum (6), a cause of action is not prolonged by mere transfer of the title. The Judicial Committee, however, found that the defendant could not tack to his possession the possession of the Collector and had consequently not been in adverse possession for the statutory period since 1863. Sir Barnes Peacock observed, first, that the possession of the Collector was possession on behalf of the rightful owners, and, secondly, that the rightful owners were the daughter's sons and not the brother's grandsons, as found in a proceeding of the arbitrators whose decision did not bind the plaintiff as his bonds were prior to the submission to arbitration. I must decline to hold that the Judicial Committee by implication decided a question of law which was not argued before them and which upon the pleadings and facts found could not arise for consideration. There is no warrant whatever for the inference that the Judicial Committee assumed that a suit for sale by a simple mortgagee was a suit for possession. Sir

Barnes Peacock expressly referred to the change in the law effected by the Limitation Act of 1871 and could not have held that a suit for sale was a suit for possession, as might possibly have been held under the Limitation Act of 1859 [Surwan Hossein v. Shahazadah Golam Mahomed (20), Jumeswar Dass v. Mahabeer Singh (21) and Chetti Goundan v. Sundaram Pillai (22)]. Under the present law, however, a suit for sale such as the present is in no sense a suit by a simple mortgagee for possession of an interest in immovable property, Vasudeva Mudaliar v. Srinivasa Pillai (23). The Judicial Committee could hardly have overlooked the distinction between section 1, clause 12, of Act XIV of 1859 and Article 145 of Act IX of 1871, the former of which they have characterised as an inartificially drawn Statute and the latter as a more carefully drawn Statute [Maharana Pattehsangji Jaswantsangji v. Desai Kullianraji Hakoomutraji (24) and Delhi and London Bank Limited v. Orchard (25)]. I think it is reasonably plain that the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Prannath Roy Chowdhry v. Rookea Begum (6) and Karan Singh v. Bakar Ali Khan (5) do not conclude the question in controversy and do not directly or indirectly support the contention of the respondents.

As regards the second branch of the contention of the respondent, I am of opinion that the decision in Ram Coomar Sein v. Prosunno Coomar Sein (17) does not conflict with that in Amador Mondul v. Makhan Lal Dey (1). The earlier case arose out of a suit by a mortgagee for possession after foreclosure and was decided under the Limitation Act of 1859. The provisions of that Statute were, as I have just explained, radically different from those in the Limitation Act now in force, and that decision cannot be treated as an authority now binding upon us. I do not, however, decide that the case of Ram Oommar Sein v. Prosunno Coommar Sein (17) was correctly decided even under the law as it stood in 1859; indeed, it appears to me to be incapable of reconciliation with the principle deducible from the decision of the House of Lords in Pugh v. Heath (26), namely, that on foreclosure, a fresh right of action arises for possession as owner, or, as it is said, the decree absolute gives a new right, confers a new estate and thereby absolutely bars the Statute of Limitation. I cannot, consequently, accept the contention that the decision in Ram Oommar Sein v. Prosunno Coommar Sein (17) assists the respondent and the same observation applies to Sheoumber Sahoo v. Bhowaneedeen Kulwar (27).

As regards the third branch of the contention of the respondent, it is indisputable that the balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the appellant. The earlier cases are reviewed in my judgment in the case of Nandkumar Dobey v. Ajodhya Sahu (14), where the question was expressly left open for future consideration and need not be analysed afresh. It is sufficient to state that the conflict of judicial opinion in Madras, as indicated in Parthasarathi Naikan v. Lakshmana Naicken (2) and Ramasami Chetti v. Ponna Padayachi (3), has now been settled by a Full Bench in Viyapuri v. Sonamma Boi Ammani (4) which, upon an exhaustive examination of the question from various points of view, affirms the principle that the possession of the trespasser who has dispossessed a simple mortgagor is not adverse to the simple mortgagee [see also Peria Aiya Ambalam v. Shunnugasundaram (28)]. The same view has been adopted in Allahabad [Nandan Singh v. Jumman (29) and Raj Nath v. Narain Das (30)]. It is not necessary to consider the class of cases of which Lalla Kanhoo Lal v. Musammat Manki Bibi (31) and Tarubai v. Venkatrao (32) may be taken as the type, where a question arose as to the effect of adverse possession against a mortgagee upon the title of the mortgagor: nor need we consider the law on the subject in England which, as shown in Nandkumar Dobey v. Ajodhya Sahu (14), does not support the contention of the respondent and lays down in fact that a charge on the property can be enforced against a trespasser who has acquired a title by adverse possession [see the judgment of Farwell, J., in Nisbet Pott's Contract, In re (33) and *Ludbrook v. I hold, accordingly, that this appeal must be allowed with costs, the decree of Mr. Justice Fletcher reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge restored.

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION Co.—DEFENDANTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Contract, void, when becomes—Bill of lading, construction of—“Or so near thereunto as a ship may go”, meaning of—Restraint of Princes, what amounts to—Reasonable apprehension.

In India a contract becomes void when its performance becomes impossible. [p. 291, col. 1.]

English Law on the subject and Hills v. Sughrue, (1847) 15 M. & W. 253; 153 E. R. 844; 71 R. R. 651, referred to.

The clause usually inserted in bills of lading to the effect that the goods shipped are to be delivered at a certain port “or as near thereunto as the ship may safely get”, must be taken to refer not to the voyage or the carriage of the goods but to their unloading or delivery. It means that the ship should get within the ambit of the port although she may not be able to enter it. The clause would not justify a shipowner delivering the goods at a different destination owing to war or natural causes. [p. 287, col. 2.]

The exception as to 'restraints of Princes' will justify a shipowner refusing to ship goods, which he has agreed to carry to a certain port, if he has a reasonable apprehension that the adventure will be frustrated by restraints of Princes. It is not necessary that the apprehension should be due to a restraint in operation at the date of the refusal. [p. 289, cols. 1 & 2.]

Defendants agreed on 29th July 1914 to carry 1,250 tons of seeds for the plaintiffs to Antwerp by the 'September shipment.' On August 4th war broke out between England and Germany, and by September 19th the latter had overrun Belgium. On the latter date the defendants refused to ship the goods:

Held, that the defendants could avail themselves of the exception as to restraints of Princes contained in the bill of lading, as they had a reasonable apprehension that Antwerp was no longer a safe port. [p. 290, col. 2.]

Obiter dictum.—The apprehension of restraint of Princes may be reasonable, though it is unfounded. [p. 290, col. 1.]

Occurrences subsequent to the refusal of a shipowner to ship goods may be taken as a test of what was the true state of things when the breach of agreement to ship occurred. [p. 290, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for damages for breach of a contract of affreightment.

The plaintiffs, who are exporters of grain from Karachi, made a contract on the 29th July 1914 with the defendant company of shipowners for the carriage of 1,250 tons of seeds to Antwerp by September shipment at the rate of £0-11-0 a ton. On the contract being concluded, the defendants delivered to plaintiffs' manager Mr. Kenyon the shipping order; Exhibit 1, which stated that the steamer would be subsequently notified.

On the 1st September Mr. Kenyon wrote to the defendants as follows:—

"1000 D/W Tons Freight, Antwerp, September shipment.

"With reference to your shipping order No. 1 dated 29th July 1914 for above-named freight, we shall be glad to hear as soon as possible what steamer you are going to declare and when she is due. We are quite agreeable to transfer the order from Antwerp to London or Hull, if that suits you."

The defendants replied that they would have no sailings to Antwerp during the war. Some further correspondence ensued and on the 19th September the defendants definitely refused to perform the contract, on the ground that war had broken out and Antwerp was not a safe port.

The plaintiffs then shipped these seeds not to Antwerp for that was then impossible, but to London at the rate of £0-17-4½ a ton. They paid this higher rate of freight and sue to recover the difference of freight as damages.

The following issues were framed:—

1. Was the contract made subject to the defendant Company's bill of lading and/or the Eastern Trading Company's form of bill of lading?

2. Are the defendants protected by the clause referred to in paragraph 4 of the written statement (i.e., the 'exception of restraints of Princes')?

3. Did plaintiffs ship the goods to London, and if so, are they entitled to claim damages under the contract, in view of the port of destiny under the contract?

4. To what damages, if any, are plaintiffs entitled?

5. General.

It was agreed to reserve trial of the 3rd to 5th issues until after the finding on the 1st and 2nd issues.

The 1st issue arises in this way. The shipping order is not the contract but an authority given in pursuance of the contract to the plaintiffs to require the master of a ship to be named to find cargo space for him. The shipping order is in fact addressed to the master. It requires that "Bills of lading must be filled in upon the Eastern Trade form and state contents and value of packages." But a footnote to the shipping order is to the following effect: "Cargo is booked subject to all conditions as per Company's bill of lading." The document would, therefore, imply that one set of conditions would apply while the agreement was executory and another set of conditions while the agreement is being executed. On looking at the two bills of lading and the nature of the contract I can find no meaning or reason for such a distinction. The plaintiffs' contention may, therefore, be admitted that there was an omission to alter the words in the footnote of the shipping order and that the contract was subject to the conditions of the Eastern Trade form bill of lading, Exhibit 2. The point is, however, of no importance, as the exceptions on which the defendants rely as to King's enemies and restraints of Princes occur in both the forms of bill of lading.

This disposes of the first issue, but before proceeding to the second issue it would be well to clear the ground of some pleas that plaintiffs have raised since the issues were framed.

The first is that there was a novation of the contract of affreightment and that the defendants had agreed to carry plaintiffs' goods to London. There is not a word about this novation in Mr. Kenyon's evidence or in the plaint. The only suggestion of such a plea is contained in Mr. Kenyon's letters to the defendants, Exhibits 13 and 15 of the 25th and 26th September. In these letters Mr. Kenyon says that defendants enquired by telephone early in September whether he would be prepared to ship to London or Hull instead of Antwerp if they declared the S. S. Chybassa. This telephonic communication led to the offer made by Mr. Kenyon in his letter of the 1st September, Exhibit 3, to transfer the order from Antwerp to London or Hull. The defendants do not admit Mr. Kenyon's version of the telephonic conversation, but even Mr. Kenyon's version as given in his letters is only that defendants enquired, "in the event of our declaring the Chybassa are you willing to ship to London or Hull?" It is clear, therefore, that no agreement to ship to London or Hull was concluded and the suit has not been brought on the basis of any such agreement.

The second point raised is that under the contract of affreightment evidenced by the shipping order, the defendants were obliged to ship to the nearest safe port (probably London or Hull) in the event of Antwerp proving unsafe. This contention, it may be observed, is inconsistent with the allegation of a novation of the contract: also quite inconsistent with Mr. Kenyon's letter offering to transfer the order to London or Hull. It is founded on the clause in the bill of lading that the goods are to be delivered at the port of Antwerp "or so near thereunto as she may safely get." It is said that if Antwerp was not safe, the defendants should have taken the goods to the nearest safe port; presumably London or Hull, and delivered them there.

But this construction involves a complete misconception of the scope of the clause. The words refer not to the voyage or the carriage of the goods but to the unloading or the delivery of goods. The shipping order mentions Antwerp only as the port of destination. The words in the bill of lading are, "and to be delivered subject to the exceptions and conditions hereinafter mentioned in the like good order and condition from the ship's tackles (where the ship's responsibility shall cease) at the aforesaid port of.....or so near thereunto as she may safely get." These words are, therefore, expressly limited to delivery and this distinction was pointed out in Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins (1). That the clause refers to the place of unloading is evident from the observation of Lord Chief Justice Campbell in Schulizzi v. Derry (2) that the words mean that "she should get within the ambit of the port although she may not be able to enter it." Further, the shipowner himself cannot rely upon these words as justifying delivery at a different destination when an impediment occurs at a distance from her destination, either owing to the war—Castel v. Trechman (3) quoted at page 99, Lord Justice Scrutton's work on Charter Parties—or owing to natural causes—Metcalf v. Britannia Ironworks Co. (4) quoted with approval in Dahl v. Donkin or Nelson (5).

It is also urged that the defendants were bound to carry the cargo to London or Hull because of the following condition in the bill of lading which is incorporated in the contract:—

"In case of blockade or interdict of port of discharge, or of the entering of, or discharging in the port, shall be considered by the Master unsafe by reason of war or disturbances, the Master may land the goods at the nearest safe and convenient port, at the expense and risk of owners of the goods; and the ship's responsibility shall cease when the goods are so discharged into proper and safe keeping, the master giving immediate notice of the same to the consignees of the goods, so far as they can be ascertained."

Now this condition was inserted in bills of lading because it was held that the 'so near thereunto as she can safely get' clause did not justify a ship in proceeding to a different destination on account of war risks. It is a condition inserted for the protection and benefit of the shipowner and is not a condition of which the freighter can avail himself. It is a privilege accorded to the shipowner to commit a breach of contract and yet recover his freight. The shipowner is not obliged to undertake a contract he cannot perform merely because one of the conditions exempts him in case of breach. This would be tantamount to the freighter compelling the shipowner to commit a breach.

It is idle, therefore, to suggest that the defendants, being amalgamated with the P. and O. S. N. Co., could have carried the plaintiffs' goods to London in the P. and O. S. S. Morea which sailed on the 26th September. No doubt they could have done so, but there was no legal obligation on them so to do.

I now proceed to the 2nd issue, which involves the main defence to the suit. Are the defendants exempted by the clause in the bill of lading excepting the King's enemies and restraints of Princes? Plaintiffs' Pleader blows hot and cold. Although he strongly relies on the clauses of the bill of lading as "to the nearest safe and convenient port or so near thereunto as she may safely get" in support of his claim to carriage to London or Hull, yet when the defendants plead the clauses as to restraints of Princes in the same bill of lading, he takes the objection that these clauses only operate after the goods are on board. In other words, his contention is that the exception as to restraints of Princes is not available so long as the contract is executory. But the contract is one entire contract involving the performance of different acts—to receive on board, to carry and to deliver. If the shipowner is prevented from delivering the cargo by restraints of Princes he is under no obligation to receive it on board. Not only as to this argument, but as to the argument that the defendants should have taken the goods on board and at least made an attempt to get to Antwerp, the answer is that given by Cockburn, C. J., in Geipel v. Smith (6):—"The answer of the defendants is that the contract is one entire contract and that the impossibility of performing the whole within a reasonable time dispensed with the necessity of taking any steps towards its performance." The reasonable time referred to by Cockburn, C. J., was as in the present case the duration of the war.

It is next argued that the exception of restraints of Princes is limited to something that supervenes during the voyage and is not available, as in the present case, when the voyage was never commenced. In support of this contention the very recent case of Ciampa v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (7) was cited. In that case the defendant Company's ship had sailed with a foul bill of health from Mombasa to Naples. At Naples she shipped a cargo of lemons which were destroyed by the French Government's disinfection of the ship at Marseilles. It was held that the defendants could not avail themselves of the exception of restraints of Princes, because the ship was inevitably doomed before the commencement of the voyage to disinfection. It was also said that the exception restraints of Princes must be limited to circumstances supervening after the ship had started on the voyage. These expressions must be limited in their application by the facts of the case. What the Judge meant was that if the particular restraint is known to the shipowner before he starts on the voyage he must be held to have contracted to run that risk, for a contract to run a blockade is lawful. Or he may have intended to proceed on the equitable ground recognized in clause 3 of section 56 of our Contract Act, viz., that the impossibility of performance was known to the shipowners but not to the freighter.

I think it is now well settled that the shipowner need not receive the goods or start on his voyage if he has a reasonable apprehension that the adventure will be frustrated by restraints of Princes.

There is one case in which a contrary view was taken, that of Atkinson v. Ritchie (8) cited by plaintiffs' Pleader. It was there said that the restraint be an actual and operative restraint and not a merely expected and contingent one. But the facts of the case were peculiar. The master of the vessel was under a contract to load at Kronstadt cargo for London. When he had loaded half he sailed away on hearing rumours of war between England and Russia. War did not break out till several weeks later and there had been no change in the political relations of England and Russia at the time the master abandoned the contract. The Court intended rather to condemn the unreasonable act of the master than to lay down a general principle. This is the criticism Lord Justice Scrutton makes on the case in his work on Charter Parties at page 209 and I think it very just. All the subsequent cases make it clear that a reasonable apprehension of restraint is sufficient.

In Geipel v. Smith (6) the plaintiff had chartered a vessel to load and carry coals to Hamburg, but after the making of the charter party war broke out between France and Germany and Hamburg was blockaded by the French fleet. It was held that the apprehension of restraint by the blockading fleet discharged the shipowners.

In Rodoconachi v. Elliott (9) the goods were being carried from Shanghai to London via Marseilles and Paris. The goods reached Paris, but were not sent any further as the German armies were in possession of the railway between Paris and Boulogne. It was held that the exception of restraints of Princes applied although the goods had not been seized, and that there had been a destruction of the contemplated adventure.

In Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins (1) the plaintiffs shipped dynamite, which was contraband of war, on defendants' ship for carriage to Yokohama. The ship arrived at Hong Kong and on that day war broke out between China and Japan. There were several Chinese vessels outside the harbour and if the master had attempted to sail, there was great danger that they would confiscate the goods and perhaps seize the ship. The master landed the goods at Hong Kong, and it was held that the ship was not liable for breach of the contract to carry to Yokohama as the exception in the bill of lading as to restraints of Princes applied. The case of Atkinson v. Ritchie (8) was cited in argument in this case, and indeed it had also been cited in Geipel v. Smith (6), but as to this the Judge said:—

"It was said that the fear of seizure, however well founded, was not a restraint and that something in the nature of a seizure was necessary. But this argument is disposed of by the cases of Geipel v. Smith (6) and Rodoconachi v. Elliott (9). The goods were as effectually stopped at Hong Kong as if there had been an express order from the Chinese Government that contraband of war should be landed."

So in the present case there was fear that if the plaintiffs' cargo were carried to Antwerp it and the ship would there be seized by the Germans. It is sought to differentiate the present case on the ground that risk of seizure should be due to a restraint existing at the time of the breach. For in

SANDAY PATRICK & CO., v. BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

Geipel v. Smith (6) there was an actual blockade of Hamburg; in Rodoconachi v. Elliott (9) the Germans were on the lines of communication to Boulogne and were investing Paris; in Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jenkins (1) the Chinese men of war were lying in the offing and probably knew the ship was carrying contraband, for they could see that she was flying a red flag and was anchored off the Government magazine at Hong Kong.

But this distinction is not one of principle but only of degree. The apprehension must be a reasonable one. And the most recent case shows that the apprehension may be reasonable even though it is unfounded. This was the case of Embiricos v. Sydney Reid & Co. (10). A Greek ship had been chartered to load a cargo at Temrieuk in the Sea of Azoff for a port in the United Kingdom. The ship proceeded to Temrieuk and loaded a part of the cargo on the 2nd October 1912. On that day the charterers discontinued loading, as there were rumours of war between Greece and Turkey and it was anticipated that the Dardanelles would be closed. On the 18th October war was declared and on the 21st the charterers cancelled the contract. It was held that the clause in the bill of lading as to restraints of Princes was available to the charterers as well as to the shipowner, and that, as there was no reasonable probability that the Turks would allow Greek ships to pass the Dardanelles, the charterers were justified in abandoning the contract. Now the remarkable point about this case is that the Turks did as a matter of fact open the Dardanelles to Greek laden vessels from the 16th to the 24th October and again from the 12th to the 19th November. At the time the contract was cancelled the Turks had opened the Dardanelles for a week, and if the cargo had been loaded, the ship could have passed the Dardanelles in the second period of opening from the 12th to the 19th November. Nevertheless, as it could not be anticipated that the Turks would again open the Dardanelles, the apprehension of seizure was held to be sufficiently reasonable to justify the non-performance of the contract.

This case seems to me to dispose of the contention that the apprehension must be due to a restraint in operation at the date of breach. When the merchants threw up his charter in Embirico's case (10), the Dardanelles were open and their apprehension that owing to the declaration of war they would not be opened again was not justified by subsequent events.

The present case seems to me to be much stronger. The defendants' apprehension that they would be prevented from carrying plaintiffs' goods to Antwerp was due to the declaration of war between England and Germany and it was justified by subsequent events, for if the goods had been shipped on the 19th September they would have reached Antwerp on the 18th October after Antwerp had been occupied by the enemy.

The contract was for September shipment and the defendants might have shipped the goods on the 1st September, which would then have arrived about the 30th September, probably just in time to avoid capture. But there was no obligation on them to ship the goods before the end of the month, i. e., the 30th September and on that date the impossibility of performance had become quite evident, for the bombardment of the forts round Antwerp had already begun on the 23th. On the 19th they decided to cancel the contract and the case may be judged by the facts existing on that date. On the 19th the enemy had overrun Belgium; Liege and Namur had fallen and Brussels had been occupied. On the 7th September the daily press had announced that a strong German army had left Brussels to cut the communications between Antwerp and Ostend; on the 8th and 9th September that the dykes near Antwerp had been opened and the Germans and Belgians were fighting waist deep in water. Surely these events were sufficient to give rise to a reasonable apprehension that Antwerp was not a safe port. Gorell Barnes, J., in The Savona (11) said that what happened afterwards may be taken as a test of what was the true state of things at the time when the question of breach has to be considered. If these tests were applied, it is quite clear that the apprehension on the 19th September was reasonable.

Mr. Kenyon produces two charter parties which had been concluded by his firm in London on the 13th and 17th August, Exhibits 25 and 26. The steamers chartered were to load at Karachi in September and proceed at the charterer's option to any one or two of several ports, one of which was Antwerp. It is urged that he might have ordered these steamers to proceed to Antwerp and this is put forward as evidence that Antwerp was a safe port. This is absurd, for Mr. Kenyon did not select Antwerp and these steamers never went to Antwerp. In such charter parties it is the duty of the charterer to select a safe port—The Teutonia (12). If Mr. Kenyon had selected Antwerp, I think it almost certain that the shipowner would have treated that selection as a breach of the contract.

I am clearly of opinion that the defendants were justified by the exception as to restraints of Princes in refusing to perform the contract.

Even if the defendants had not been protected by this exception, the result would have been the same under section 56 of the Indian Contract Act. In England a man who contracts to do a thing is not generally excused because it becomes impossible. A well known illustration of this is the case of Hills v. Sughrue (13); where a charterer under contract to proceed to Ichaboe and load a cargo of clean guano was held liable although there was no clean guano at Ichaboe. It is for this reason that exceptions and conditions are introduced into bills of lading and charter parties to transfer the risk to the freighter. But under the Indian Law the general rule is adopted that a contract is void, when it becomes impossible and it is quite clear from what I have said already that performance of the contract had become impossible on the 19th September.

Plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, fail and the remaining issues as to damages do not arise. Mr. Kenyon's grievance apparently is that the defendants did not accommodate him by a transfer of the shipping order to London. But defendants were not legally bound to do so, and I doubt if plaintiffs have really suffered any loss. I am sure that Mr. Kenyon on the 19th September did not desire that his goods should be carried to Antwerp and delivered there in the middle of October. If by some miracle the defendants had succeeded in performing this feat, I doubt if Mr. Kenyon would have found a market for his goods.

I dismiss the suits with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the mother of the last male holder of property admittedly vatan, having been postponed in the succession to the defendant as the nearest male member of the vatandar family, under section 2 of Bom. Act V of 1886, has brought this suit to recover maintenance on the ground that she as the widow of a deceased male holder is entitled to maintenance from that holder's successors. The learned Trial Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that service and uncurtailed remuneration must go hand in hand unless the service incumbent on the hereditary office has been commuted, and that even if the property had been the subject of the Gordon Settlement, it would not affect the incidents of vatan property unless it were shown that such incidents had been expressly altered or cancelled.

The lower Appellate Court, being of opinion that the property must, for reasons stated, be taken to have been the subject of the Gordon Settlement, allowed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that he who takes the benefit of an inheritance must bear the burdens annexed to it in his predecessor's hands.

If the property is held under a sanad under the Gordon Settlement, each successive male holder is substantially holding an estate of inheritance in tail male unburdened by any duties of service, in which case the objections expressed by the Trial Judge to the incumbrance of an estate assigned as remuneration for public services may be disregarded.

In this view the hearing of the second appeal was adjourned in order that the Pleaders might ascertain whether the property is held by the defendant under a Gordon Settlement sanad. We have now been informed by the Pleaders that the suits should be decided on this assumption. We, therefore, hold that the defendant, having taken by inheritance an estate which the public interest does not require to be held free from the incumbrances binding on his predecessors within the limits of the vatandar family, is liable for the plaintiff's maintenance. We affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Decree affirmed.

Punjab Courts Act (III of 1914), s. 44—Revision—Material irregularity—Failure to determine provision of law applicable—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 6, Sch. I, Art. 164—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Minority, whether extends limitation—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 6.

Failure to determine whether an application is governed by the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1877 or by those of the Act of 1908, amounts to a material irregularity and is a good ground for revision. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Ragdeo, 60 P. R. 1897; Delhi Cloth and General Mills Company, Limited v. Hardian Singh, 6 Ind. Cas. 939; 72 P. W. R. 1910, referred to.

Section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1908, which replaces section 7 of the Act of 1877, confines the operation of the plea of minority to suits and only one kind of applications, namely, those for execution of decrees. Therefore, an application to set aside an ex parte decree does not come within the exception created by section 6 of that Act. [p. 294, col. 1.]

An ex parte decree was passed against the defendants, some of whom were minors, on 20th August 1908. On 1st May 1914, some of the defendants applied to set aside the ex parte decree:

Held, that the application was governed by the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1908 and not by those of the Act of 1877; that section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1908 did not apply to the application and the period of limitation prescribed by Article 164 of the Act for such applications could not, therefore, be extended on the ground of minority. [p. 294, cols. 1 & 2.]

Ghidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty, 8 Ind. Cas. 542; 35 M. 678; (1910) M. W. N. 711; 9 M. L. T. 75; Hope Mills, Ltd. v. Vithaldas Pranjivandas, 7 Ind. Cas. 982; 12 Bom. L. R. 730; Jia Bibi v. Ilahi Baksh, 30 Ind. Cas. 573; 13 A. L. J. 837; 37 A. 597, referred to.

It is doubtful whether an application to set aside an ex parte decree can be deemed to be a 'right' or 'privilege' within the purview of section 6 of the General Clauses Act. If it is a right, it is acquired, not under the Limitation Act, which merely regulates the period within which the remedy must be sought, but under the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Civil revision from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 15th January 1915.

MANOHAR LAL V. SADIQA BEGAN.

•ORDER OF REFERENCE.

SHADI LAL, J.—(January 20th, 1916.)—On the 25th November 1900 Razi-ud-din, a petition-writer of the town of Rohtak, mortgaged certain house properties to the plaintiff by a registered deed, and entered into certain stipulations for the payment of the debt. He died without discharging his liability, and on the 24th July 1908 the mortgagee instituted a suit for the recovery of the money against the mortgagor's representatives, namely, his mother Musammât Rafi-ul-Nissa, his widow Musammât Rauf-ul-Nissa, and his minor children under the guardianship of their mother and grandmother. The defendants did not appear in obedience to the summonses issued to them, and the Court after directing ex parte proceedings passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff on the 20th August 1908.

In execution of the decree, notices were, on different occasions, issued to the judgment-debtors, the mortgaged property was sold by auction, the objections preferred by certain persons were rejected, and the sales confirmed by the Court in favour of the decree-holder. The houses purchased by him were subsequently sold to one Ali Muhammad by a deed dated the 1st February 1913.

On 1st May 1914, nearly six years after the date of the decree, five children of the mortgagor—three adults personally, and two minors through their maternal grandfather—applied to the Subordinate Judge for setting aside the ex parte decree, and this application has been accepted by the Court. The main question for determination was whether the application was barred by time and whether the Limitation Act of 1908 or the Act of 1877 applied to the case. Now, the Subordinate Judge, without recording a finding whether the old or the new law governed the application, has disposed of the matter in a summary manner with a brief observation to the following effect: "There is no period of limitation running against the minors as they were, as such at the time of the institution of the suit."

The plaintiff has preferred an application for revision against the order setting aside the ex parte decree, and having regard to the definition of the word "case" in Pandit Ramu Kant v. Pandit Ragdeo (1) and in view of the decisions in Delhi Cloth and General Mills Company, Limited v. Hurdhian Singh (2) and Civil Revision No. 52 of 1914, I am of opinion that an application for revision is competent and that the omission of the lower Court to determine the crucial point in the case amounts to a material irregularity.

It will be observed that section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1908 is materially different from section 7 of the Act of 1877, and that, under the new law, the plea of minority is available only in the case of suits and applications for execution.

An application for setting aside an ex parte decree is not mentioned in section 6 and the period of limitation prescribed by Article 164 cannot, therefore, be extended. It seems to me that the Limitation Act of 1908 prescribes the rule of limitation and that the application of the respondents is barred by time. The decision of the Madras High Court in Chidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (3) favours the applicability of the new Act, and, as at present advised, I am disposed to accept the rule of law enunciated in that judgment. The point is, however, of some importance and should, I think, be authoritatively decided by a Division Bench. I accordingly refer the case for decision to a Division Bench and direct that an early date be fixed.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

Shaikh Umar Baksh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The relevant facts are set out in the order dated the 20th of January 1916 referring the case for decision to a Division Bench. The point for determination is, whether the application made on the 1st of May 1914 by some of the defendants to set aside the ex parte decree passed against them on the 20th of August 1908 is within time. The decision of the matter depends upon the answer to the question, whether the Limitation Act of 1908, or the repealed Act XV of 1877, prescribes the law governing the application. Now, this is the crucial point in the case, and the lower Court has committed a material irregularity in omitting to determine it, though it was distinctly raised by the decree-holder and formed the subject of an issue.

(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 939; 72 P. W. R. 1910.

It is contended by Mr. Umar Baksh for the respondents that as against the defendants, who were minors at the time of the decree, the period of limitation does not begin to run until the cessation of their minority. This contention is no doubt based upon section 7 of the old Act, because section 6 of the Limitation Act of 1908, which replaces the aforesaid section, confines the operation of the plea of minority to suits and only one kind of applications, namely, those for execution of decrees. It is manifest that an application to set aside an ex parte decree does not come within the exception created by section 6 of the present Act, and that the defendants cannot under that section invoke their minority as a bar to limitation.

The application in question was made, as already stated, on the 1st of May 1914 more than five years after the enforcement of the Limitation Act of 1908, and it is prima facie governed by that Statute, unless the operation thereof is excluded by some rule of law. The learned Pleader for the respondents places his reliance upon section 6 of the General Clauses Act, and argues that the right to make an application to set aside the ex parte decree accrued under the repealed Act and is not affected by the provisions of the new Limitation Act. This contention is, in our opinion, altogether untenable, and cannot be accepted. We doubt very much whether the alleged right to make an application of this nature can be deemed to be a "right" or "privilege" within the purview of section 6 of the General Clauses Act. However that may be, we are clear that the right, if any, was acquired, not under the Limitation Act which merely regulates the period within which the remedy must be sought, but under the Civil Procedure Code.

Further, section 6 of the General Clauses Act provides in explicit terms that the rule laid down therein is to be enforced, if an intention to the contrary is not expressed by the Legislature. As pointed out by the Madras High Court in Chidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (3), the intention of the Legislature is manifested in more places than one. We find that section 3 of the new Act provides that subject to the provisions contained in sections 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first Schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence. Now, there is nothing in the aforesaid sections to save the limitation in respect of an application to set aside an ex parte decree, and under Article 164 of the First Schedule the Court is bound to reject the application, if it is made after the expiry of thirty days from the date mentioned therein.

A further indication of the intention of the Legislature is to be found in section 30 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, which prescribes a period of two years after the enforcement of the Act for the institution of those suits, the limitation for which has been curtailed by the new law. It will be observed that the section makes no reference to applications, and the obvious inference, therefore, is that the Legislature intended to apply the provisions of the Act to all the applications, even where the limitation prescribed thereby is shorter than that prescribed by the old Act. It is noteworthy that the Act of 1908, though passed in August 1908, did not come into force until the 1st of January 1909, and the intervening period of five months was ample time, within which the persons concerned could become acquainted with its provisions and take steps to enforce their remedy.

We find that Article 164 of the new Act is materially different from Article 164 of the old Act, and that the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts have held in Hops Mills, Ltd. v. Vithaldas Pranjivandas (4) and Jia Bibi v. Ilahi Buksh (5) that an application made after the 1st of January 1909 to set aside an ex parte decree passed before that date is governed by Article 164 of the new Act and not by Article

CHITTA BHULA v. BAI JAMNI.

164 of the old Act. The principle to be deduced from these two cases is that the law to be applied in a case of this kind is the law existing at the time when the application is made.

The decision in Ohidambaram Chetty v. Karuppan Chetty (3) is exactly on all fours with the present case, and the learned Pleader for the respondents admits that he is unable to suggest any distinction. The ruling of a Full Bench of this Court in Sahib Dad v. Rahmat (6) has no bearing on the point before us, because the learned Judges, who decided that case, did not find any contrary intention in the Punjab Limitation Act, I of 1900, and accordingly held that a cause of action, which arose under the old law, was not affected by the provisions of that Statute. The intention of the Legislature in the present case is unmistakably manifested in various ways, and we have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the Limitation Act of 1908 governs the case.

Upon the merits the facts are simple and do not admit of any real doubt. It is clear that the suit was instituted upon the footing of a mortgage executed by one Riaz-ud-Din, a petition-writer of Rohtak against his widow, mother and minor children, as representing his estate. It appears that the widow was appointed guardian ad litem of her own children, and the mother guardian ad litem of the deceased's children by another wife, who was dead at that time. Both the ladies were served with notices in their personal capacities as well as on behalf of the minors; and the Code of Civil Procedure of 1832 did not contain any provision requiring personal service upon the minors. There was, therefore, no defect in the service of the summonses, and under Article 164 the application, having been made after the expiry of thirty days from the date of the service, is clearly barred by time.

Assuming that the date of the knowledge of the decree is to be regarded as the terminus a quo, we think the facts and the circumstances of the case make it abundantly clear that the respondents must have acquired knowledge of the existence of the decree long before thirty days prior to the date of the application. The record shows that in execution of the decree notices were on different occasions issued to the judgment-debtors, the mortgaged property was sold by auction, the objections preferred by certain persons were rejected, and the sale confirmed by the Court in favour of the decree-holder. The property purchased by him was subsequently sold to one Ali Muhammad by a deed dated the 1st of February 1913, who, it is alleged, expended a considerable sum of money on rebuilding and improving it. Now, all these acts took place in Rohtak, the very town wherein the property is situate and the judgment-debtors reside. It is almost inconceivable that in spite of all these proceedings they remained ignorant of the decree against them during a period extending over nearly six years. Conceding that one of the children was major at the time of the suit, it is manifest that she must have known of the decree long before thirty days prior to the date of the application.

For the aforesaid reasons we hold that the application dated the 1st of May 1914 is barred by limitation under Article 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908. Setting aside the order of the lower Court, we accept the application for revision with costs in both the Courts.

Revision accepted.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 90—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), ss. 56, 153—Mortgage—Redemption—Tagavi claims, non-payment of—Sale of mortgaged property—Benami purchase—Mortgagee, liability of—Purchaser, not bona fide—Equity enforceable.

CHITTA BHULA v. BAI JAMNI.

The defendant No. 1 was a san-mortgagee of certain lands mortgaged to him by the plaintiff's father. In 1901 the plaintiff's mother for the benefit of those interested in the property took an advance by way of tagavi and gave a charge upon one of the survey numbers, viz., 311, as collateral security for payment of the loan. In 1903 the plaintiff's mother on behalf of herself and the plaintiff, her minor daughter, executed a mortgage-deed with possession in favour of the mortgagee and put him in possession of all the property previously charged under the san-mortgage including the survey No. 311. The survey No. 311 was sold in 1906 to satisfy the claim of Government in respect of the tagavi advance and was purchased by the defendant No. 2 benami for the defendant No. 1. Subsequently it was purchased by the defendant No. 3, who had a notice of everything that had occurred in connection with the property. The plaintiff sued to redeem the property in 1912, being entitled to the benefit of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act:

Held, (1) that the tagavi advance granted to the mortgagor by the Government was of a "public nature" within the meaning of section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act and that inasmuch as the sale took place owing to the default of the mortgagee, section 90 of the Trusts Act applied and that the defendant No. 1 could not obtain immunity from his breach of trust by reason of the extinction of his position as mortgagee; [p. 297, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that section 56 of the Land Revenue Code did not apply, inasmuch as there was no forfeiture under section 163 of that Code; [p. 297, col. 1.]

(3) that the defendant No. 3 could not resist the suit, inasmuch as he was bound by the equities enforceable against the vendor by reason of his not being a bona fide purchaser without notice. [p. 296, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Broach, in Appeal No. 6 of 1914, amending the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Ankleshvar, in Civil Suit No. 509 of 1912.

Mr. T. R. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. F. Dastur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—From the year 1894 to 1903 the 1st defendant was a san-mortgagee of certain lands mortgaged to him by the plaintiff's father. In 1900 the mortgagor died, and in the following year his widow Kohili for the benefit of those interested in the property took an advance by way of tagavi from the mamlatdar, and gave a charge upon one of the survey numbers, namely 311, as collateral security for payment of the loan. In June 1903 acting on behalf of herself and the plaintiff, her minor daughter, she executed a mortgage-deed with possession in favour of the 1st defendant, and put him in possession of all the property previously charged under the san-mortgage including the Survey No. 311. The plaintiff has brought this suit in 1912 to redeem, she being entitled to the benefit of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The only question in the appeal is with reference to Survey No. 311. That survey number was sold in or about 1906 to satisfy the claim of Government in respect of the tagavi advance, and it was purchased ostensibly by the 2nd defendant who was the gumasta of the 1st defendant; mortgagee. From him it was subsequently purchased by the 3rd defendant, who is the uncle of the plaintiff and who had for many years been cultivating the land as tenant under the mortgagee, and prior to the mortgage under the mortgagor. The 3rd defendant claims to be entitled to hold Survey No. 311 free from any liability to be redeemed by the mortgagor. Upon the findings of the lower Court he must be held to have had notice of everything that occurred in connection with the property, and cannot claim the position of a bona fide purchaser without notice of Survey No. 311, if there were in fact any claims enforceable against the vendor with reference to that plot. It must also be taken on the findings of fact of the lower Courts that the 2nd defendant, purchaser, was a benamidar for the 1st defendant, mortgagee.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the mortgagee has in effecting the purchase availed himself of his position as mortgagee to gain an advantage in derogation of the rights of the mortgagor. If the sale took place at the instance of the mamlatdar in consequence of some wilful default on the part of the mortgagee, it may fairly be said that in acquiring the property through his benamidar at such sale he has availed himself of his position as mortgagee to gain an advantage spoken of in section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act. The question, therefore, is whether the sale took place owing to his default. Section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that "when, during the continuance of the mortgage, the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Government revenue, and all other charges of a public nature accruing due, in respect thereof during such possession". So far from there being no contract to the contrary in the mortgage-deed, the mortgagee agrees henceforth to pay all sarkari claims in relation to the property. The expression which we have translated "claims" is an expression which is not usual to describe merely Government revenue. The point has been dealt with by the learned District Judge as follows:—"Are tagari dues a 'charge of a public nature' within the meaning of section 76 (c)? I think they are. I think that the clause should be liberally construed, as it has for its object the protection of the land from forfeiture or sale for default in payment of Government demand accruing due in respect of the land while it is in the possession of the mortgagee." It is clear, therefore, that he had in his mind the question whether this was a Government demand accruing due in respect of the land while it was in the possession of the mortgagee, and he comes to the conclusion that it was. It is argued that as the tagari advance preceded the mortgage with possession, it would not be a Government demand accruing due in respect of the land while in the possession of the mortgagee. That is a question which might have been settled by evidence if it had been put in issue in the lower Court: the learned Judge feels no doubt as to what the answer should be, and we are not prepared in second appeal to entertain any doubt as to the correctness of his finding. That being so, section 90 of the Trusts Act would apply, because the sale has taken place owing to the default of the mortgagee. But it was said that once the sale takes place the provisions of section 56 of the Land Revenue Code would apply, and, if so, there would be no room for the application of section 90 with reference to the conduct of the mortgagee as such, because ex hypothesi the operation of section 56 of the Land Revenue Code would have extinguished all rights of the mortgagee. We are of opinion that section 56 of the Land Revenue Code does not apply, as it has been held as a fact that there has been no forfeiture such as would be a necessary condition precedent under section 153 of the Land Revenue Code to the application of the provisions of section 56 for the purpose of recovering dues as arrears of land revenue. The argument also appears to us to be slightly circuitous, because ex hypothesi it is by reason of his default as mortgagee, and by his improperly availing himself of his position as mortgagee, that the sale has taken place. How then can it be said that he is to obtain immunity from his breach of trust by reason of the extinction of his position as mortgagee through his fraudulent action as mortgagee? This, it appears to us, is also the answer to a point which we do not think was appreciated by the learned District Judge, a point of the same nature as that argued under section 56 of the Land Revenue Code, and based upon the words of the proviso to section 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act, which by implication would put an end, upon the sale by the Collector for recovery of a Government loan, to the interest of the borrower and of the mortgagee of that interest. For these reasons we think that the decree of the lower Appellate Court was right and should be affirmed with costs.

Appeal, second - Question of law—Question of fact—Construction of document—Sale or mortgage.

If a question decided by the lower Appellate Court is a question to be decided on the construction of a deed then the question is one of law, but if it is to be decided not on the construction of the deed but on the deed combined with surrounding circumstances then it is a question of fact. [p. 298, col. 2.]

For instance, if the question a Court has to answer is, is this document, taken on its own wording, a sale or a mortgage, then the question is one of law, if on the other hand the question to be answered by the Court is, this document on the face of it is a mortgage, but was the contract actually entered into between the parties something different, namely a sale, and if in order to decide this question the Court has to consider the terms of the mortgage and the

Mr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mokand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the two grounds stated as grounds of second appeal are, first, that the transaction in connection with which the pre-emption suit was brought is a mortgage and not a sale as held by the lower Courts, secondly, that inasmuch as Rs. 2,000 was paid before the Sub-Registrar, the lower Appellate Court should have held that whole of it had been paid as consideration in good faith and that the market value was not less than Rs. 2,000. An objection is raised that these questions are questions of fact and cannot be agitated in second appeal. As regards the second question raised, there can be no doubt that it is a pure question of fact, and inasmuch as it has been held plainly that Rs. 1,500 of the mortgage money was returned after registration, this finding, being based upon the evidence of witnesses, cannot be touched.

As regards the first question the matter is more difficult and I have been referred to several rulings, which have been rather treated by Counsel in arguments before me as conflicting, but which are really to my mind not conflicting at all. On behalf of the appellants I am referred to a Privy Council ruling, Fateh Chand v. Kishen Kumar (1), Diwan Chand v. Sundar (2),

Narain Singh v. Jagat Singh (3). Now if these rulings be carefully read, it will be seen in every one of them the proposition laid down is substantially this that, if the question decided by the lower Appellate Court is a question to be decided on the construction of a deed, then the question is one of law, but that, if it is to be decided not on the construction of the deed but on the deed combined with surrounding circumstances, then it is a question of fact. To put the point in another way, if the question the Court has to answer is, is this document, taken on its own wording, a sale or a mortgage (or whatever may be the actual controversy in the case), then the question is one of law; if on the other hand the question to be answered by the Court is, this document on the face of it is a mortgage, but was the contract actually entered into between the parties something different from this, namely a sale, and if in order to decide this question the Court has to consider the terms of the mortgage and the surrounding circumstances, then it is a question of fact. The rulings quoted on the opposite side are Civil Appeal No. 163 of 1896 of this Court, Budha Mal v. Gulab (4), Sunder Das v. Dhanpat Rai (5). Properly read, these rulings lay down much the same principles as those already quoted, and, in my opinion, the line of demarcation between questions of law and questions of fact in this connection is quite clear.

Now in the present case, the deed we are considering is certainly on the face of it a mortgage-deed, but the lower Courts have decided that as a matter of fact that deed does not contain the contract between the parties, who, as a matter of fact, sold and bought the land. This inference is drawn from the extremely onerous terms of the so-called mortgage and from outside circumstances and the finding is that as a matter of fact the defendant No. 4 sold the land to defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and did not mortgage it.

Khoti lands—Kolaba District—Transfer without permission of khot—Forfeiture—Transferee, liability of.

An alienation by a khoti tenant of his khoti lands without the permission of his khot in the Kolaba District works as a forfeiture and the khot is entitled upon such transfer to enter upon the land to the prejudice of the transferee.

Narendra Narayan Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen, 13 B. L. R. 274 at p. 288; 22 W. R. 22, referred to.

Second appeal from the decision of the first class Subordinate Judge at Thana, in Appeal No. 77 of 1914, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Roha, in Civil Suit No. 112 of 1913.

Messrs. K. H. Kelkar and M. M. Karbhari, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue to recover possession of certain lands in the Kolaba District, on the ground that they were entitled so to do by reason of their occupancy tenants having assigned those lands to other persons without permission of the plaintiffs, who were the khots.

The learned Trial Judge has cited a number of decisions, which establish that alienation by a khoti tenant of his khoti lands in the Kolaba District works as a forfeiture.

The lower Appellate Court, accepting that custom as established, discusses a counter-custom set up by the defendants to the effect that khoti tenants were entitled to transfer their holdings, and he holds the custom is not proved.

The learned Pleader for the appellants argues that although the custom may be established that a khoti tenant cannot transfer his occupancy holding without the permission of his khot, it does not follow that the khot can upon such transfer enter upon the land to the prejudice of the transferee. It may be that the expression 'forfeiture' is inappropriate to the consequences which result from an unauthorised transfer of an occupancy holding, but the result must be that the khot is entitled to re-enter for the reasons stated by Sir Richard Couch in the analogous case in Bengal of the zemindar and his occupancy tenants. In Narendra Narayan Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen (1) the learned Chief Justice says: "If a ryot having a right of occupancy endeavours to transfer it to another person, and, in fact, quits his occupation, and ceases himself to cultivate or hold the land, it appears to me that he may be rightly considered to have abandoned his right, and that nothing is left in him which would prevent the zemindar from recovering the possession from the person who claims under the transfer." That decision was applied by a Bench of this Court to the case of an unauthorised sale of land by a khoti tenant: see Nagardas Sobhagyadas v. Ganu Balu (2). The remedy appears to be appropriate, even if it be taken that prior to the passing of the Khoti Act of 1880, no khot was anything more than a farmer of revenue, for he was under an obligation to pay a certain revenue to Government, and if the occupancy tenant, to whom he looked to render his share of the revenue, transferred the land to some one whom the khot did not approve of, the remedy of the khot would be to go on to the land and collect the produce for himself so as to be able to discharge his obligations to Government. The finding, however, of custom in favour of the plaintiffs does not dispose of the case, because the receipt book shows that the transferees have paid khoti profits to the khot which have been accepted. The contention of the defendants in appeal to the lower Appellate Court was that they had paid dhara and fayda since 1897, and the plaintiffs knew of their possession under the transfer, but accepted the dhara and fayda at their hands, and, therefore, had indirectly consented to the alienations, and had no right to maintain the suit. The learned Trial Judge disposed of that point by saying that the fact of plaintiffs' knowledge of the transfers was not proved by the defendants. The learned Judge with appellate powers, however, notwithstanding the reference to the point in the judgment of the Trial Judge, says: "The appellant did not urge in the Court below that the plaintiff knew of the alienation to him, and it is now too late to urge that plea." He appears to have overlooked the reference to the point in the judgment of the lower Court. But it is necessary for the decision of the case that that point should be decided. We must, therefore, remand to the lower Appellate Court for decision the issues—When the plaintiffs first knew of the alienations by the khoti tenants to the other defendants, and whether with such knowledge they accepted payment of dhara or fayda from the transferees, and whether such conduct amounts to a waiver of forfeiture or ratification of the transfer? The finding to be returned within one month. No further evidence to be taken.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 57, 85—Accounts, suit on—Proof—Evidence, value of balance as—Suit on advances in cash and grain—Limitation.

Article 85 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act does not apply to a case where the plaintiff alone has been the banker, making advances and receiving part-payments from time to time, there being no mutual account or reciprocal demands and the balance being always in his favour. [p. 301, col. 1.]

Jas Ram v. Attar Chand, 30 Ind. Cas. 491, 16 P. R. 1916; 118 P. W. R. 1915; 178 P. L. R. 1915, distinguished.

A suit to recover advances made both in kind and in cash is not governed by Article 75, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. [p. 301, cols. 1 & 2.]

There is no general rule that a defendant in a suit on accounts cannot go behind a balance struck by him. In such a suit the plaintiff must prove what is due to him on the accounts. The striking of a balance is merely a piece of evidence the value of which must depend on the circumstances of each case. [p. 301, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 15th July 1915, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 30th April 1915, dismissing the claim.

Lala Sangam Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Kundan Lal (now represented by his sons) sued for Rs. 700 principal and Rs. 900 interest due on baki accounts, terminating with a balance for Rs 700 struck on Poh Sudi 10 Sambat 1965=1st January 1909. The defendants are Budh Ram (defendant No. 1) and his nephew Balla (defendant No. 2). The last balance is thumb-marked by defendant No. 1 only.

The issues struck were as follows:

1. Is plaintiff due the amount claimed, i.e., Rs. 1,600?
2. Is the suit as against defendant No. 2 within time and is he liable for part of the claim?

I will first dispose of the case as regards defendant No. 2. The first Court held that defendant No. 2 was not liable. That Court after going into the accounts held that the suit failed on the merits as regard defendant No. 1 and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed and in ground 4 of the memorandum of appeal pleaded that defendant No. 2 was also liable. But the learned District Judge says in his judgment, "in appeal it is not contended that defendant No. 2 is liable." And in this Court too plaintiff's Counsel admits that there should be no decree against defendant No. 2. It is clear, therefore, that defendant No. 2 must be freed from liability. But the District Judge, after finding that plaintiff is due Rs. 700, gives plaintiff a decree for this amount. The decree does not stand as a decree against defendant No. 1 alone, so the decree makes both defendants liable; and in this respect is incorrect.

Now as to defendant No. 1, who admittedly struck the last balance but says that the accounts were never explained to him and that the plaintiff wrote what he liked in the accounts. The first Court has gone into the accounts in some detail, pointing out that defendants' accounts are in some respect irregular, and that plaintiff has charged interest at exorbitant rates and has not allowed interest on repayments though charging full interest on all advances from date of advance to date of next balance. So the first Court held that nothing was proved to be really due on the accounts. The learned District Judge, while noting that plaintiff's accounts were certainly kept in a very peculiar manner to say the least of it, "held that as defendant had struck the balance he must abide by it." So the District Judge decreed the Rs. 700, claimed as principal, but declined to allow any interest. The defendants appeal to this Court, and the plaintiff has lodged cross-objections as regards the claim of interest, but at the commencement of the hearing of this appeal plaintiff's Counsel stated that he withdrew the cross-objections. So whatever decree is ultimately to be passed must not exceed Rs. 700 and must stand against defendant No. 1 only.

In the first place defendants' Pleader argues that the suit is time-barred. This is the first time that the plea of limitation has been raised so far as defendant No. 1 is concerned. First Counsel urges, relying on Jas Ram v. Attar Chand (1), that Article 85 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act applies. But the ruling cited refers to an entirely different class of dealings. In the present case plaintiff alone has been the banker making advances from time to time, and receiving payments from time to time. The balance has always been in plaintiff's favour. There is in this case no mutual account nor have there been reciprocal demands, for the debtor has never been in a position to make any demand. Clearly then Article 85 is inapplicable. Then the learned Pleader quotes Article 57, but this is not a suit merely to recover money loan, for plaintiff's advances have been in kind (grain) as well as in cash. Failing to find any other Article of the Schedule applicable defendants' Pleader gives up the plea as to limitation.

The next plea advanced is that plaintiff cannot sue merely on a balance. The answer is simple, viz., that plaintiff is not suing on a balance, but on accounts leading up to a balance struck—the balance being merely a piece of evidence.

The next plea is a sound one, viz., that if plaintiff is suing on accounts he must prove what is due to him on those accounts. Plaintiff's Counsel frankly admits that this plea is correct. The learned District Judge has not gone into the accounts, but has held that as defendant No. 1 struck the balance he must abide by it. A ruling is referred to in the District Judge's judgment as Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1913. This ruling I have been unable to trace. Chief Court Civil Appeal No. 24 of 1913 is not the case, nor is 24 P. R. 1913. Plaintiff's Counsel too states that he is unable to trace the ruling. I am unaware of any ruling to the effect that in a suit for money due on accounts the defendant cannot go behind a balance struck by him. The striking of the balance is merely a piece of evidence, the value of which must depend on the circumstances of the case. Where such a balance is struck by an educated man of business the presumption ordinarily is that he has understood the accounts, and the evidential value of the striking of the balance is great. But where the striker is an illiterate person as in the present case, the evidential value is much less. Experience tells us that such persons often strike balance after balance, being imposed on, by a shrewd money-lender who may keep the most irregular and fallacious accounts and may make gross overcharges, piling up the interest and (to put it briefly) committing all the sins which the first Court attributes to the plaintiff in the present case. The plaintiff is entitled to what is really due on the accounts and to nothing more. This does not mean that no compound interest is allowable. When balances are struck from time to time, the ordinary practice is to add interest to principal each time a balance is struck, and so compound interest is bound to come in. But where repayments are made between any two balances, the debtor is entitled to interest on each repayment from the date of repayment to the next balance, just in the same way as the creditor is entitled to interest on any future advance from the date of that advance till the next balance and to interest on the former balance till the date of the next balance. This, of course, necessitates a careful scrutiny of the accounts, but this is unavoidable. If necessary, a Commissioner can be appointed to go into the accounts, but the accounts must be gone through and plaintiff must be given a decree for so much as is actually due on the accounts and no more.

I accept the appeal, and reversing the decision of the lower Appellate Court, I remand the case to that Court for re-decision in accordance with what is written above. The accounts must be gone through and the plaintiff should be given a decree for whatever sum, if any, is actually due on the dealings. As already noted, the decree must not exceed Rs. 700 and the decree must stand against defendant No. 1 only, defendant No. 2 not being liable.

Stamp on appeal to this Court to be refunded, other costs in this Court to follow the event.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—These are cross-appeals against a decree of the District Judge of Monghyr, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr which dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs are professed followers of Mirza Ghulam Ahmad of Qadian in the Punjab, who acquired considerable notoriety as a preacher about 35 years ago and attracted a considerable following in the Punjab, and elsewhere. The followers of Ghulam Ahmad are known generally as Ahmadis or Qadianis. The plaintiffs' case was that, though dissenters from what is generally regarded as the orthodox Muhammadan faith, they are true Muhammadans. They say that till December 1911 they were in the habit of offering up their prayers both individually and as a congregation in a certain mosque in Mohalla Dilawarpur in the town of Monghyr, but were then prevented by the defendants from doing so. They claimed a declaration of their right to offer prayers in the mosque both individually and as a congregation and also an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with them. The defendants resisted the suit on various grounds and inter alia pleaded that the plaintiffs were not Muhammadans at all. The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were Muhammadans, but were not entitled to form a separate congregation for prayer in the mosque. He held that they were entitled to offer prayers individually behind the

KHALIL AHMAD v. ISRAFIL.

Hanifi imam of the mosque but as they did not desire to do that, he dismissed the suit. On appeal the District Judge agreed that the plaintiffs must be regarded as Muhammadans and that they could not be allowed to form a separate congregation for prayers in the mosque, but gave them a declaration that they were entitled to worship in the mosque behind the recognised imam and in the same congregation as the defendants.

In these second appeals the plaintiffs contend that their claim should have been decreed as laid and the defendants contend that the suit should be dismissed altogether.

Some attempt was made on behalf of the defendants to controvert the concurrent findings of the Courts below that the plaintiffs were Muhammadans, but it was not seriously pressed. The Courts below have given convincing reasons for holding that the plaintiffs are Muhammadans, notwithstanding their pronounced dissent from orthodox opinion on several important articles of the faith. The plaintiffs as Muhammadans appear to be entitled to enter the mosque if they please and to offer up prayers with the regular congregation behind the recognised imam, but as they profess to regard orthodox Muhammadans as infidels it is unlikely that they will take advantage of the decree made by the District Judge.

The important question in the case is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to pray as a separate congregation in the mosque, i. e., behind an imam of their own. The claim is an extravagant one and there can be little doubt that if it is allowed, there will be serious trouble in the mosque. The plaintiffs contend that every mosque is dedicated to the worship of God and is open to any Muhammadan, to whatever sect he may belong, who chooses to pray in it. The cases reported as Queen-Empress v. Ramzan (1), Ata-ullah v. Azim-ullah (2) and Jangu v. Ahmad Ullah (3) and other authorities on which the plaintiffs rely certainly support this contention, but they lend no support to the further contention advanced by the plaintiffs, namely, that the members of any and every sect are entitled to pray in every mosque as a separate congregation behind an imam chosen by themselves. The mosque in question has been in existence for about 200 years and appears to have been used all along by orthodox Sunni Muhammadans. In all probability it was established for the benefit of Sunni Muhammadans, though it may be that other Muhammadans are entitled to pray in it individually or join in the congregational worship which is conducted there. No authority whatever has been cited for the proposition that half a dozen members of a new sect (it is said that there are only so many Ahmadi in Monghyr) are entitled to thrust themselves into a mosque which has been used by orthodox Sunni Muhammadans for generations, form a separate congregation there, and disturb the old standing arrangements for the conduct of worship in the mosque. It is suggested that certain times might be allotted to the plaintiffs for congregational worship with their own imam. Such an arrangement appears to be unknown to the Muhammadan Law. It would curtail the time available for the orthodox Sunnis who have used the mosque for so many years. As already stated, the plaintiffs regard orthodox Sunnis as infidels. The orthodox Sunnis in their turn regard the Ahmadis as infidels and have, we are told, formally denounced them as such. There would almost inevitably be serious trouble in the mosque. It appears to me that what the plaintiffs wish to do is as likely to cause acute friction (if nothing worse) as if they actually disturbed the orthodox at their prayers in the mosque. As there is no authority for the contention advanced by the plaintiffs and it is clear that the rights enjoyed by the orthodox for generations would be seriously impaired by the intrusion of the plaintiffs as a separate congregation and it is certain that the admission of their claim would result in unseemly conflicts in the mosque, I am of opinion that their claim should be rejected.

I would dismiss both appeals with costs.

BALAK V. ALEY HASAN.

ROE, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. The sole object of the case is to secure a decree that the appellants are entitled to deliberately abstain from joining in the ordinary worship of the mosque and to appoint an imam of their own to read prayers for them after the ordinary worship has been concluded. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried this case is himself a Muhammadan gentleman and he quotes it in his judgment as a well-known rule of worship that where people deliberately come late to prayers they will not be allowed to have a second service of their own. This seems to me to be in accordance with an extract from B-7 and B-13 of Volume I of the chapter relating to azan of Zadul Maad which runs:—

"Even if he waits for the imam of his own sect, having removed himself from the midst of men of a different sect, while offering up prayers with congregation, this act of his will not be considered as his turning away from the congregation with abhorrence when it is known that he is waiting for a congregation which is most perfect."

This seems to imply that if he does turn away from the regular prayers with abhorrence he cannot be allowed to have a special imam of his own. In the case before us the plaintiffs state clearly that they will not, under any circumstances, worship behind an imam who does not recognise Mirza Ghulam Ahmad. Having made that statement of fact, it seems to me clear that they are not permitted to have subsequent services and worship under an imam of their own. I agree, therefore, that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

The findings of a Court should be specifically and precisely stated, whatever reasons therefor may be contained in the judgment.

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 20th January 1916.

Mr. Kanhaya Lal, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This case unfortunately illustrates the danger of not using precise language at some portion or other of the judgment. We strongly recommend Judges of the Courts below, when giving judgment, whatever they may say in their reasons, to conclude their findings by saying that they find as a fact certain specified things. The sole question raised in this case is whether there was mortgage or not, and inasmuch as a mortgage exists and was recorded in the patwari's papers, the only question is whether it can be satisfactorily proved. The first Court held against it. It is quite true that it held that the witnesses were subservient to the plaintiff and that they were tutored; but if one is to be very precise, it never found that they were not telling the truth. It is only by implication that it found that they were not to be believed. The second Court has done precisely the same thing, with the converse proposition. The second Court has agreed that they were certainly not independent but that they should have been believed, and has sent the case back to be determined upon a basis which would only be legal if it accepted the execution of the mortgage. We think that the language, although somewhat lacking in precision, can only be fairly construed as a finding of fact that the witnesses were found to be credible witnesses; in other words, that the mortgage was proved. By that finding we are bound, and we must, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bom. Act IV of 1887), s. 12—Playing cards for very insignificant stakes near a masjid—Offence, trifling—Sentence.

Accused, who were peons and mill-hands, were convicted by a Magistrate for gambling in that they played cards for very insignificant stakes on a hot afternoon under the cool shades of a masjid and were sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment each:

Held, that the offence was very trivial and the sentence inflicted grossly disproportionate and that a warning or a small fine would have answered the ends of justice.

Criminal application for revision against conviction and sentence passed by the City Magistrate, first class, Ahmedabad.

JUDGMENT.—We think it a pity that the gambling laws, through the injudicious activity of the Police and want of discretion on the part of the Magistracy, should sometimes be worked so harshly as they have been in this case. Without going into a discussion of the points raised by the learned Counsel for the applicants, it will be sufficient to say that every feature of the case convinces us that it was of the most trifling character and one which might have been passed over by the Police with a caution or, if brought before the Magistrate, dealt with by him in a very different way from that in which he has dealt with these offenders. They are peons and mill-hands, and on a hot afternoon betook themselves to the cool shades of the Daskroi Masjid where, adopting the Magistrate's finding of fact, they were amusing themselves by playing cards for very insignificant stakes. The Police raided the place and dragged nine of these persons before the Magistrate, who convicted five of them and actually sentenced them to fifteen days' imprisonment. Such a sentence in such circumstances appears to us to be monstrous and altogether out of proportion to the criminality of the acts charged. If the Police had thought it worthwhile to bring such persons before a Magistrate on such charges, we should have thought that the Magistrate would have seen that this was no serious matter, and if he had felt it necessary upon the evidence to convict the accused persons at all, he would have let them go with a small fine. Unfortunately they appear to have undergone seven days' imprisonment before they were released on bail by this High Court.

We, therefore, now remit the unexpired portion of the sentence. We do not interfere with the conviction, because in the circumstances there is no occasion for us to do so.

Sentence remitted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction, proper Court to apply to for—Notice—Order granting sanction.

Ordinarily an application for sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence should be made to the Court in which the alleged false evidence was given. When application is made to another Court, it is incumbent on such Court to send notice to the opposite party to show cause. [p. 306, col. 1.]

An order granting sanction to prosecute should show reasons why the sanction is granted. [p. 303, col. 1.]

Mr. Lambert, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—The six petitioners apply for an order to revoke an order made by the Sessions Judge of Prome sanctioning their prosecution under section 194, Indian Penal Code, for giving false evidence before the Committing Magistrate. The case was committed by the Magistrate to the Sessions, when the Public Prosecutor asked leave to withdraw the prosecution. The Sessions Judge, after perusing the evidence taken by the Committing Magistrate, allowed the case to be withdrawn and intimated that the case appeared to be concocted and that the executive authorities would, no doubt, consider the propriety of initiating proceedings under section 194, Indian Penal Code. The Public Prosecutor then put in a petition to the Sessions Judge applying for sanction to prosecute these six petitioners, and the Sessions Judge's order is comprised in the three words "sanction is granted" written at the foot of the petition. Ordinarily an application for sanction in such a case should be made to the Court in which the alleged false evidence was given and there is no reason apparently why that should not have been done in the present case. The Sessions Judge, not having been the Court before whom the alleged false evidence was given, should have issued notice to the petitioners and have given them an opportunity of showing cause why sanction should not be granted; and the Sessions Judge should have specified his reasons for having granted the sanction. For these reasons the sanction is revoked. This order does not preclude the Public Prosecutor from applying for sanction in the proper way.

An order granting sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence ought to specify the statement alleged to be false.

Obiter dictum.—It is no offence to make a false statement to the Police.

JUDGMENT.—The Magistrate has sanctioned the prosecution of the applicant for an offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code, of giving false evidence. He states that either their statements to the Police must have been false or their evidence in the case. Their statements to the Police if false would not constitute an offence, and he does not specify the statements made by the applicants which are alleged to be false statements

JUDGMENT.

BEAMAN, J.—This is an appeal by the Government of Bombay against the acquittal of two women by the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad. The offences with which they were charged were under sections 317 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts, which are undisputed, are that the younger of the two accused persons, a girl of fourteen, became pregnant while still unmarried, and in order to conceal her shame from her parents with the connivance of the elder of the two accused, her sister, she was conveyed to the Civil Hospital of Ahmedabad where she was safely delivered of a child. As soon as she was sufficiently recovered, the two sisters agreed that it would be advisable to dispose of the child secretly. Accordingly, the young mother handed the child to her elder sister, who carried it by train to Mahomedabad where she left it in a second class compartment. The child was carefully wrapped up and a bottle of milk was left by its side, so that as soon as it was discovered by any one there should be means of feeding it.

These being the admitted facts, the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that no offence had been committed by either of the accused persons. The mother, in his opinion, was the only one of the two who had the care of the child and she neither exposed nor left it with the intention of wholly abandoning it. Her elder sister, according to the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge—a view which had formerly been expressed in the Madras High Court—was not a person having the care of the child within the meaning of the section, because she was only entrusted with the child for the express purpose of exposing or leaving it.

A further point has been argued before us, viz., that in any view, neither of the accused had the intention of wholly abandoning the child. That, we think, is unnecessary to discuss. It is perfectly clear that having regard to the true objects of sections of this kind, we should not be too nice in fitting facts literally to the words of the section but look to them as a whole, and so looking at them we should have no hesitation whatever in saying that the intention of both the sisters was to get rid of the child, as far as they were concerned, that is to say, of wholly abandoning it without at the same time providing for its immediate protection and care by other persons.

The first point, however, needs a little more consideration, although we have no doubt that the learned Judge was wrong. It is not so easy to demonstrate this by dialectical analysis. We cannot help feeling, however, that in cases of this kind, any person receiving an infant from its mother on the distinct understanding, as in this case, that the mother never desired or wished to have the child back again, must in law be regarded as a person having the care of that child until he or she had transferred it to the care and custody of some other person or institution. The difficulty arises in cases where the care or possession—whatever term be used—intended by the mother, would be in the contemplation of both the persons concerned for an extremely short time. Suppose, for example, the mother desires to abandon her child and on that distinct understanding she requests another to leave it in a lonely field some two minutes' distance away, we are still of opinion that during that space of time, the second person carrying the child with no other object than that of exposing and leaving it in the appointed place would have the care of it sufficiently within the meaning and contemplation of section 317. This can be easily exemplified by retaining all other conditions but extending that of time. Suppose a second case in which the mother makes over her child in India to a person with the intention that that second person should carry the child to South America and there abandon it. The intervening period might be several months and during the whole of that time the person in actual possession of that child would, in our opinion, have the care of that child within the meaning and contemplation of the section and we do not think that in such a case the facts would ever occasion any doubt or hesitation at all. But if we are right, mere extension of time could not affect the underlying principle, and that principle again would have to be applied in each case with reference to its facts and also with that degree of common sense which Judges of experience are supposed to exercise while administering the criminal law. It is sufficient for our purposes to look first at the real intentions of the persons and see whether they fall within the mischief which the particular section of the Indian Penal Code is designed to strike at. If we needed confirmation of this view, we might look to the English Statute, where the case with which we are dealing has been expressly foreseen and provided for. There it is enacted that a person, situated exactly as the accused No. 2 was situated in this case, that is to say, having the de facto possession of the child, has the care of the child for the purpose of the Statute.

While, therefore, we think that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in his law, we agree with him in his estimate of the moral guilt of the accused, and the learned Government Pleader has been instructed merely to ask for an expression of the law from this Bench and not to press in any way for sentence. Being of opinion, however, that the acquittal was wrong the law compels us to convict and, therefore, to inflict some sentence.

We reverse the acquittal and convict both the accused under sections 317 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code and direct that each of them do undergo one day's simple imprisonment.

As we understand that the accused are in Bombay, the sentence will be sufficiently carried out by detaining them until the rising of the Court this evening.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I think this is a very pitiable case, one in which no possible object can be gained by imposing a substantial sentence. But I think the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in the view he took of the law. It seems to me that when the accused No. 2, the elder sister, took or received this child from its mother and conveyed it to a railway carriage and then went off with it leaving the mother behind, she became immediately responsible for the well-being of the child. It does not matter that her ultimate object was to leave the child and return without it. She was nevertheless for the time being the person who had the care of the child, I think, within the meaning and intention of these words as used in section 317 of the Indian Penal Code.

Acquittal reversed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 435, 439, 145, scope of—Revision—High Court, non-chartered, revisional powers of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate acting under s. 145—Preliminary order—Grounds not recorded, effect of.

Section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, simply sets out the revisional powers of a High Court. It does not purport to qualify, add to, or detract from, any of the provisions of section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, and has to be read along with that section in order to find whether certain proceedings are open to revision by the High Court. The words in section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, "the record of which has been called for by itself", are not used in contradistinction to "which otherwise comes to its knowledge", and these latter words cannot be read so as to have reference to a petition. [p. 309, col. 2.]

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water, or the boundaries thereof, within his jurisdiction. [p. 310, col. 2.]

There is nothing in section 435 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, to prevent a non-chartered High Court interfering in proceedings which purport to be proceedings under Chapter XII, in a case where the Magistrate has initiated those proceedings without jurisdiction to do so [p. 311, col. 1.]

The mere mention of an order as being made under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, will not of itself make that order an order under Chapter XII, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 310, col. 1.]

Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan, 5 O. C. 1, referred to.

But it is to be presumed that the work of a Court is done decently and in order, and if a Magistrate has jurisdiction he can enter the ring-fence of Chapter XII, Criminal Procedure Code, and he cannot be followed nor his procedure examined. [p. 310, cols. 1 & 2.]

UDAI BHAN PARTAP SINGH v. RAM SAMAJH.

Hence, a non-chartered High Court (which cannot avail of the general powers of superintendence conferred by section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act) cannot entertain an application for revision of proceedings purporting to be under Chapter XII, Criminal Procedure Code, unless such High Court can ascertain without calling for the record of the lower Court, e. g., by copies of the proceedings or by the affidavit of the applicant, that the lower Court initiated those proceedings without jurisdiction to do so, that is to say, that the Magistrate in question was not such as could have exercised jurisdiction in the matter or that there was no information upon which the proceedings could be started. Application against the order of the Magistrate, 1st class, Fyzabad, dated the 26th April 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Applicant.

Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure that this Court should call for and set aside proceedings under section 145 of the Code. This application was filed before the learned Judicial Commissioner, who has recorded an order expressing his doubts as to whether this Court has any power to send for the record. In view, however, of the ruling of a Bench of this Court in Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1), which would seem to justify the admission of this application, the learned Judicial Commissioner has referred the application for admission to this Bench. The applicant and the opposite party have both been heard.

It is first worthy of notice that the application is termed an application under section 439. The provisions of section 435, sub-section 3, are very clear. Proceedings under Chapter XII are not proceedings within the meaning of section 435. They are not, therefore, proceedings in which the High Court may call for and examine the record of any inferior Court within the local limits of its jurisdiction. It is no doubt to anticipate this objection that this application is termed an application under section 439. Section 439 sets out the powers of revision which a High Court has in the case of any proceeding, the record of which has been called for by itself, or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. This section must be read along with section 435. It does not purport to qualify, add to, or detract from any of the provisions of the latter section. We have no doubt that the language in section 439, "the record of which has been called for by itself", is not used in contradistinction to "which otherwise comes to its knowledge," and consider that there is no room for the reading of these words, "which otherwise comes to its knowledge", as having reference to a petition. Section 439 does not confer upon any High Court any power to take proceedings. It only sets out the powers of revision that the High Court possesses in cases which have come before it. This question has been discussed at some length in Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (2), where it is noted that it could hardly have been the intention of the Legislature that the ordinary channel by which proceedings are examined be blocked up by the Legislature with respect to the proceedings contemplated in section 435 (3), but that Courts should exercise the power of revision, if the record came before them in some other manner not explained. The present application in fact must be treated as an application asking this Court to take action under section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

In Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1) it is laid down by a Bench of this Court that—"the mere circumstance that an order, which it is sought to have revised under the High Court's powers of revision under the Code of Criminal Procedure, purports to have been made under section 145 of the Code, does not debar that Court from the exercise of those powers, and that it can interfere with the order, if it is really not an order under that section, but is passed without jurisdiction."

(1) 5 O. C. 1.

(2) 17 Ind. Cas. 65; 36 M. 275; 23 M. L. J. 499; 12 M. L. T. 49; (1912) M. W. N. 1154; 13 Cr. L. J. 753.

UDAI BHAN PARTAB SINGH v. RAM SAMAJH.

It is suggested, however, that this ruling is incorrect, inasmuch as this Court is unable to send for the record, and so is unable to determine whether the order was or was not passed with jurisdiction. Records under Chapter XII of the Code have been frequently sent for by High Courts and on several occasions by this Court and orders passed by Magistrates have been interfered with and set aside. It is argued that High Courts have been enabled to send for records because of their powers of superintendence under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, but that this Court has no such extraordinary powers. There can be no doubt, as was laid down in Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1) and as has been ruled elsewhere, that the mere mention of an order as being made under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure will not of itself make that order an order under Chapter XII; but it is argued for the opposite party, who opposes the admission of this application, that even remembering this latter principle, this Court is entirely debarred from interfering with an order which purports to have been passed under Chapter XII, however scandalous the results may be, because it cannot send for the record. That such should be the intention of the Legislature would appear improbable and an argument leading to such a result calls for careful scrutiny.

It is to be presumed that the work of a Court is done decently and in order. Where a proceeding, therefore, purports to be a proceeding under Chapter XII, this Court will presume that it is such a proceeding; and where it cannot be ascertained without calling for the record, whether the Court below has acted without jurisdiction, section 435 (3) will stand in the way of any proceeding in revision. The doubt which has arisen as to the soundness of the ruling reported in Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1) has been caused, we think, by the fact that in some reported cases Courts have been found to interfere with orders passed in the course of properly initiated proceedings, orders which could be considered only on examination of the record. But it appears to us, and we have the authority of both the Allahabad High Court [Jhingai Singh v. Ram Partap (3)] and the Madras High Court [Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (2)] in our support, that if a Magistrate has jurisdiction he can enter the ring-fence of Chapter XII; and he cannot be followed nor his procedure examined. It is in fact the initial jurisdiction only of the Magistrate which can be looked to: and that this Court will be able to do without calling for the record. It is, of course, nonetheless the duty of all Magistrates, as the Madras High Court rightly remarks, to comply strictly and fully with all the provisions of Chapter XII, and of District Magistrates, where necessary, to draw the attention of Subordinate Magistrates to this point.

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water, or the boundaries thereof, within his jurisdiction. The fact, that there being information the Magistrate was satisfied by that information that a dispute of the above nature existed, will be evidenced, in our opinion, by the fact that he has proceeded to take action upon that information. The preliminary order in writing which the Magistrate, becoming properly seized of the case, makes under section 145 is in fact but the first step of his procedure under that chapter; and we agree with the Madras High Court that if there be an omission to record grounds in this preliminary order such omission does not affect his jurisdiction. That preliminary order remains in such a case an order passed under Chapter XII the correctness, legality or propriety of which cannot be brought in question.

If an applicant can show to the Court, therefore, by copies of the proceedings, or perhaps by affidavit, that the Magistrate in question was not a first class Magistrate, nor a Sub-Divisional Magistrate exercising jurisdiction in the sub-division where the proceedings have arisen, or that there was no information that a dispute existed likely to cause breach of the peace concerning any land or water or the boundaries thereof, then he will have shown prima facie to the Court that the proceedings in question are not proceedings under Chapter XII at all, whether or not the Magistrate may have been pleased to call them so; and in that case this Court would have power under section 435, clause 1, of the Code of Criminal Procedure to call for the record and satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any order passed and as to the regularity of the proceedings. We think, therefore, that the ruling of Wajid Ali Shah v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (1), while correctly laying down the law, is likely to be misleading: and we prefer to say that there is nothing in section 435 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, to prevent a non-chartered High Court interfering in proceedings which purport to be proceedings under Chapter XII, in a case where the Magistrate has initiated those proceedings without jurisdiction to do so.

(3) 1 Ind. Cns. 762; 31 A. 150; 6 A. L. J. 113; 9 Cr. L. J. 382.

THUMBUSWAMY PILLAY v. MA LONE.

We now proceed to apply these principles to the present application. We find from a copy of his order that the Magistrate was led to take action by reason of a report which was submitted to him dated 16th January 1916 by Jagannath, Sub-Inspector, which contained information that a dispute existed likely to cause a breach of the peace. It is not denied that the Magistrate who held these proceedings was empowered as a first class Magistrate to do so. We, therefore, find that he had jurisdiction.

In the application it is urged that the Magistrate did not set out in the preliminary order that he was satisfied that a dispute existed. His omission to record grounds, if there was such omission, does not affect his jurisdiction, this preliminary order being the first step of his procedure, after he had become properly seized of the case. The Magistrate, therefore, having jurisdiction by virtue of which he initiated the proceedings, no revision can lie. The application is rejected.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 488, 489—Maintenance—Arrears, execution of order for—Alteration of amount.

In an application for execution of an order for maintenance for wife and son, a Magistrate can under section 489, Criminal Procedure Code, go into the question whether the son has become able to maintain himself subsequently to the order under section 488 and whether the son was in fact able to maintain himself during the period for which arrears of maintenance are applied for. [p. 312, col. 1.]

Krishnasamy Iyer v. Chandraradhana, 20 Ind. Cas. 1005; 25 M. L. J. 349; (1913) M. W. N. 695; 14 M. L. T. 224; 14 Cr. L. J. 525, referred to.

Where the original order made no specific allotment for the wife separately, it is not competent for a Magistrate to do so in enforcement of an order under section 489. [p. 312, col. 1.]

Review of the order of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, dated the 10th August 1916, passed in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 44 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Ma Lone, applied to the Magistrate to enforce an order made under section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by one of his predecessors. That order was that the petitioner, A. T. Pillay, should make a monthly allowance of Rs. 42 for the maintenance of Ma Lone and her son by him, Devadson. Nothing was said as to what portion was to be for the wife and what portion was to be for the son.

Ma Lone's application was for seven months' arrears at the above rate less what had been paid.

At the time she applied the son was over 19 years of age, and had been in employment and earning sufficient for him to live on. He had, however, been out of work during the seven months for which the allowance was claimed. A. T. Pillay in objecting to enforcement of the order relied on no allowance being claimable on account of the son in consequence of the son being no longer "a child unable to maintain itself".

The Magistrate considered that he could not go into this objection, because no application had been made to revise or set aside his predecessor's order, and consequently he was bound to enforce that order so far as concerned the past. He, however, altered the monthly allowance payable for the future, and made it Rs. 25 for the maintenance of the wife only. She objects that the amount is insufficient.

The Magistrate's view, that he could not enter into the question of whether the order should not be enforced in consequence of the son not having been for the period in question a child unable to maintain itself, appears to me to have been wrong.

If a husband can in objecting to the enforcement of an order rely on his having divorced his wife, as was held in Shah Abu Ilyas v. Ufat Bibi (1), there appears to be no reason why a father should not be entitled to raise objection that the child for whose maintenance he was ordered to make an allowance has become able to maintain itself.

It appears to me to be unnecessary to deal with the question of whether the son ceased to be a child within the purview of the section after he reached the age of 18 years. I hesitate to adopt the view of Sankaran Nair, J., in Krishnasamy Iyer v. Chandra-dhana (2) without further argument, for it appears to me that the Legislature may have intended to make a father liable for the maintenance of his child throughout its life if owing to some mental or corporal defect it is unable to maintain itself.

In the present case there can be no question as to the son being able to maintain himself if he obtains employment.

The foundation of the order was taken away when he became able to maintain himself, and so far as he was concerned the order became spent, and was unenforceable.

Then arises the question whether it could be enforced in part for the benefit of the wife. The Magistrate who made the order not having allotted any particular portion for the wife, I do not think it was open to the Magistrate who was asked to enforce the order to do this either as regards arrears or future maintenance. In my opinion the order of the Magistrate was unjustified both as regards the order for payment of arrears, and as regards the payment of allowance for the future. It is set aside. The order of the 23rd September 1909 must be regarded as no longer in force.

Ma Lone should make another application under section 488 for an allowance for herself alone, and at the hearing of that application the question of what will be a proper amount can be fully gone into having regard to the circumstances of her husband, and what a husband of his means should allow his wife for her maintenance.

Petition dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 247, whether applies, when complainant is absent from Court to which his case is transferred.

Section 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply where the complainant is present in Court with his witnesses on the date fixed for trial, but being unaware that his case has been transferred to another Court fails to appear in that Court when the case is called on for hearing later on in the day. Criminal Reference by the Additional District Magistrate, Dacca, dated the 9th May 1916, against an order of a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Dacca, dated the 7th March 1916.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca, under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code. The petitioner Etim Haji lodged a complaint against one Hamid and others under sections 426 and 447, Indian Penal Code. After a preliminary enquiry an order was passed on 10th February 1916 summoning the accused Hamid for trial of an offence under section 426, Indian Penal Code. The case was fixed to be heard on the 7th March 1916 in the Court of Mr. D. M. Sen, Deputy Magistrate, Dacca. On that date, both the complainant and the accused appeared before Mr. Sen with their respective witnesses. The Deputy Magistrate thereafter recorded the following order in the order sheet: "Five witnesses for prosecution and five witnesses for defence. To Sadar Bench for favour of disposal." The case was taken up later on in the day by Mr. R. N. Das and Mr. K. Azimullah, who formed the Bench of Magistrates to whom the case had been transferred. The complainant and his muktears were called for several times, but were not found. The Magistrates accordingly recorded the following order: "accused present; complainant absent; accused acquitted under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code." Shortly after this the complainant, it is said, appeared before the Magistrates and prayed that the case might be revived, as he was not aware of the order of transfer and was waiting with his witnesses in the Court of Mr. Sen in the belief that his case would be tried there. The Magistrates stated that as an order under section 247 had already been recorded, the case could not be revived by them. The complainant then applied to the District Magistrate, who has referred the matter to this Court with the recommendation that the case should be revived. We are of opinion that his recommendation should be accepted. We agree with him that section 247 has not been rightly applied to this case, as the complainant was present in Court with his witnesses on the date fixed for trial and was not aware that the case had been transferred to other Magistrates. This view is supported by the decision in Romanath Bal v. Behari Bag Bagai (1). In fact in the case before us, the order of transfer showed on the face of it that the complainant was present with his witnesses. This was possibly overlooked by the Magistrates, when they made the order under section 247. We, accordingly, set aside the order under section 247 and direct that the trial do proceed in accordance with law.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 256, applicability of, to inquiries into cases triable by Sessions Court—Accused, right of, to cross-examine prosecution witnesses after framing of charge.

Section 256 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides, in the trial of warrant cases, for the re-call of witnesses for the prosecution for cross-examination, after the charge has been framed. The section does not apply to enquiries into cases triable by the Sessions Court. In such cases the evidence of each witness will ordinarily be concluded as each witness is examined and the accused has no right to have his cross-examination conducted after the charge has been framed.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Sitapur, dated the 8th August 1916.

JUDGMENT.—This is a clear case, and the appellant has escaped with a light sentence. The evidence is amply sufficient to prove the offence charged.

There are two points which call for remark. The charge-sheet, which was drawn up in a very slipshod and untidy manner, contains at the foot the note "pleads not guilty: no cross-examination wanted." The Magistrate had in his mind, it would appear, section 253 of the Criminal Procedure Code. That section, the provisions of which are too often misunderstood, provides, in the trial of warrant cases, for the re-call (not re-summoning) of witnesses for the prosecution for cross-examination, after the charge has been framed. The chapter in which this section occurs has no reference to the enquiry into cases triable by the Sessions Court. In cases which are being committed to Sessions, the evidence of each witness will ordinarily be concluded as each witness is examined; and the accused has no right to have his cross-examination conducted after the charge has been framed.

The 2nd point is the record of the examination of the Medical Officer. That evidence was recorded formally in English, and a certificate was appended that that evidence might be used at the Sessions.

All members of notified area Committees are not public servants within the meaning of section 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Jullundur, dated the 19th May 1916, affirming that of the Magistrate, 3rd class, Jullundur, dated the 25th April 1916, discharging the accused.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for Bakhshi Sohan Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Badar ul-Din Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(1) The facts are given in the order of the learned Sessions Judge, in which he has held that the respondent could not be prosecuted in respect of the alleged offences under sections 323, 504, Indian Penal Code, without the sanction of the Local Government as provided by section 197, Criminal Procedure Code. I have referred to the record, and there is nothing on it to show that the respondent is "a public servant not removeable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government". It is said that he is a member of the Committee of the notified area of Alawalpur, but of this there is no proof on the record; and even if he were a member of the Alawalpur Committee, it would not follow that he is a public servant who is not removeable from his office without the sanction of the Local Government. The lower Courts have simply assumed that he is not so removeable from his office and have applied section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, to this case upon that assumption.

(2) I accept this revision, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and send the case back with a direction to the Magistrate to proceed according to law. I note that the objection as to want of jurisdiction by reason of the alleged applicability of section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, was not taken by the respondent until after the whole of the evidence for the prosecution had been recorded and he was called upon to enter upon his defence.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 24, 25, 26, 27—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162 Incriminating statements to Police officers and Headman, admissibility of—Statement of one accused against another.

Incriminating statements made to a Police officer while in custody are inadmissible in evidence. [p. 314, col. 2.]

Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act preclude admission of a statement by one accused against another and also of a confirming statement by another accused in reply to questions put by Police Constables in the Headman's presence. [p. 315, col. 1.]

An incriminating statement by an accused to a Headman, in consequence of the latter telling him it was better he spoke the truth because if the other side called witnesses, the truth against him would come out, is inadmissible under section 24. [p. 315, col. 1.]

Appeals from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hanthawaddy, dated the 7th August 1916, passed in Sessions Trial No. 32 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.—Incriminating statements made by the accused to Police officers and to Headmen, whilst two of them were in custody of the Police, have been wrongly admitted in evidence in this case.

BAYAN ALI v. EMPEROR.

Zeta and On Nyun were arrested on the night of the 20th March. Head Constable Ba Lat questioned them in the presence of Headman Maung Ba. Zeta according to these witnesses said he had given two currency notes of Rs. 100 each to the accused Po Tin. This was obviously an admission that Zeta had given part of the money taken in the robbery to Po Tin. Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act precluded the admission of this statement of Zeta, and of the confirming statement of On Nyun. Section 27 could not apply to such statements.

Inspector Ba On questioned Po Tin and recorded his statement. The record was inadmissible in evidence, but the Inspector was allowed to state what Po Tin had said. In the course of his statement he said he had left some money with Po Chi and that two of the Rs. 100 currency notes in this money had been received by him from Zeta.

Rs. 590 were subsequently obtained by the Police from Po Chi and Rs. 100 from his son-in-law Po Hman. The part of the statement as to his having left money with Po Chi may be possibly said to have been information which led to the finding of the money with Po Chi, but the part of it in which Po Tin stated that he had received the money from Zeta was excluded from evidence by the words of the latter part of section 27.

Head Constable Ba Lat deposed to similar statements made to him, and also said that Po Tin pointed out the two hundred rupee notes and he said he had received from Zeta. This also was clearly inadmissible in evidence.

Headman Maung The deposed to what led up to Po Tin making his first incriminating statement. He admitted having told him he had better tell the truth because if the other accused called witnesses, the case against him would come out. Section 24 would apply if this was the case. This witness represents that it was he who questioned Po Tin on the following day, but the Inspector was present. It is of no consequence who put the questions: the Inspector was taking a statement under section 622 of the Criminal Procedure Code and what Po Tin stated on the occasion must be taken to be a statement to a Police officer

Headman Tun Baw deposed to Po Tin having said in Po Chi's house that two of the notes were those he had got from Zeta, but this was in the presence of Head Constable Ba Lat and must also be regarded as a confession to a Police officer, although Po Tin had not been formally arrested at the time.

Leaving out of consideration the evidence wrongly admitted, there remains ample evidence to support the convictions of Zeta and On Nyun

Po Saw's identification of On Nyun may be weak, but there is no reason to doubt the identifications of him by Maung Zeya and Abdul Majid.

The appeals of Zeta and On Nyun are dismissed. Very little remains, however, against Po Tin. The fact that he was seen in company of Zeta and On Nyun on the day previous to the robbery as deposed to by Law Paw is not sufficient to support his conviction.

Rs. 690 was, no doubt, obtained in consequence of Po Tin's information, but the evidence as to his having stated that he got two of the currency notes from Zeta being inadmissible, there is nothing to connect these notes with the robbery.

Po Tin's appeal is allowed. His conviction and the sentence on him are set aside, and he is acquitted.

Appeal allowed.

BAYAN ALI v. EMPEROR.

The Police submitted a charge-sheet against the accused under section 342, Indian Penal Code. On the day fixed for the hearing of the case the complainant filed a petition in the following terms:

"This case by the intervention of arbitrators has been compromised. Hence the petitioner does not want to proceed with the case and to get his witnesses examined, so this petition is filed and it is prayed that the case may be struck off without hearing". The Magistrate examined the complainant and found that there had been no compromise:

Held, (1) that it was the duty of the Magistrate to examine the complainant in order to satisfy himself that the petition was really one of compromise. [p. 317, col. 2.]

(2) That the petition was one of withdrawal under section 248, and not one of compromise under section 345, Criminal Procedure Code, and, therefore, the trial did not come to an end on its presentation. [p. 317, cols. 1 & 2.]

Revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Mozufferpore, dated the 18th April 1916.

Mr. R. A. Baxter (with him Messrs. Sarat Kumar Banerjee and Bankim Chunder Dey), for the Petitioners.

Mr. Fakhr-ud Din, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

On the 30th of January 1916 at 6 A. M. the complainant Raghunaek Misser reported at the Bagaha Police Station that one hour before sunset on the previous day his brother Makut Nath Misser had been wrongfully confined by the accused Bayan Ali, a Sazawal of the Bettiah Raj, with the help of the patwari and the peons of that Raj.

The Police investigated this information and submitted a charge-sheet against the accused, fixing the 10th of February 1916 for trial and recording that they had directed the complainant and his witnesses to appear at the Bettiah Court on that day.

On the 10th of February 1916 the prosecution witnesses and the accused appeared before the Sub-Divisional Officer and a petition was filed by the complainant Raghunaek Misser which has been translated thus: "As this case is between the amlas of the Raj on one side and your petitioner the ryot of the Raj on the other, therefore, by the intervention of arbitrators it has been compromised. Hence the petitioner does not want to proceed with the case and to get his witnesses examined, so this petition is filed and it is prayed that the case may be struck-off without hearing."

Upon this the Sub-Divisional Magistrate wrote: "This may be forwarded to Superintendent of Police. Complainant states to me that his case is true but he wishes to withdraw it because he is a Raj asami and accused are Raj servants. This, however, scarcely seems sufficient reason".

Upon this the Court Sub-Inspector wrote to the Superintendent of Police:—"I humbly beg to state that in the marginally noted case the complainant has filed a petition of withdrawal which has been forwarded by the Sub-Divisional Officer to your honour. I, therefore, beg to send herewith the judicial record of the case along with case diaries and the petition of withdrawal filed by the complainant for your honour's perusal and orders. The next day fixed for this case is 17th February 1916".

Upon this the Superintendent of Police wrote: "I am not willing to withdraw the case but have no objection to the case being compromised."

On the 17th of February the prosecution witnesses were examined and the accused examined and a charge framed and the case was adjourned to the 28th for cross-examination.

On the 28th of February the mukhtear appearing for the accused applied for an adjournment in order that the accused might obtain the assistance of the Raj in his defence, and the case was thereon adjourned to the 13th of March. There is on the record a letter which runs, "correspondence between the Collector and the Estate to defend the case at Raj expense is going on but no sanction has yet been received". There is also on the file a letter from Mr. Hudson, Assistant Manager of the Raj, saying that the Pleader engaged in the case on behalf of the Raj was unable to appear and asking for an adjournment. The case was continued and ended in the conviction of the accused and upon appeal to the District Judge the findings of facts of the Sub-Divisional Court were confirmed and the sentences confirmed.

The applicant comes before us in revision on two grounds: Firstly, that the petition of the 10th of February was in fact a petition of compromise and secondly, the sentence of three months' imprisonment is excessive.

RAYAN ALI V. EMPEROR.

The first point for consideration in this case is—Was the petition of the 10th of February clearly a petition of compromise? The Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the Superintendent of Police did not regard it as such. The actual words used are "sulah ho gaya". No mention is made of the section under which the petition was filed. The first half of it might be taken as a petition of compromise; the second half of it as a petition of withdrawal. The words which have been translated "without hearing" are "bila tajwiz file buktan se kharij farmaya jawe". "Compromise" is a word which in itself contemplates an arrangement to which there are two parties. "Withdrawal" has no such meaning. A case is compromised if with the consent of the accused it is withdrawn. A case is withdrawn under section 248 without the consent of the accused. It was clearly open to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to satisfy himself under what section this petition was before him. In order to satisfy himself it was open to him to question the complainant. The answers of the complainant clearly indicate that the case had not been compromised but was being withdrawn without the consent of the accused. The subsequent action of the accused shows clearly that he had never consented to the compromise of the case. The fact that the European Officers of the Raj were personally interesting themselves in the matter, indicates that through them the accused must have been aware that the Police were willing that the case should be compromised, and unwilling that it should be withdrawn. If in fact the case had been compromised, there was no reason why the accused should not have drawn the attention of the Magistrate to the fact. Not only did he not do so in the Sub-Divisional Court, but nowhere in his grounds of appeal or in the argument in appeal has he suggested to the Sessions Judge that the case had with his consent been compromised.

On behalf of the Crown our attention has been drawn to the decision in Murray v. Queen-Empress (1) and on behalf of the appellant to the case of Abdool Biswas v. Khater Mondal (2). That case is authority only for the proposition that where a Magistrate has satisfied himself that the complainant understood his petition and really desired to compound the case, the case must be compromised. Even this decision contemplates a questioning of the complainant in order that the Magistrate may be satisfied that the application is in fact one for composition and not for withdrawal.

On this point Mr. Baxter further urges that inasmuch as the case was a warrant case it could not be withdrawn and, therefore, the petition could not have been one under section 248. In this connection we may refer to the case of Ganesh, Narayan Sathe, In re (3): "The Magistrate had no authority to allow the complaint to be withdrawn and he ought to have informed the complainant thereof". It appears to us that this is precisely the course which the Magistrate took. He was willing that the Police should enter a nolle prosequi but he was not willing that the complainant should withdraw the case and informed him that he would not allow him to do so.

The Superintendent of Police went further and said, "apart from the provisions of section 345 the complaint shall not be withdrawn". We are of opinion that the trial did not come to an end upon the petition of the 10th of February 1916, that that petition was not a petition made under section 345 and that the subsequent proceedings were in order and that no error of law exists upon which we can interfere under section 439.

With regard to the sentence of three months' imprisonment, we are in agreement with the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge and of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in respect to the serious nature of the applicant's interference with the liberty of Makut. At the same time it is difficult to lose sight of the remarks made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in the course of his judgment "that the occurrence could not be considered by the submissive and backward people living to the north of this sub-division a very abnormal one or one that they should get wildly excited about. The surprising thing is that it has come to Court at all."

The actual facts of the case are that

EMPEROR V. SUBA SINGH.

Makut Nath was tied to a post by a grass rope and was given a shawl in which to wrap himself, and on his release was so little indignant at the treatment he had received that he sat down cheerfully and listened to the recitation of psalms in the house in which he had been tied up. It is clear that the people were unconscious of any offence involving grave criminality and that the applicant did not realise that he was doing anything heinous. The applicant has been only three days in jail but has been taken to jail twice, once upon the completion of the trial in the Sub-Divisional Court and once on his surrendering to his bail on the 9th of May. He was released by the Sessions Judge on the day after his conviction and by ourselves one day after his surrender. Nevertheless we think that the punishment inflicted is sufficiently deterrent to his offending in this manner again, and justice does not require that we should send him back to jail. We do not propose to increase the fine imposed upon him, for the reason that although the Raj has done all it could in giving him the best legal advice available, it will not overlook such unwarrantable abuse of power. We direct that the sentence of imprisonment be remitted. The applicant is released from his bail.

With the conviction and the sentence of fine imposed upon him and his co-accused, the peons Seopujan Singh, Sarup Rai and Timal Mian, we do not see any reason to interfere.

There is no finding of fact that the patwari Jaleswar Lal did anything to facilitate the commission of this offence. The conviction of, and sentence upon, Jaleswar Lal are set aside.

Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Patna.

The Deputy Government Advocate, for the Crown

Mr. S. Sinha (with him Mr. Nirsu Narayan Sinha), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—Suba Singh and twelve others were committed to the Court of Session to be tried on charges framed under sections 399 and 144 of the Indian Penal Code. The Jury unanimously acquitted all the accused of the charges under sections 399 and 144, Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury pointed out that though the evidence might not justify a conviction under section 144 of the Indian Penal Code, still the Jury might convict the accused of an offence under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code, that is, they might find that they were members of an unlawful assembly. The Jury, however declined to convict the accused under section 143 and the learned Sessions Judge, being of opinion that the verdict of the Jury as regards the offence under section 143 was perverse, has referred the case to this Court with the recommendation that the accused should be convicted under section 143.

The facts of the case are that in a village called Kanchanpur in the Patna District there are 25 to 30 houses of Muhammadans and a rather larger number of houses of Hindus. According to the evidence the relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans were satisfactory up to 1915. It is said that the Muhammadans sacrificed cows at Bakr-id in their houses without interference on the part of the Hindus. However that may be, it is certain that till October 1915 there was no serious trouble between the Hindus and the Muhammadans regarding the sacrifice of cows at Bakr-id. The evidence shows that on October 18th, 1915, that is two days before the Bakr-id, a large crowd of Hindus appeared in the village and threatened to take away the cows of the Muhammadans. Four of the latter made a report to the Police and the Sub-Inspector went to the village. As it appeared to him that a breach of the peace was imminent, he telegraphed to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the District Magistrate and on the following day these two officers and also the Superintendent of Police went to the village. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate appears to have arrived first. Upon the evidence of the Magistrates and the Superintendent of Police there can be no room for doubt that the Hindu party constituted an unlawful assembly, their avowed intention, as expressed by one of their leaders, Suba Singh, who is one of the present accused, being to compel the Muhammadans to give up their cows; and when ordered to desist they adopted a threatening attitude even in the presence of the Police. There is little doubt that if the Magistrates and Police had not gone to the village there would have been a serious riot. It is unnecessary to labour this point, for even the learned Counsel for the accused admitted that technically the Hindus constituted an unlawful assembly, but he urged, firstly, that the Hindus acted under extreme provocation and, secondly, that the Jury were justified in acquitting the accused because at the instance of the Magistrates a compromise was arrived at between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, and the present case was started not so much with the object of securing the punishment of the Hindus as to establish the right of the Muhammadans to sacrifice cows in the village at the Bakr id. There is some evidence that a man named Chandoo Mian shortly before the occurrence in question appeared in the village and boasted that the Muhammadans would not only sacrifice cows at the Bakr id but that they would hawk the flesh of the cows round the village. We are not prepared to find it proved that such a threat was actually expressed by Chandoo Mian, but it is certain that something occurred shortly before October 18th which disturbed the theretofore friendly relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. Assuming, however, that some provocation was offered by the Muhammadans or one of them, the Hindus were not justified in acting as they did. We can only consider the question of provocation in the matter of sentence.

The compromise was effected at the instance of the Magistrates and the Police Officers. It is unnecessary to discuss the question whether the Muhammadans were or were not free agents when they agreed to the compromise. Upon this point there is a conflict of testimony. It is sufficient to say that they yielded to the representations made by the Magistrates. But soon after the Bakr id they realised that they had weakened their position and it appears, as the learned Counsel for the accused has said, that this case was started for the purpose of establishing the right of the Muhammadans to sacrifice cows at Bakr id. The complainant himself in his cross-examination admitted this. This also we may properly take into consideration in the matter of sentence.

In our opinion the verdict of the Jury was perverse. The evidence proves beyond a shadow of doubt that the Hindus constituted an unlawful assembly. The Jury should have returned a verdict of guilty under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code and left the Sessions Judge to deal with the question of sentence. They evidently took the law into their own hands, because they thought that under the circumstances the Hindus should not be convicted. We were invited by the learned Counsel for the accused to hold that even if the other accused are guilty under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code, Suba Singh is not guilty because one of the witnesses says that Suba Singh took a prominent part in bringing about the compromise and that he entreated the Muhammadans with folded hands to give up their cows and sacrifice goats instead. It appears to be the fact that after the Magistrates and the Superintendent of Police arrived in the village, Suba Singh assisted them to bring about the compromise; but he was one of the leaders of the Hindu party, he does not live in Kanchanpur and appears to have thrust himself into a quarrel which did not concern him directly and done all in his power to compel the Muhammadans to give up their cows. It appears to us that the guilt of Suba Singh is greater than that of the other accused. He is a man of affairs, was one of the leaders of the Hindus on that day and must have been largely responsible for the collection of so large a crowd at Kanchanpur. For this reason we set aside the verdict of the Jury and convict all thirteen accused under section 143 of the Indian Penal Code. Taking into consideration the circumstances mentioned above as also the fact that almost a year has elapsed since the occurrence in question, we have come to the conclusion that it is unnecessary to send any of the accused persons to jail.

We sentence Suba Singh to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks. We sentence each of the other accused to pay a fine of Rs. 20 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three weeks.

As it is quite clear to us that the Hindus assembled armed with lathis and garasas for the purpose of committing a breach of the peace, we direct that Suba Singh do execute a bond for keeping the peace for one year in the sum of Rs. 2,000 with two sureties in Rs. 1,000 each, to be approved by the District Magistrate. We direct that each of the other accused do execute a bond for keeping the peace for one year in the sum of Rs. 100 each with two sureties in Rs. 50 each, to be approved by the District Magistrate.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 902
of 1916.

September 20, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chevis.

MUHAMMAD AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—
RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 233—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 457, 411—Joint trial—Conviction of some accused under s. 457 and of others under 411, legality of.

In one and the same trial there cannot be convictions against some accused under section 457 and against others under section 411 of the Penal Code.

Sahib Singh v. Emperor, 38 P. R. 1905 Cr.; 115 P. L. R. 1905; 52 P. W. R. 1905 Cr.; 2 Cr. L. J. 694; Jagga v. Emperor, 51 P. R. 1905 Cr.; 62 P. W. R. 1905 Cr.; 165 P. L. R. 1905; 3 Cr. L. J. 76, followed.

Petition, under section 439 of the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 29th April 1916, varying (as regards charge only) that of the Magistrate, 1st class, Pind Dadan Khan, District Jhelum, dated the 30th March 1916, convicting the petitioners.

Mr Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Herbert (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(1) This order will cover the connected revisions Nos. 903, 952 and 953 of 1916.

(2) Eight persons were convicted by the Magistrate in this case under section 457. They all appealed to the Sessions Judge, who upheld the conviction of two under section 457, Indian Penal Code, but altered the conviction to one under section 411 in the case of the remaining six. These six now apply to this Court for revision, and the first point taken is that in one and the same trial there cannot be convictions against some accused under section 457 and against others under section 411. This plea is quite correct, see Sahib Singh v. Emperor (1) and Jagga v. Emperor (2).

(3). I set aside conviction and sentence in the case of the six petitioners, viz., Muhammad, Waris, Mawaz, Lahu, Nura and Muhammad Din and order them to be re-tried. Taking the case as one falling under section 411, it is quite possible that each of the petitioners (assuming for the moment that they are guilty, though, of course, I pass no opinion as to the merits) committed an offence separately from the others, so I direct that each one of the petitioners be tried separately. In case of a conviction the period already spent in confinement should be taken into consideration. The petitioners should be at once relegated to the judicial lock-up as under-trial prisoners. This order is not to be taken as preventing the District Magistrate or the Magistrate trying the case from admitting them to bail, should he think fit to do so.

Revision allowed; Re-trial ordered.

APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.

SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family estate—Partition—Intention of one member to separate, whether sufficient.

Under the Mitakshara Law a definite and unambiguous indication by one member of a joint undivided family of his intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty will amount to partition, if the intention is unequivocal and clearly expressed; and it must depend upon the facts of each case whether partition is effected thereby. [p. 340, col. 2.]

Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain, 18 Ind. Cas. 30; 40 I. A. 40; 13 M. L. T. 194; 17 C. W. N. 333; (1913) M. W. N. 183; 11 A. L. J. 172; 17 C. L. J. 288; 24 M. L. J. 345; 35 A. 80; 15 Bom. L. R. 456; 16 O. C. 129, followed.

The intention to separate may be evinced either by explicit declaration or by conduct, and if it is an inference derivable from conduct, it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit. [p. 342, col. 2.]

Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar, 11 M. L. A. 75; 8 W. R. (P. C.) 1; 1 Suth. P. C. J. 657; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 218; 20 E. R. 30, explained.

Musammat Vato Koer v. Rowshun Singh, 8 W. R. 82, approved.

A separation from the joint family involving the severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all the legal consequences resulting therefrom, is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly. One is a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status: whilst the other is the natural resultant from his decision, the division and separation of his share which may be arrived at either by private agreement among the parties, or, on failure of that, by the intervention of the Court. Once the decision has been unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-sharers, his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable; neither can the co-sharers question it nor can the Court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons for separation are well founded or sufficient; the Court has simply to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others. [p. 341, col. 2.]

It is a mistake to suppose that severance of status can take place only by agreement. The agreement only recognises existing rights in each individual member which he is entitled to assert at any time he likes. [p. 342, col. 2.]

Appellant's husband served a registered notice on the manager of the Mitakshara joint family of which he was a member, saying in explicit terms that his desire was to get his share partitioned and asking the manager to partition the joint estate without delay. A few days after he instituted the suit for partition but died during the pendency of the suit:

Held, that nothing could be more unequivocal or more clearly expressed than the conduct of the appellant's husband in indicating his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty by the said notice coupled with the suit; that these acts amounted to a separation with all its legal consequences; and that on the death of the appellant's husband during the pendency of the suit the appellant inherited his share and was entitled to continue the suit. [p. 340, col. 2.]

Appeal from two judgments and decrees of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, dated the 25th July 1912, reversing a judgment and decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 8th April 1911.

FACTS.—On the 1st October 1908, the appellant's husband Harihar sent a registered letter to Dhundiraj, the manager of the joint and undivided family of which he was a member. The family was governed by the Mitakshara Law of the Benares School. The said letter was in the following terms:—

"You Nilkanth Rao and I, till this day, have managed the business of the joint shops at Parsooni, Nagpur and Sindi. Now my desire is to get partitioned the one-third share which I have at present in the joint estate; and I am ready to have it partitioned privately. This is proper, according to usage and law. You should, therefore, collect papers and documents, prepare three lists, and give me mine; for it is becoming and proper to do this thing privately, while to do it otherwise is not so. You are wise and expert in managing the joint estate, and are conversant with the ways of the world. Being well aware of this, I write this private letter to you as my junior. I am ready to hand over, at the time of partition, the papers and documents relating to the shops in my possession. If you should take offence at this, that will not be consonant with worldly wisdom: for we should adjust our private affairs, without letting others know of them. It is not necessary to say this to a wise man like yourself. My desire, then, is that soon after the receipt of this letter, you should take this matter in hand, and make a disposition of the joint estate. I send this letter in the belief that you will do so. I depend upon you. And it is the duty of a younger to fulfil the desire of an elder. I have entrusted this duty to you in order that you may be encouraged and carry it out willingly, and without letting others know about it. But do not delay partition. I request you to send an early reply to this letter, and hope that you will not fail to do so. My blessings on you."

To that letter Dhundiraj's Vakil on his behalf sent the following reply, dated the 18th October 1908:—

"1. The registered letter, dated the 1st October 1908, addressed by you to Dhundirajpant Talatuley, reached him on 13th October 1908. He has sent that letter on to me, instructing me to give a reply thereto as follows:—

(1) The estate of your family has been joint for the last four generations, and no partition has taken place till this day. It is, therefore, desirable that as far as practicable, there should be no occasion for partition, and that no partition should be effected. You are the senior and Dhundirajpant is willing to accept any proper arrangement that you may be pleased to make as to the management of the entire estate, without dividing it. If you signify your consent to this, the resulting arrangement will be promptly made.

(2) If you nevertheless intend to have a partition made, it is better that you should yourself make it, since you are senior. For the purposes of this partition, a general inventory of the whole estate will have to be made; and it will be necessary to appoint two clerks, one on behalf of yourself, and the other on behalf of Dhundirajpant. This matter will take at least two months. After this general inventory has been prepared, arrangements will be made to have three lists drawn up in accordance with what may be settled between you and him concerning the partition. In the event of a difference between you two, that difference will be settled by a third person, and partition effected according to the lists.

2. You are requested to give your best consideration to the suggestions made above, and to kindly let me know what is to be done. In my opinion, it is advantageous to both of you to settle the dispute amicably, and make a just disposition of the entire property smoothly without causing any loss or giving publicity to the matter. Dhundirajpant is willing to settle the dispute amicably. It is, therefore, hoped that you will effect a private settlement, without filing a suit. If you wish to see me personally and speak to me about the matter, you may write to me, and I will act accordingly. An early reply is solicited."

On the 21st October 1908, Harihar brought the suit giving rise to this appeal against Dhundiraj and other members of the joint family for a decree for partition and possession of his one-third share in the joint family properties. While the suit was pending Harihar died on the 17th June 1909, and his widow the appellant applied for substitution of her name as plaintiff in place of that of her deceased husband. This application was opposed by the defendants, on the ground that the deceased at the time of his death was joint with them and consequently the suit abated on his death. The District Judge found on the facts, which are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment, that Harihar had declared his intention to separate from the family and given effect to that intention by serving the registered notice of the 1st October 1908 demanding partition and after rejecting the defendants' proposal for a private settlement by filing the suit. He was of opinion that these facts together with the defendants' admission of Harihar's right to one-third share of the joint family property and the proceeding in the suit prior to his death brought the case within the principles laid down in Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1). He, therefore, held that Harihar at the time of his death "must be considered as being separated in estate," and his widow the appellant was "therefore entitled to inherit his share" and continue the action. He stated his reasons as follows:—

"Under the Mitakshara Law partition must take place by the desire of a single member even though the others are unwilling, for a son may force even a father, however reluctant, to divide the ancestral property [Mitakshara Chapter I, section 5, paragraph 11, and observations of Justice Dwarkanath Mitter in the case of Musammam Deo Bunsee Koor v. Dwarkanath (2)].

9. Mr. R. C. Mitra in his treatise on the Law of Joint Property and Partition (Tagore Law Lectures of 1895), Edition of 1897, after elaborately discussing the case-law on the subject as to what constitutes partition summarises the decisions as follows at page 308:—"In those cases where a co-parcener can at any moment demand a partition, a co-parcener has merely to signify to the other co-parceners his present intention to separate, and from the time when such intention is made known to the other sharers, the co-parcener may be considered separate from the others both in family and property. A long time may elapse before any separation into distinct portions can be actually effected, or even before the extent of such co-parcener's share in the corpus can be determined, but the joint interest of the separating co-parcener ceases and his individual interest begins from when he makes the demand."

10. In Golapchandra Shastri's treatise on Hindu Law, 4th Edition of 1910, at pages 259 and 260, the law on the subject has been stated thus:—

"When partition may take place at the instance of a co-sharer, whether the other members assent to it or not, it would appear that the declaration and communication, by a member of a joint family, of his desire for separation to the other members accompanied and followed by unequivocal conduct and acts, showing that so far as lay in his power he did give effect to his desire and showing that there was a fixed and determined intention and not a passing whim for separation, is legally sufficient to change his status, to sever his interests and to constitute him a tenant-in-common, and separate so as to defeat the mutual right of survivorship so far as that member is concerned, i.e., between him on one hand and the rest of the members on the other . . . hence when a member expresses his desire to become separate, as he is legally entitled to become whenever he chooses, whether the other members wish or not, there arises a corresponding duty on the part of the other members to give effect to his desire immediately, and as no physical act is absolutely necessary or a legal severance of interest, the mutual agreement of the co-tenants being sufficient for that purpose, and as the other members are legally bound to agree to the desired partition and as equity presumes that to be done which ought to have been done, it appears to follow as a necessary direct logical consequence that a member's desire for partition is sufficient in law to constitute him separate so as to put an end to his joint tenancy and the operation of survivorship."

The learned author has then quoted the case-law in support of his view and at pages 262, 263 and 264 he has given further reasonings in support of the above view.

11. Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law has also said that intention is essential for effecting a separation in title (see page 671 and 672 of his Hindu Law, 7th Edition).

12. In the Vyavahara Mayukha it is said:—"Even when there is a total absence of common property, a partition is effected by the mere declaration "I am separate from thee;" for partition is but a particular condition of the mind, and this declaration is indicative of the same." (See Translation of Vyavahara Mayukha by V. N. Mandlik, Part II, Hindu Law of Mayukha, Edition of 1880, page 31).

13. The following judicial decisions also support the view that the communication of the determined intention by a member to become separate to his co-parceners followed by acts to give effect to that intention is sufficient to change his status from that of being a member of the joint family to that of a separated member, Bulakee Lal v. Musammam Indurputtee Kowar (3), Musammam Vato Koer v. Rowshun Singh (4), Debee Pershad

14. In the case reported as Musammat Vato Koer v. Rowshun Singh (4), the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court after referring to the decision of their Lordships in the leading case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1) observed: 'Taking, then, the admitted facts of the case before us, we find that Shun Singh did publicly and unequivocally by petition presented in Court declare his intention to become from that date divided in estate. Such an intention amounts to a valid separation, though not immediately perfected by an actual partition of the estate by metes and bounds. The acts and declarations of Shun Singh, showing an unmistakeable intention to hold and enjoy his own estate separately and to renounce all rights upon the shares of his co-parceners, constitute, in our judgment, a complete severance or partition.'

15. The above view has also been laid down by Markby, J., in the case reported as Ram Dhyun Koonwar v. Musammat Phoolbas Kooer (6). At pages 345 and 346 he says: 'It appears to me that when once you have arrived at the point of holding that a mere signification of intention is sufficient to constitute a separation without an actual partition by metes and bounds and you couple that with the acknowledged principle that any one member has a right to insist on a separation, it follows, almost as a direct logical consequence, that an unequivocal signification of intention to that effect on the part of one member constitutes him a separate owner of his share.'

16. Similarly in the case reported as Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (10), (see pages 473-477) Chief Justice Garth observes: 'One can very well understand that as regards separation, any member or members of a family might separate from the rest at their option: a mere declaration by one member that he was separate from the others would seem to be sufficient to effect the separation.'

17. In the present case the deceased plaintiff, Harihar not only declared his intention to separate from the family but gave effect to that intention by serving the defendants with a written notice demanding partition and after rejecting their proposals for a private settlement by filing the suit in Court. These facts as also the admission in the suit by the defendants of the plaintiff's right to 1/3rd share of the family property, coupled with their willingness to divide the property and their prayer to the Court for permitting them to make a private partition together with the Court's order granting this prayer and adjourning the case for enabling them to carry out the partition, brings this case within the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Appovier's case (1). It is quite clear from the facts proved in the case that Harihar did everything that lay in his power to obtain separate possession of his share and had it not been for the obstacles which the defendants put in his way, he would have got his share separated long before his death. The defendants cannot, therefore, be allowed to benefit by their own wrong [Joy Narain Giri v. Goluck Chunder Mytee (7), see observations at page 356, column 2].

18. I have already said in paragraph 4 that on 9th March 1909 the case had reached the stage when a preliminary decree for partition could have been passed but that my predecessor adjourned the case till 4th May 1909 as he wanted to ascertain from the parties personally how the partition was to be effected. The maxim 'actus curiæ nemini gravabit', therefore, applies. In Broom's Legal Maxims, Seventh Edition, page 97,* it has been observed that 'if one party to an action die during a curia advisari vult, judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc, for the delay is the act of the Court, and, therefore, neither party should suffer for it.' In Order XXII, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code it is laid down that 'notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing rules, whether the cause of action survives or not, there shall be no abatement by reason of the death of either party between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncing of the judgment, but judgment may in such cases be pronounced notwithstanding the death and shall have the same force and effect as if it had been pronounced before the death took place.' On behalf of the non-applicants it was urged that the above rule should not be considered to abrogate the provisions of Hindu Law and that it is applicable to those cases only to which no personal law applies, but I do not think that such a limited construction can be placed because 'the words whether the cause of action survives or not' are of general application and are wide enough to include cases to which the rule of survivorship under the Hindu Law applies.

19. It was next contended on behalf of the non-applicants that in order to effect a division of right among the members of a joint family there must be either an agreement by all the members, or a decree of Court by which the shares of all must be ascertained, and in support of this contention I was referred chiefly to the rulings reported as Mooktakshree Debee v. Oomabutti (11); Bulakee Lall v. Musammatt Indurputtes Kovar (3); Upendra Narain Myti v. Gopee Nath Bera (12); Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koer (13); Balabux v. Rukhmabai (14); Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (15); Sudarshanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (16) and Parbati v. Naunihal Singh (17). In my opinion none of these cases goes the length of laying it down that if a member of a joint family has determined to separate and has communicated to the other members his unequivocal intention to that effect and if the other members do not agree and put obstacles in his way, he must obtain the decree of the Court before he can be considered to be separate in estate from the rest of the family. In the case of Upendra Narain Myti v. Gopee

Nath Bera (12), Prinsep, J., was merely considering the effect of the separation of one member on the status of the family and in that reported as Sudarshanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (16), the observations of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., at page 156 are obiter dicta.

20. On a consideration of the facts of the case and the law applicable to them I am of opinion that the deceased Harihar must be considered as being separated in estate. His widow, the present applicant, Girjabai, is, therefore, entitled to inherit his share and I order that her name be substituted in place of her deceased husband as the plaintiff in this suit."

The suit then proceeded and a preliminary decree for partition was given to the appellant.

The defendants appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner against the order for substitution as well as against the preliminary decree. Both these appeals were allowed and the suit dismissed. The Judicial Commissioners held that no member of a joint and undivided family can separate himself from the joint family without an agreement between all the members thereof or an order, decree or declaration by the Court, and in the absence of such an agreement or order, decree or declaration Harihar must be held to have been joint at the time of his death, and that the suit, therefore, abated. The material part of their judgment was as follows:—

"Thus, the conclusion to which we have come is that if there ever was any severance of interest between Harihar and the defendants in respect of their joint family property, it was not effected either by agreement between the parties or by any act, order, decree or declaration by the Court.

It remains, therefore, to decide, whether, as claimed by the plaintiff, Harihar alone, despite the wishes of the other co-parceners, could, by setting up an intention to separate followed by a demand for partition, convert his joint share into a tenancy-in-common, so as to destroy the defendants' right of survivorship therein; his title as co-parcener, and the extent of his share being admitted by the defendants. If this is the law, then the plaintiff must succeed. If, on the other hand, agreement between all the co-parceners, in pursuance of an intention to divide, was necessary to cause the severance of interest claimed by the plaintiff, then the appeals of the defendants now before us must prevail.

Very learned arguments were urged before us, and we have had the advantage of hearing two eminent exponents of the Hindu Law in controversy on the above question. We shall endeavour to reproduce those arguments briefly and to consider the numerous authorities by which they were supported.

It is an admitted fact that the parties are governed by the Mitakshara, as interpreted by the Benares School. On behalf of the plaintiff the contentions urged before us were that, in a Mitakshara joint family, the relation of members of the co-parcenary to the joint family and to one another is a metaphysical element, and, therefore, any change in that relation can be effected by a metaphysical operation or mental process only, accompanied by an expression of it by some physical act. It was then said that the following propositions of Mitakshara Law are settled by authority:—

1. That the right, title or interest of each and every member of a Mitakshara joint family to or in the joint family property, accrues to the whole of the property: and not to a fractional portion thereof as under the Dayabhaga.

[Mitakshara I. i-4; Viramitrodaya i-4 and i, 55-57; Dayabhaga i, 7, 8 and 9.]

2. That so long as the family is joint no individual member thereof can predicate that he has any definite share in joint family property.

[Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1).]

3. That partition is the adjustment of divers rights regarding the whole by distributing them in definite shares of the aggregate.

[Mitakshara I. i-4; Viramitrodaya i-4.]

4. That partition may be of title or of property the subject of that title, or of both.

[Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1).]

5. That a single member may compel partition, so far as he himself is concerned, and his co-parceners must submit to it even though opposed to it,

[Viramitrodaya ii, 123; Raja Ram Tewary v. Luchmun Persad (18), Musammat Deo Bunsee Koer v. Dwarkanath (2), Jogul Kishore v. Shib Sakai (19), Pirthi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (20), Bulkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (15).]

Upon the basis of these propositions it was urged as a logical consequence that, when a member of a Mitakshara joint family feels a desire to separate from his co-parceners and communicates that desire to them, he becomes immediately separate in status and his share becomes capable of definition: if he demands his share and the other members assent to its separation there is a division of title—a cessation of jointness which defeats the operation of the law of survivorship. Thus, it was said, the conversion of a title of joint tenancy into a title of tenant-in-common is a metaphysical idea, depending on intention; a Mitakshara co-parcener, once he becomes sui juris, is at liberty to follow his own wish whether he will continue to hold his property jointly or in common with other members of his family, and if his desire is to separate his interest only he can give effect thereto by communicating to the other members his desire to live with them as a tenant-in-common. It was claimed that Appovier's case (1) is an authority for this proposition.

A passage was quoted from the Vyavahara Mayukha, section 3, paragraph 2, which had been translated thus:—

'Even when there is no joint property, partition may certainly take place also by the mere declaration, "I am divided from thee." Since partition is really nothing, but a kind of idea only; of that very idea (or state of mind) declaration is the manifestation.'

It was claimed that the word 'even' with which the passage begins implies that the rule applies a fortiori when there is joint property. We are not prepared to draw this inference, for reasons to be given hereafter.

Reference was then made to the following passage from the Sarasvati Vilasa, paragraph 28:—

'From this it is known that without any formality, partition can be effected (18) 8 W. R. 15 at p. 20.

(19) 5 A. 430 at p. 434; A. W. N. (1883) 102; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 364.

by mere intention, just as the making of an appointed daughter can be effected by mere intention without any formality.'

The soundness of this commentary may be accepted, but it obviously does not afford authority for the proposition that the intention of one only of the persons concerned shall be sufficient.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent then cited and examined various judicial decisions in support of his interpretation of the Hindu Law, and with these we shall deal in due course. He asserted that the decisions are not uniform, but claimed that the Judicial Committee would appear to have finally decided that partition of title is a matter of intention only.

The argument on behalf of the defendants-appellants, though put forward in great detail and supported by numerous authorities, may be briefly summarised. Its substance is that while in the case of a Hindu joint family composed of a father and his sons the father alone may break up the co-parcenary, as laid down in the Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 2, and held in Kandasami v Doraisami Ayyar (21), in all cases of collateral co-parcenary governed by the Mitakshara, the severance of title going to convert a joint estate into a tenancy-in-common requires an agreement by all the co-parceners, or failing that, a decree for partition passed by a competent Court. It was urged that in the present case there had neither been agreement nor decree during the lifetime of Harihar, whereby his joint interest in the family property had been defined and severed; and that, therefore, the suit abated on his death.

For the purposes of this appeal we do not consider it necessary to refer to certain authorities and decisions on English Law quoted before us by way of analogy. The question to be decided is purely one of Hindu Law, and we are of opinion that analogies drawn from the English Law or any other system of jurisprudence can afford little assistance and may be misleading. We can start from the principle laid down in Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1), and repeatedly affirmed in subsequent cases by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, namely, that actual division by metes and bounds is not necessary to complete the dissolution of the joint tenancy of a Hindu family, because by an agreement between the co-parceners there may be an operative division of title which will convert the joint tenancy into a tenancy-in common, without there being a corresponding division of the subject-matter to which the title relates. Therefore, the question before us narrows itself down to this:—

In a Mitakshara family composed of co-parceners who are collateral in relation to one another, is the mere communication of an intention to divide, made by one co-parcener to the other or others, sufficient to effect a severance of his interest in the joint estate, so as to make him, as it were, a tenant-in-common of a defined share, which, upon his death, will devolve by inheritance as his severalty?

We will now examine the material authorities cited before us, in order to see how far, if at all, they justify the affirmative answer which has been given to the above question by the lower Court, and which the plaintiff-respondent seeks to have repeated by this Court.

The only Sanskrit authorities which are said to deal expressly with the matter are the Mayukha and the Sarasvati Vilasa, the relevant passages wherefrom, upon which reliance is placed for the plaintiff-respondent, have already been set out above. As regards the Mayukha, in the first place it is not a recognised authority in the school of law which governs this case. But, leaving that aside, the passage expressly refers to the case of a separation where no property is involved. In such a case separation is a matter of sentiment only, and a member who severs himself from his brethren does not invade or affect any legal right of his co-parceners. But where there is property, the severance of the interest of even a single member involves an alteration in the legal rights of his co-parceners, and, in particular, a dissolution of their birthright in a portion of the joint property. It seems to be not only Hindu Law, but equity and commonsense, to hold that where a disposition of property jointly owned by two persons would, if made, affect the rights of them both, they should both have a voice in the making of such a disposition. As remarked by Garth, C. J., in Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (10):—

(21) 2 M. 317; 5 Ind. Jur. 352; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 491.

GIRJA BAI V. SADASHIV ESUNDIRAJ.

'One can very well understand that as regards separation, any member or members of a family might separate from the rest at their option; a mere declaration by one member that he was separate from the others would seem to be sufficient to effect the separation. But partition of the property is a different thing, because, in order to effect a just partition, it is necessary, of course, to ascertain the share to which each and every member of the family is entitled.'

This passage has been clearly misunderstood by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent, who has relied on it in support of his argument. It was also apparently misunderstood by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimuhulu Maistri (16), and by De Gruyther, K. C., in Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (22), where that learned Counsel quoted it as an authority for the very proposition contended for on behalf of the plaintiff in the present case. It seems clear from the passage itself that Garth, C. J., used the word 'separation' to denote something which was not a severance of joint interest in family property. We are not prepared to accept the inference drawn by the learned Counsel for the respondent before us that the Mayukha rule as to the requisites for a separation where there is no family property applies a fortiori to a severance of title to joint property.

As regards the passage from the Sarasvati Vilasa, as already stated, it does not carry the case beyond the rule recognised in Appovier's case (1) and constantly re-affirmed since that decision was published.

It was said that the above Sanskrit commentaries expressly set forth what is implied in all the others. We have not been able to find in the text books anything more than this that partition is a consequence of intention and agreement. There is certainly no passage in the Mitakshara raising an implication that the wish of one co-parcener communicated to the other or others is of itself sufficient to dissolve the joint tenancy.

Turning now to the case-law we think the most convenient way will be to examine first therelevant decisions of the Supreme Tribunal, and then those of the several High Courts.

In Char'otte Abraham v. Francis Abraham (23); the Judicial Committee were dealing with a family which, though purely Hindu in origin, had been for several generations converted to Christianity. Their Lordships laid down, more or less as an obiter dictum, that the status of a member of an undivided Hindu family was altered by his conversion to Christianity, since such conversion amounted, under Hindu Law, to a severance of parcenership. This decision does not assist the plaintiff in any way. By conversion to another religion the undivided Hindu becomes an outcaste. Under Hindu Law that fact deprives him of his status in the joint family, and would also result in forfeiture of his estate if the Statute Law did not intervene. But Act XXI of 1850 interferes to prevent such forfeiture. The only way of giving effect to this Statute is by dividing off the share of the apostate from the joint estate which he is no longer qualified to hold in a state of jointness, and to treat it as his severalty. Such a partition is one made by Statute, and not by virtue of any authority conferred on the severing parcener by Hindu Law. It is a special case offering no analogy in support of the contention advanced in this case on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent.

The next case is Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1), as to which it is only necessary to say that it is the leading authority on the subject of partition of title unaccompanied by partition of the subject-matter of such title. It was generally urged before us that it supports the case of the plaintiff; but upon a careful perusal of the judgment of their Lordships, we are unable to find a single passage or phrase which is compatible with the view that a partition of title out of Court may be effected without an agreement among all the co-parceners.

In Rajah Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narasimha Row v. Rajah Suraneni Lakshma Venkama Row (24), there was a formal agreement as in Appovier's case (1), and their Lordships again held that the agreement to divide dissolved the joint estate. They made no remark suggesting that if in place of the agreement between two brothers there had been only a demand, communicated by one to the other, the conclusion would have been the same.

Sri Gajapathi Radhika v. Sri Gajapathi Nilamani (25) was another case of a formal agreement to divide between two joint Hindu brothers, and the rule in Appovier's case (1) was re-affirmed. Here again the case of the plaintiff finds no foothold.

In Doorga Pershad v. Musammat Kundun Koowar (26), the Judicial Committee laid down that inasmuch as there may be a division of a joint Hindu family and its property, which, though not carried out by a partition by metes and bounds, would nevertheless alter the status of the family, the question in every particular case must be one of intention, i.e., (as stated in the judgment of their Lordships) 'whether the intention of the parties to be inferred from the instruments which they have executed, and the acts they have done, was to effect such a division.' If anything, this is an authority against the plaintiff, because it suggests that the intention of all the co-parceners, expressed by agreement, is necessary to dissolve the joint estate. In any view the case affords no assistance to the plaintiff.

Maharajah Ram Kissen Singh v. Rajah Sheonundun Singh (27) lays down that the agreement of a family to divide the proceeds of the joint property among its members in definite shares, with the intention that each should hold his allotted share in severalty, severs the joint interest and extinguishes the rights springing from united family ownership. Here again we have the same foundation of a family agreement for the conclusion of the Court.

In Pirithi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (20), one of the ruling principles laid down was that a member of a joint Hindu family cannot sue for a share of the profits of a joint family estate because he has no definite share until partition; and the plaintiff was required to sue for partition. This suggests that the plaintiff was not entitled to have his share treated as separate merely because he himself so treated it, and claimed profits in respect of it.

In Madho Parshad v. Melurban Singh (28), the Judicial Committee said:

'Any one of several members of a joint family is entitled to require partition of ancestral property, and his demand to that effect, if it be not complied with, can be enforced by legal process. . . . Actual partition is not in all cases essential. An agreement by the members of an undivided family to hold the joint property individually in definite shares, or the attachment of a member's undivided share in execution of a decree at the instance of his creditor, will be regarded as sufficient.'

In Parbati v. Naunihal Singh (17), which was against a case of mutual agreement among co-parceners, their Lordships of the Privy Council, reversing the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, insisted that the principle laid down in Appovier's case (1) should be followed.

In Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (22), it was contended on behalf of the appellants before the Judicial Committee that the mere fact of one co-parcener having filed a suit for partition amounted, in law, to a partition of title. Thereupon Mr. Ameer Ali, one of the presiding Judges, referred to Debee Pershad v. Phool Koorree (5), where it was held that a suit by one member of a Hindu family for a declaration of his right in the joint family property was not a sufficient indication on the part of the family of their intention to separate. In the same case another member of the tribunal, Sir Arthur Wilson, asked, "Is there a case where one co-parcener declared that he was separate, and it was held that such a declaration constituted partition?" De Gruyther, K.C., cited Radha Ohurn Dass Kripa Sindhu Dass (10) as an authority in support of that proposition: but, as already pointed out, the learned Counsel clearly misunderstood the true significance of the words 'separation' as used by Garth, C. J., in that case.

We turn now to the decisions of some of Indian High Courts. The judgment in

GIRJA BAI v. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ.

Bulakee Lall v. Musammat Indurputtee Kowar (3) contains the following passage:—

'The parties are not in a position substantially different from that of a joint Hindu family. In such cases a separation may, at any time, take place at the will of any member of the joint family, and any act or declaration showing an unequivocal intention on the part of any share-holder to hold or enjoy his own share separately, and to renounce all rights upon the shares of his co-parceners, constitutes a complete severance or partition. In the Vyavahara Mayukha, translated by Borradaile, page 52, it is said that, even when there is no property a partition may be made by a mere declaration—"I am separate from thee."

There are several reasons why we cannot accept this dictum as an authority for guidance in the present case. In the first place, it is obiter. Next, it does not state the particular school of Hindu Law to which it refers. Finally, it depends upon a passage of the Mayukha which we have already held to be inapplicable to a partition of joint family property governed by the Mitakshara as interpreted by the Benares School.

The case of Badamoo Koer v. Wazeer Singh (29), cited on behalf of the appellant, need not be considered, because it is one of a class of cases which was overruled by Appovier's case (1) as pointed out by Jackson, J., in Joy Narain Giri v. Goluck Chunder Mytee (7).

The case of Raja Ram Tewary v. Luchmun Persad (18) contains a learned dissertation by Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., on the Mitakshara Law of partition, and affirms the now well-established proposition that the son acquires by birth an interest in ancestral property and can compel partition of that interest in the lifetime of his father: but the judgment offers no further guidance towards decision of the particular point now before us.

However, in Musammat Vato Koer v. Rowshun Singh (4), the case of the plaintiff-respondent before us finds foothold. After pointing out the rule in Appovier's case (1) the judgment contains the following passages:—

'Taking, then the admitted facts of the case before us we find that Sohun Singh did publicly and unequivocally by petition presented in Court declare his intention to become from that date divided in estate. Such an intention amounts to a valid separation, though not immediately perfected by an actual partition of the estate by metes and bounds. The acts and declarations of Sohun Singh, showing an unmistakeable intention to hold and enjoy his own estate separately and to renounce all rights upon the shares of his co-parceners, constitute, in our judgment, a complete severance or partition. The community of interest and unity of possession which are the very essence of a joint Hindu family no longer existed. Further, the parties, it is admitted, have separated in food and residence. Sohun Singh in his lifetime dealt with his share in a manner inconsistent with the theory of a joint interest and liability and his separate enjoyment was not merely a matter of arrangement for the private convenience of the family.

'The consent of the other members of the family was not necessary, for a son may force even a father, however reluctant, to divide the ancestral estate.'

In our opinion, neither the case of Appovier (1) nor any other published decision of the Privy Council lends support to the proposition set out above: nor is any other authority quoted by the learned Judges (Kemp and Glover, J.J.) responsible for the dictum above set out. With due respect we are unable to think that, because one member can compel partition of his share, he can, therefore, carry out partition single-handed without consulting his co-parceners. A creditor can compel payment by his debtor, but unless the debtor voluntarily gives effect to his demand the creditor cannot compel payment without the aid of the Court. In Kulponath Doss v. Mewah Lall (30), the same learned Judges were on firmer ground in applying the doctrine of Appovier's case (1) because they had before them a written agreement by all the co-parceners to separate.

In Musammat Deo Bunsee Koer v. Dwarka-nath (2), it was held that every member of a joint Hindu family has an indefeasible right to demand a partition of his own share, and the other members of the family must submit to it whether they like it or not. This is a settled doctrine that no one will dispute, but as we have already endeavoured to show a demand for a share is not the same thing as a severance of that share from the joint corpus.

We are unable to find anything helpful to the case of either side in Gopee Lall v. Mohunt Bhugvan Das (31), and only mention the ruling as it was cited before us.

In Mooktakeshee Debee v. Oomabutty (11), it was held that the principle laid down in Appovier's case (1) does not apply where there is no deed or agreement between the parties contemplating the subject of separation. So far as it goes this is an authority against the contention on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent.

However, considerable stress is laid on the observation of Markby, J., in Ram Dhyam Koonwar v. Musammam Phoolbas Kooer (6) where the learned Judge said:—

'It appears to me that when once you have arrived at the point of holding that a mere signification of intention is sufficient to constitute a separation without an actual partition by metes and bounds, and you couple that with the acknowledged principle that any one member has a right to insist on a separation, it follows, almost as a direct logical consequence, that an unequivocal signification of intention to that effect on the part of one member constitutes him a separate owner of his share.'

A perusal of the whole judgment discloses that the above remark was purely obiter, and that the learned Judge put it forward to show what, in his opinion, would be the consequence of applying principles in which he did not concur, but which he felt himself bound to adopt in consequence of the Full Bench decision in Sadaburt Prasad Sahu v. Foolbush Koer (32). The head-note expressly states it to be a point undecided whether a mere signification of intention on the part of a member of a joint Hindu family is sufficient to constitute a separation.

In Musammam Phoolbas Kooer v. Lalla Juggesur Sahoy (33), Markby, J., being asked to review the above reasoning adhered to his opinion; but, on appeal to the Privy Council—Phoolbas Koonwar v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (34)—his decision was upset. It seems to us, with all due respect, that the reasoning is obviously fallacious. A signification of intention to separate made by all the members of a joint family is tantamount to an agreement to partition, and that dissolves the joint tenancy. A signification of intention to separate made by one member only is merely a demand for that to which he is entitled; but demand is one thing and receipt is another. The reasoning of Markby, J., appears to us to confuse the one with the other. At all events it is purely obiter and its value must be discounted accordingly.

In Bhoobun Mohinee Debee v. Poorna Chunder Banerjee (35), the essence of the decision in Appovier's case (1) was interpreted to be this: that the members of the coparcenary had entered into an express agreement among themselves whereby a distinct intention to separate their interests in the joint estate was declared: and, therefore, the Calcutta Court decided in the above case that a mere description by co-parceners of their interests in the family property, unaccompanied by any declaration of an intention to separate, was insufficient to sever the titles. This was also the view in Musammam Phoolijhuree Kooer v. Ram Pershun Singh (36) and we concur in it. It is perfectly intelligible that, without any present intention to divide, the members of a joint Hindu family may settle by agreement the share to which each will be entitled whenever division does take place.

In Joy Narain Giri v. Goluck Chunder Mylee (7), the surviving sharer in an estate sought to be put in possession of his co-sharer's portion, as manager on behalf of the latter's widow, on the ground that, though the deceased co-sharer had made efforts to reduce his share to distinct possession, those efforts had not been completely successful when he died and he could not, therefore, be said to have had separate enjoyment of the said share. The Calcutta High Court held that as the deceased co-sharer had done everything possible to obtain separate possession, and it was only the opposition of the plaintiff that had obstructed him, it would be allowing the plaintiff to benefit by his own wrong to give him possession, and that the share of the deceased co-parcener must devolve by inheritance as his severalty. The particular passage of the judgment relied on for the respondent reads thus:—

'In Sheo Dyal Tewaree v. Judoonath Tewaree (37), it was held, no doubt, by the late Mitter, J., that the Court would not consider there had been a separation unless there had been enjoyment of the several shares. But that was a very different case from the present and we may be quite sure that acute and able Judge would never have allowed the plaintiff to profit by such a plea when the deceased co-owner had not merely declared his intention but done everything that lay in him to carry it out and when the failure to do so was entirely the result of the plaintiff's own determined opposition.'

Read as a general proposition, severed from the particular facts of the case in which they were made, the above remarks appear to support the contention that a mere demand for a share, the physical severance whereof in satisfaction of that demand before the death of the claimant is only prevented by the opposition of his co-parceners, divides such share from the joint estate: but a glance at the facts of the case before the Calcutta Judges makes such a conclusion impossible. These facts were that the deceased co-sharer had separated himself in mess and residence, and had brought a suit for possession of his share, in which he was successful, though the opposing co-parcener carried the case up to the Privy Council. He had applied to execute the decree, and during the pendency of that proceeding had died. In the present case if Harihar had obtained a preliminary decree for partition before he died, the right of the plaintiff to continue the suit would have been undeniable. But as that stage was never reached by Harihar, the ruling last above referred to lends no assistance to the plaintiff's case. It is noteworthy that though the decree in this Calcutta case was affirmed by the Privy Council—Joy Narain Giri v. Girish Chandra Myti (8)—the reasoning of the Supreme Tribunal was somewhat different from that of the Calcutta Judges. Their Lordships treated the conduct of the separating co-parcener 'as indicating, at all events, that he himself considered that a separation had taken place.' But they did not rule that his conduct alone had effected the separation. They decided that the decree obtained by him was such as to 'effect a partition, at all events, of rights,' which was effectual to destroy the joint estate under the doctrine laid down in Appovier's case (1).

An authority pressed before us on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent is Raghubanund Doss v. Sadhu Churn Doss (9). At page 430 appears the following dictum of Markby, J.:—

'As I understand the Hindu Law, no right vested in the plaintiff's father to any specific share. No right vests in any member of the family to a specific share until some act has been done which has the effect of turning the joint ownership into several ownership. This may be done by a mere signification of intention, and when a signification of intention has once taken place which has this effect, the share of each member becomes at the same moment both several and defined. It is, as I understand the law, this signification of intention, producing concurrently these two results, which enables a member of a joint Hindu family to dispose of his share by sale whilst the family still remains joint, which he can do certainly in some districts of India, possibly in all. The change which thus takes place is that which Lord Westbury in Appovier's case (1) likens to the change of joint tenancy to tenancy-in-common under the English Law. It has its origin in the power of each member of a family to demand a partition at any moment, and the inability of the family to retain any member in joint ownership longer than he may desire.'

The learned Judge does not make it clear whose is the declaration of intention which effects the severance of title, whether of all or one only of the co-parceners. If of all then the dictum is perfectly correct; if of one only then it is an echo of an opinion of this learned Judge in an earlier case which we have already discussed. As to the power of alienating an undivided share recognised by some High Courts, we shall hereafter show that it has no bearing on the point in issue before us, because it is not a creation of Hindu Law but of case-law.

We have already pointed out that in Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (10), the observation of Garth, C. J., at page 477, as to separation by the mere declaration of one member, is no authority for holding that partition of joint property can be effected by such a declaration, and we need not further refer to this case.

The case of Tej Pratap Singh v. Champa Kalee Koer (38) was one of an agreement in writing between two brothers, and the principle laid down in Appovier's case (1) was followed.

The latest Calcutta cases to which our attention has been drawn, namely, Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baldeo Dass (39) and Satya Kumar Banerjee v. Satya Kripal Banerjee (40) (already cited in connection with another point) do not carry the matter now under discussion any further. They merely reiterate the doctrine laid down in Appovier's case (1).

We next direct our attention to some of the Madras case-law. In Kandasami v. Doraisami Ayyar (21), it was laid down that a partition made by the father is binding on the sons, not only in respect of the father's share, but also of their own shares, provided that it is made subject to the restrictions mentioned in Hindu Law. It becomes obligatory by the will of the father as regulated and restrained by law, irrespective of the consent of the sons. Such a power is expressly given to the father by the Mitakshara, and by necessary implication it is not given to any other member of the Hindu joint family. Every other such member may demand and by agreement with his co-parceners or failing that, by process of Court may obtain a partition of his share. But the father alone may himself make such a partition single-handed.

In Subburaya Mudali v. Manika Mudali (41), it was held that where the plaintiff in a partition suit died subsequent to a decree for partition, but pending an appeal against such decree, the right to sue survived to the personal heir of the deceased plaintiff, the decree having defeated the right of survivorship: and there was an obiter dictum to the effect that if the plaintiff had died before any decree for partition had been made, the suit would have abated by operation of the law of survivorship.

In Sudarsanan Maistri v. Narasimkulu Maistri (16), the origin and nature of the Mitakshara doctrine of joint family property was discussed by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., and, as already pointed out, he dissented from what he believed to be the erroneous dictum of Garth, C. J., in Radha Churn Dass v. Kripa Sindhu Dass (10). It seems clear that if the decision of this learned exponent of Hindu Law had been sought in the present case, it would have been given against the plaintiff-respondent.

In Thandayuthapani Kangiar v. Ragunath Kangiar (42), it was argued for the appellants in that case that the institution of a suit for partition does not, by itself, put an end to the joint status of a Hindu family: that co-parcenary cannot be determined by the will of a single co-parcener: that it can be ended,

(1) By agreement of parties;

(2) By action of the Court;

(3) By creditors who seize and sell a share of a co-parcener; and it was urged that in a partition suit, on the death of a plaintiff after decree, but pending an appeal against that decree, no legal representative can continue the suit. This contention failed, and the Court held that partition of title can be effected, among other ways—

(1) By agreement of parties;

(2) By a decree of the original Court to that effect.

GIRJA BAI v. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ.

The plaintiff-respondent before us can get no help from this or any other of the Madras decisions.

We now take up the Bombay cases. In Babaji Parashram v. Kashibai (43), it was ruled that where there is no indication of an intention to presently appropriate and enjoy in a manner inconsistent with the ordinary estate of an undivided family, an agreement to divide, without more, is not of itself sufficient to effect a partition. It seems to us that it would be difficult to reconcile this dictum with the rule laid down in Appovier's case (1) and repeatedly re-affirmed by the Supreme Tribunal in subsequent cases. The Bombay Court further held, in the same case, that a direction to divide made in a decree is nothing more than an inchoate partition, insufficient to change the character of the property, which continues a joint estate until there has been an actual partition thereof by metes and bounds. This proposition is clearly unsustainable at the present day, in view of what has been laid down by the Privy Council. We cannot find that this Bombay judgment has been expressly dissented from in any subsequent case; but it seems to us, with due respect, to be obsolete and, in the main, unsound.

In Sakharam Mahadev Dange v. Hari Krishna Dange (44), there is an obiter dictum that a decree for partition does not operate as a severance so long as it remains under appeal—a view directly in conflict with that propounded in the case of Thandayuthapani Kangiar v. Ragunath Kangiar (42) above cited. It is not necessary that we should enter upon any discussion of this conflict of authority as the point is not in issue before us.

In Ashabai v. Haji Tyeb Haji Rahimtulla (45), it was held that to effect a partition of ancestral property under the Mitakshara, there must be, in the absence of division by metes and bounds, at any rate an agreement that each party interested shall henceforth enjoy the produce of a certain definite share of the joint property. We cannot find that the Bombay Tribunal has departed from this view in any subsequent case, and it seems, therefore, that the High Court of the Presidency wherein the Mayukha (upon the text of which reliance is placed for the plaintiff-respondent) is a paramount authority, interprets the Hindu Law of partition in the way claimed as correct by the defendants-appellants.

We next examine some cases of the Allahabad High Court to which our attention was drawn. In Bilaso v. Dina Nath (46), we are unable to find anything which assists, even by analogy, our decision on the point now before us.

In Jogul Kishore v. Shil Sahai (19), the decision was that in a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara a grandson has by birth a vested interest in ancestral property, which entitles him to enforce partition in the lifetime of his father and grandfather. It was further held that such interest could be attached and sold in execution of a decree. But we can find here no authority for the view that the grandson could effect a severance of his interest by merely communicating to his father and grandfather his intention to separate.

No decision of this Court, reported or unreported, has been found to sustain directly the view of the law which has been accepted and adopted by the lower Court. But there is a current of rulings of this Tribunal as to the power of an undivided co-parcener to alienate his share of the family property: and from these it was sought, in argument before us, to draw an analogy in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. In Diwaker Janardhan v. Janardhan Chimnaji (47) and Bina Pujari Brahmin v. Biraj Mohan Baboo (48), Crosthwaite, J. C., following earlier decisions, held that under the general principles of Hindu Law one co-sharer can dispose of his own share of ancestral undivided property for value. In Ramprasad v. Deokaran Bhagwandas (49), where one of two brothers holding joint estate had mortgaged his undivided interest and died before any proceedings were taken by the mortgagee to attach or partition the share, it was held by Stevens, J. C., that the mortgage could not be defeated by operation of the law of survivorship. In Abdul Aziz v. Ajudhia (50), it was decided by Ismay, J. C., that the purchaser of an undivided share of one member of the Hindu family in specific family property can only obtain separate possession of that share by enforcing a partition of the whole property, as by that means alone could the property sold to him be legally defined and ascertained. In Mukund Ram Sukal v. Ram Ratan (51), it was pointed out by one of us that though there is diversity of opinion in the four Chartered High Courts in India as to the right of a Hindu co-parcener to make a voluntary alienation of his undivided interest in joint family property, the view in favour of that right, propounded by the Madras and Bombay Courts 'has for many years been tacitly accepted in the Central Provinces,' and found expression in the cases above cited.

It was argued for the plaintiff-respondent that since a co-parcener, by making a voluntary alienation, can cause a severance of his share irrespective of the wishes of his co-parceners, it follows that he must have power, independently of them, to sever his share by his own act and declaration. This argument, though plausible is, in our opinion, unsound. It assumes that alienation of an undivided share, converts that share from joint estate into an estate in common. But that is not the case. The alienation effects no severance of the alienor's undivided interest. It merely transfers to the alienee the transferor's right to demand a partition; but the alienee can only obtain that partition in the same way as the alienor could have obtained it. The only difference is that by a rule of equity, applied by the Courts entirely for the benefit of the purchaser for value, this right to partition in the hands of the transferee is not subject to the law of survivorship which governed it while in the hands of the transferor. In Diwaker Janardhan v. Janardhan Ohimnaji (47), the learned Judicial Commissioner wrote:—

'The view of the law taken by the Madras and Bombay High Courts has been followed for many years in these Provinces. It has been held that as a co-parcener can claim partition of his share he should, if he alienates his share, exercise his power so as to be in a position to place the transferee in possession of the share. Therefore it is held that on equitable grounds, the transfer by a co-parcener of his share in a joint undivided estate can be enforced.'

This rule of equity is extrinsic of the Hindu Law, and, so far as it defeats the operation of the law of survivorship, is in opposition to it. It is only the transfer for value that is recognised, the payment of consideration giving rise to the equity in favour of the purchaser. This was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (52), as being the rule in Bombay. Their Lordships added that the Madras Court had gone to the extent of recognising alienation by gift. But since the publication of the case last cited, this position has been abandoned by the Madras Tribunal which has now placed itself in alignment with the Bombay Court: cf., Baba v. Timma (53) and Ponnusami v. Thatha (54). In Suraj Bansi Koer's case (52), their Lordships further said:—

'There can be little doubt that all such alienations, whether voluntary or compulsory, are inconsistent with the strict theory of a joint and undivided Hindu family; and the law as established in Madras and Bombay has been one of gradual growth founded upon the equity which a purchaser for value has to be allowed to stand in his vendor's shoes, and to work out his rights by means of a partition.'

In the same case their Lordships also pointed out that it is a vexed question whether the alienation would be defeated by the death of the transferor before partition of the transferred share has been effected, and at page 174 they abstained from deciding that question, and noted that it had been left open in former decisions of the Privy Council.

GIRJA BAI v. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ.

In Krishnasami Ayyangar v. Rajagopala Ayyangar (55), the facts were that the undivided share of a Hindu co-parcener had been sold in execution of a decree by his creditor. The proceeds of the sale having proved more than sufficient to satisfy the decree, the surplus was used to purchase certain lands. It was held that the parcel of the judgment-debtor's undivided share, now represented by the said lands, had never been divested of its character of co-parcenary property and, consequently, that the lands were joint family property, and not the severalty of the judgment-debtor. This is consistent with the view that, on alienating his share, an undivided co-parcener does not, ipso facto, effect an immediate severance of his interest in the joint family estate.

Though, as shown above, the matter is res integra in the Privy Council, it appears to be well established in India that if a purchaser for value buys the interest of an undivided co-parcener who dies before partition has taken place, the contract nevertheless takes effect, and the purchaser may obtain partition: Gurlingapa Satwirapa Gidwir v. Nandapa Chanbasapa Solapuri (56); Aiyyagari Venkataramayya v. Aiyyagari Ramayya (57). But it does not seem to follow from this that the act of alienation is itself sufficient to effect a severance of interest under Hindu Law, so as to make the purchaser a tenant-in-common with the co-parceners of his alienor. If, instead of proceeding to partition, the purchaser made a re-conveyance to his vendor, or the alienation of the undivided share were otherwise cancelled, then, it seems to us, the interest of the vendor would continue to be a part of the joint family property in the same way as if it had never been subject to a contract of alienation. Under such an alienation the vendee gets a vested interest by virtue of the transfer, and equity will not permit any subsequent act or default of the vendor alone to defeat the transfer. But the whole scheme of partition of an alienated share rests on the alienor's right to demand a partition, supplemented, when necessary, by an equity in favour of the transferee. There is no room for an inference that because a parcener can alienate, therefore, he can also partition, without the co-operation of his co-parceners, the title to his undivided share in the joint estate.

In his work on The Law of Joint Property and Partition (Tagore Law Lectures, 1895) Mr. R. C. Mitra remarks, at page 298: "What really amounts to partition under the Mitakshara is a question of some nicety." Then, after considering some of the decided cases, the learned author at page 308 sets out a summary of the case-law, and draws therefrom, inter alia, the following inference:—

"In those cases where a co-parcener can at any moment demand a partition, a co-parcener has merely to signify to the other co-parceners his present intention to separate, and from the time when such intention is made known to the other sharers, the co-parcener may be considered separate from the others both in family and property. A long time may elapse before any separation into distinct portions can be actually effected, or even before the extent of such co-parcener's share in the corpus can be determined, but the joint interest of the separating co-parceners ceases and his individual interest begins from when he makes his demand."

With due respect, we do not think that the above inference is correctly drawn from the case-law. It is an inference unsupported by anything except the obiter dicta of three learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, which we have already discussed.

Upon the best consideration that we have been able to give the matter, we are of opinion that, except in the special case of a father severing from his sons, partition of property, unaided by the Court, among the members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, can only be effected by an agreement among all the co-parceners concerned, whereby, at least, they declare their intention to separate. We hold that declaration of such intention by any fraction of the co-parcenary body, or the mere demand by any member for partition of his share, does not of itself disrupt the family estate or destroy the right of survivorship.

For the above reasons this appeal and First Appeal No. 16 of 1911 are allowed, and the decree and order from which they are respectively made are set aside. We declare that on the death of Harihar the suit for partition instituted by him, out of which these appeals have arisen, abated, and that by operation of the Mitakshara Law of survivorship, his undivided interest which he sought to have partitioned has lapsed to the defendants. Under the circumstances of the case we order that each party do bear his and her own costs in this Court, and that the costs of the suit in the lower Court be borne by the joint estate."

The appellant thereupon appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., M. P., and Mr. Dunne, for the Appellant.—It is a settled principle of the Hindu Law that where a member of the joint family had a right to demand partition, a separation was effected by a declaration of his intention followed by its communication to other members of the family. Their consent was immaterial as it was equivalent to actual division of the joint property. This principle was laid down in the recognised books on Hindu Law as well as in a course of judicial interpretation. The plaintiff had expressed his desire to separate, to which other members raised no objection. Partition was complete before the suit was brought and was certainly so as soon as the pleadings were closed.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., and Parikh, for the Respondents.—The appellant had failed to discharge the onus on her to prove that her husband was separate in estate at the time of his death. In a joint family consisting of collaterals a partition could only be effected by an agreement amongst them declaring their intention to separate in estate or by a decree for partition—circumstances wholly wanting in the present case. Plaintiff could not, by mere declaration of intention to separate followed by a demand for partition, convert joint interest into a tenancy-in-common so as to destroy rights of survivorship.

[LORD SUMNER.—What does he go to Court for? He goes there to ask that his will should be carried out. If he says that he wants the order of the Court for the rest of the property only, then it rests in his will and not in Court where you go to have disputed rights ascertained.]

There was no decided case in India which laid down the rule that mere expression of intention amounted to partition.

[LORD SUMNER.—I always understood that the judgment of the Judicial Committee was followed in all cases where the judgment was arguable].

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—This appeal from two judgments and decrees of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in the Central Provinces of India arises out of a suit brought by one Harihar, since deceased, on the 21st October 1908, in the Court of the District Judge of Nagpur. The object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of his right to a one-third share in certain moveable and immoveable properties, which till then had been held as appertaining to a joint undivided Hindu family, of which he had been a member, a decree for partition, and other ancillary reliefs.

Harihar died on the 17th June 1909, during the pendency of his suit, and the question in the case is whether at the time of his death he was separated from the joint family. If he was, his share would be inherited by his widow Girja Bai, the appellant; if not, the defendants-respondents in this appeal, would take it by survivorship.

The facts of the case are simple, and may be stated briefly. Bapuji, the common ancestor, left several sons, among them Harihar, the plaintiff in this suit; two, Damoodur and Balaji, died many years ago without any issue. Atmaram, the eldest, who became the manager of the family on Bapuji's death, died in 1899, leaving Dhundiraj, the first defendant, the son of his brother Ram Chunder, whom he had taken in adoption. Dhundiraj became the manager after Atmaram's death, and acted as such when this suit was instituted. He has since died, and he is now represented by his son Sadashiv. Ram Chunder died in 1902, leaving Nilkantha, his son, and two grandsons, all of whom are defendants in this action. Jageswar, another brother, died in 1906 without leaving any male issue. Thus, on the 21st October 1908, when he brought his suit, Harihar was entitled to a one-third share of the joint property. It is alleged in the plaint that after Atmaram's death "dissensions arose in the joint and undivided family," and in consequence thereof two shops were set up at Parseoni, their place of residence, one in the name of Harihar, the other in that of Dhundiraj, and separate bahi khatas (account-books) were opened in their respective names. The plaintiff further alleged that for "these reasons" he did not wish to continue as a member of the joint family; that he had communicated his intention to the defendants; and had, on the 1st October 1908, served a registered notice on the first defendant, "the manager of the joint family," and "as the defendants were collusively putting off partition and evading to give him his share he was obliged to bring this suit." The cause of action was stated to have arisen on the 1st October 1908, when he demanded partition and his one-third share.

The defendant admitted the plaintiff's claim, and added that in answer to the registered notice, the first defendant had stated that he had no objection to a division of the estate which "should be made by private persons without going to Courts." They further urged that as they were willing to divide the estate the suit was premature and that they should not be saddled with costs.

What took place before the District Judge subsequent to the appearance of the defendants and the filing of their written statement appears clearly from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioners under appeal. The learned Judges say:—

"The defendants entered appearance on the 15th February 1909, and on the 9th March 1909, it was admitted on their behalf that the plaintiff was entitled to have a decree for partition of a one-third share. As to the property to be divided, after some controversy the parties were in agreement except in respect of certain moveables. The District Judge, being desirous of consulting the parties regarding the best mode of carrying out the partition, adjourned the case for their personal attendance to the 4th May 1909. On that date the case was put off to the 10th May 1909, at the instance of the defendants, who sought a compromise. Then there was a further adjournment to the 20th June 1909, upon the ground that the illness of defendant Dhundiraj had prevented negotiations for a compromise."

On Harihar's death on the 17th June 1909, his widow, Girja Bai, the present appellant, applied for substitution as the heir and legal representative of her deceased husband; and then the contest began. The defendants objected to her substitution, on the ground that at the time of his death Harihar was an undivided member of a Hindu joint family, and that on his decease his share passed to them by survivorship. On the 23rd January 1911, the District Judge overruled their objections, and made the usual order for substitution in favour of the appellant. The case then proceeded to trial, and on the 8th April 1911, a preliminary decree was made directing partition of the joint estate by commissioners appointed for the purpose.

The defendants appealed to the Judicial Commissioner's Court both from the order of the 23rd January 1911, directing the substitution of Girja Bai's name in place of her deceased husband, and from the preliminary decree of the 8th April following. The Judicial Commissioners in an elaborate and learned judgment have upheld the defendants' contentions; in substance the conclusion at which they have arrived amounts to this: that no member of a joint undivided family under the law of the Mitakshara can separate himself from the joint family, or sever the status so far as he himself is concerned, without the consent of the others, or without an effective decree of the Court.

The two following passages from the judgment of the Appellate Court will show that their Lordships apprehend correctly the decision of the learned Judicial Commissioners. In one place, dealing with Harihar's action, they say:

"The defendants admitted what they could not deny, namely, that Harihar had a joint one-third share with themselves which he was entitled to have partitioned; but to confess the existence of a co-parcenary interest is not the same thing as even a passive consent to the severance of that interest; much less is it tantamount to an agreement to divide. The defendants never denied the title of Harihar, either before or after the suit, but they were all along averse to a partition, and, up to the day of his death, sought to compromise the suit by inducing him to abandon his desire to break up the joint estate. When he died the case stood adjourned in order that a compromise might be effected, and, in the circumstances, the only compromise (once the share of Harihar and the estate to be divided had been admitted), which defendants could have sought, was an abandonment of the partition. The pleadings merely indicate what had already taken place, namely, that Harihar had finally decided to sever his estate and had demanded that this should be done."

And again:—

"It remains, therefore, to decide, whether, as claimed by the plaintiff, Harihar alone, despite the wishes of the other co-parceners, could, by setting up an intention to separate followed by a demand for partition, convert his joint share into a tenancy-in-common, so as to destroy the defendants' right of survivorship therein; his title as co-parcener, and the extent of his share being admitted by the defendants. If this is the law, then the plaintiff must succeed. If, on the other hand, agreement between all the co-parceners in pursuance of an intention to divide was necessary to cause the severance of interest claimed by the plaintiff, then the appeals of the defendants now before us must prevail."

Their Lordships regret they cannot assent either to the inferences of law sought to be derived from the undisputed facts in the case, or to the principle on which the learned Judges purport to base their judgment.

Their Lordships think it necessary to refer again briefly to some of the circumstances with regard to which the Appellate Court appears to be under a misapprehension. As already stated, Atmaram, the eldest brother, who, on Bapuji's death, became manager, died in 1899. Disputes in the family, as Harihar alleged in his plaint, arose shortly after his death. On the 4th February 1902, Harihar and Jageswar, who was alive at the time, wrote to Dhundiraj, who had become manager in his adoptive father's place, intimating their wish to separate themselves from the joint family, and asking him to have a division of the family property made by arbitrators. Matters seem to have remained in a quiescent stage for the next six years, although Harihar alleged that two shops and business accounts had been opened in his and the first defendant's separate names.

Jageswar died in 1906, and on the 1st October 1908, Harihar sent to Dhundiraj the registered letter already referred to. In that letter he says in explicit terms that his desire is to get partitioned his one-third share, and asks Dhundiraj to take the matter in hand "soon after the receipt of the letter" and to make a division of the joint estate, and adds, "but do not delay partition." On the 19th October the defendant sends a reply through a Pleader; he first tries to persuade Harihar to abandon his intention of getting the joint estate divided, and then goes on to say: "If you, nevertheless, intend to have a partition made, it is better you should yourself make it, since you are senior." And the mode in which this should be done is suggested.

Harihar, evidently not satisfied with the delay that had taken place in the reply, brought his suit three days after the defendant's letter. Written statements were filed on the 15th February 1909, and on the 9th March following the District Judge recorded the following additional statement, as he calls it, by the defendants' Pleader: "The defendants do not deny the plaintiff's right to claim one-third share in the joint family, both moveable and immovable. The plaintiff's suit is not premature, but he will not be entitled to his costs because we were ever willing to give him his share."

The District Judge's order made on that date is significant. After stating that neither the plaintiff's right to claim partition nor the extent of his share is denied, he says: "Under these circumstances, I think it necessary to have the parties before me in person, so that I may ascertain from them how the partition is to be effected."

It appears to be absolutely clear that on the 9th March 1908, the parties were of one mind on the question of partition. The plaintiff demanded a division of the joint family property. The defendants had agreed, perhaps at first unwillingly, to the demand, which they could not resist. The only question that remained for the Court to determine was the best mode of effecting the division. Their Lordships are unable to see on that date any disagreement or averseness in fact to the plaintiff's demand on the part of the defendants. All his acts subsequent to the registered notice evince a fixed determination to sever himself from the joint family. With reference to these acts, the Judicial Commissioners say as follows:—

"Rao Bahadur Bapurao Dada, a well-known Pleader of this Court, examined as the fourteenth witness for Harihar's widow, has proved that Harihar refused all proposals to continue in a state of jointness after he had sent the letter of 1st October 1908; that he persisted in his demand for a share; and that, his demand not being promptly complied with, he filed the present suit. He himself bought the stamp, and first asked Mr. Bapurao Dada, the family lawyer, to institute the litigation; but finding him disinclined to do so, because he was engaged in mediating to bring about a compromise, Harihar had the plaint presented by another legal adviser, leaving Mr. Bapurao Dada to appear for the defendants."

And they go on to say:—

"Upon these facts we have no hesitation in coming to the conclusions:—

"1. That before filing the suit Harihar did in clear and unequivocal terms communicate to the defendants his earnest desire and his fixed intention to convert his estate from a joint estate into an estate in severalty."

The learned Judges, however, as already observed, held that this was not sufficient to constitute a severance of the joint status.

In the case of Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (58), the rule of law applicable to cases of separation from the joint undivided family, was laid down by their Lordships in the following terms:—

"What may amount to a separation or what conduct on the part of some of the members may lead to disruption of the joint undivided family, and convert a joint tenancy into a tenancy-in-common, must depend on the facts of each case. A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty, may amount to separation. But to have that effect the intention must be unequivocal and clearly expressed."

It would probably be enough for the determination of this appeal to say that nothing could be more unequivocal or more clearly expressed than the conduct of Harihar in indicating his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty by the notice of the 1st October 1908, coupled with this suit, and that these acts amounted to a separation with all its legal consequences.

But as the question of the effect on the joint status of such an intention has been raised in this case in a direct and concrete form, their Lordships think it fit to discuss the principle somewhat more fully than was necessary in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (58).

In the Hindu Law, "partition" does not mean simply division of property into specific shares; it covers, as pointed out by Lord

GIPJA BAI V. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ.

Westbury in Appocier's case (1), both "division of title and division of property." In the Mitakshara, Vijnaneswara defines the word vibhaga, which is usually rendered into English by the word "partition," as the "adjustment of divers rights regarding the whole by distributing them in particular portions of the aggregate." Mitra Misra explains in the Viramitrodaya the meaning of this passage: he shows that the definition of Vijnaneswara does not mean exclusively the division of property into specific shares as alone giving right to property, but includes the ascertainment of the respective rights of the individuals, who claim the heritage jointly. He says (Sarkar's translation, Chapter I, section 36): "For partition is made of that in which proprietary right has already arisen, consequently partition cannot properly be set forth as a means of proprietary right. Indeed, what is effected by partition is only the adjustment of the proprietary right into specific shares." The Viramitrodaya is a commentary on the Mitakshara, the value and importance of which have been repeatedly recognised by the Board. So far as their Lordships are aware, nowhere in the Mitakshara is it stated that agreement between all the co-parceners is essential to the disruption of the joint status or that the severance of rights can only be brought about by the actual division and distribution of the property held jointly. If this were so and there were minors in a joint undivided family, partition would be impossible until they had all attained majority, a position which is expressly combated and negated in the Viramitrodaya (Chapter II, section xxiii). In fact later writers leave no room for doubt that "separation" which means the severance of the status of jointness is a matter of individual volition. For example, Nilkantha, the author of the Vyavahara Mayukha (Chapter IV, section 3, Mandlik's translation, page 38), expressly lays down that "even when there is a total absence of common property a partition is effected by the mere declaration 'I am separate from thee,' for partition is a particular condition of the mind, and the declaration is indicative of the same." The Sarusvati Vilasa gives expression to the same view. After quoting the definitions of various earlier writers, it says: "from this it is known that without any formally partition can be effected by mere intention." (Sutlur's Translation of Hindu Law Books on Inheritance, page 122). Their Lordships are aware that the Vyavahara Mayukha is not recognised as an authority in the Benares School; they refer, however, to the dictum of Nilkantha as showing the general conception of Hindu legists on the subject of severance from jointness. But the following gloss in the Viramitrodaya appears to their Lordships conclusive on the rule of law under the Mitakshara: "Here again," it says, "partition at the desire of the sons," which expression includes grandsons and great-grandsons (see section 23A), "whether in the lifetime of the father or after his demise, may take place by the choice of a single co-parcener, since there is no distinction" (Chapter II, section xxiii).

Their Lordships do not think it necessary to examine further the law as laid down in the texts. They propose to refer shortly to the cases which establish clearly that separation from the joint family involving the severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all the legal consequences resulting therefrom, is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly. One is a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status: whilst the other is the natural resultant from his decision, the division and separation of his share which may be arrived at either by private agreement among the parties, or on failure of that by the intervention of the Court. Once the decision has been unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-sharers, his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable; neither the co-sharers can question it nor can the Court examine his conscience to find out whether his reasons for separation were well founded or sufficient; the Court has simply to give effect to his right to have his share allocated separately from the others,

GIRJA BAI v. SADASHIV DHUNDIRAJ.

In Madho Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (28), Lord Watson, delivering the judgment of this Board, declared in explicit terms the nature of the right possessed by individual members of a joint and undivided Hindu family: "Any one of several members of a joint family," he said, "is entitled to require partition of ancestral property, and his demand to that effect, if it be not complied with, can be enforced by legal process." Partition does not give him a title or create a title in him, it only enables him to obtain what is his own in a definite and specific form for purposes of disposition independent of the wishes of his former co-sharers. Lord Watson makes this perfectly clear in the passage that follows:—

"So long as his interest is indefinite, he is not in a position to dispose of it at his own hand and for his own purposes; but as soon as partition is made he becomes the sole owner of his share, and has the same powers of disposal as if it had been his acquired property."

In this connection their Lordships desire to refer to the language used by that distinguished Hindu Judge, Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter, in Musammal Deo Bunssee Koer v. Dwarkanath (2), a Mitakshara case:—

"Now, it is a settled doctrine of the Hindu Law," said that learned Judge, "that every member of a joint undivided family has an indefeasible right to demand a partition of his own share. The other members of the family must submit to it whether they like it or not."

It appears to their Lordships that the Appellate Court has, in this case, confused the two considerations to which reference has been made above, viz., the severance of status which is a matter of individual volition, with the allotment of shares which may be effected by different methods: by private agreement, by arbitrators appointed by the parties, or, in the last resort, by the Court.

In Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1), this Board had to deal with an argument based on a similar notion that "a deed of division between the members of an undivided family, which speaks of a division having been agreed upon, to be thereafter made, of the property of that family, was ineffectual to convert the undivided property into divided property until it has been completed by an actual partition by metes and bounds." Lord Westbury, delivering the judgment of the Board, pointed out that the argument advanced before their Lordships proceeded "upon error in confounding the division of title with the division of the subject to which the title is applied." Then, after stating "the true notion of an undivided family under Hindu Law," he proceeds thus:

"But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share, which he may claim the right to receive and to enjoy in severalty, although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided."

And in another place, he adds: "It is necessary to bear in mind the twofold application of the word 'division.' There may be a division of right, and there may be a division of property."

Some of the Courts in India have supposed Lord Westbury's expressions to imply that the severance of status can take place only by agreement. Their Lordships have no doubt that this is a mistaken view. The Board there was dealing with a case in which division of right had already taken place, as evidenced by the "deed of division." The right which each individual member had in this joint property did not spring from the deed or the agreement of the parties to which it gave expression; the agreement only recognised existing rights in each individual member which he was entitled to assert at any time he liked.

The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct, it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit. In Joy Narain Giri v. Girish Chunder Myti (8), their Lordships regarded the conduct of one of the two co-sharers who constituted the joint family "when he left the joint residence and withdrew himself from commensality as indicating a fixed determination henceforward to live separately from his cousin," and treated "the fact of his borrowing money for his maintenance, as well as making a Will, as indicating, at all events, that he himself considered that a separation had taken place." The conclusion was based on the inference of intention derivable from the acts and declarations of the member who it was alleged had separated himself, and not from the conduct or attitude of any other party.

As early as 1867, shortly after the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Appovier's case (1), Mr. Justice Kemp, one of the most eminent Judges of the Calcutta High Court, sitting with Mr. Justice Glover, in Musammatt Vato Koer v. Rowshun Singh (4), a case governed by the law of the Mitakshara, expressed himself thus on this question of separation:—

"Taking then the admitted facts of the case before us, we find that Sohun Singh did publicly and unequivocally by petition presented in Court declare his intention to become from that date divided in estate. Such an intention amounts to a valid separation, though not immediately perfected by an actual partition of the estate by metes and bounds. The acts and declarations of Sohun Singh, showing an unmistakable intention to hold and enjoy his own estate separately, and to renounce all rights upon the shares of his co-parceners, constitute, in our judgment, a complete severance or partition."

With that view of the law their Lordships entirely concur.

In the present case, Harihar, the husband of the appellant, unequivocally and unmistakably manifested his intention to separate himself from the defendants, and to hold, possess, and enjoy his unquestioned interest separately from them. In their Lordships' judgment, this was sufficient, under the Hindu Law, to constitute a separation and to divide him in estate from his co-parceners.

Their Lordships are accordingly of opinion that the decrees of the Judicial Commissioners should be reversed, and those of the District Judge should be restored.

The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal and of the appeals in the Judicial Commissioner's Court. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 36 OF 1915.

June 27, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Lindsay.

BABU LAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

JALAKIA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Prior and puisne encumbrancers, decrees obtained by—Sale in execution of both decrees—Purchase by first mortgagee with symbolical possession—Actual possession by purchaser at second mortgagee's sale—Conflict of titles—Right of first mortgagee purchaser—Suit for recovery of mortgage amount—Nature of claim—Position of parties—Equities—Relief—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 74, 75—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, rr. 11, 12—Appeal, second—Limitation, plea of, whether can be raised for first time in second appeal.

It is necessary, in a suit to enforce a mortgage security, that all necessary parties, including puisne and prior encumbrancers, should be impleaded. [p. 346, col. 2; p. 347, col. 2.]

Where, however, the rule is departed from and both prior and puisne mortgagees institute suits on their respective mortgages without impleading each other and obtain decrees, and in execution of such decrees the property is purchased by different persons; in a suit to establish the priority of claim as between such purchasers in which the decree-holders and judgment-debtors are also impleaded, it is the duty of the Court to look to the real position of the parties and in awarding relief, work out the equities between them [p. 346, col. 2.]

On 16th October 1893, M mortgaged a house to plaintiff's predecessor. In 1907, M effected a second mortgage of the same house to K. On 19th August 1910, the plaintiff sued on his mortgage without impleading K and obtained a decree after contest, in which the mortgagor was allowed the usual six months' time to redeem. The decree was made absolute in due course and the house was brought to sale and purchased by plaintiff on 30th July 1912. On 20th June 1911, K filed a suit on his mortgage without impleading the plaintiff. A consent decree was passed on 18th August 1911, in which the mortgagor was allowed only fifteen days to redeem. The house was sold again on 27th February 1912 and was purchased by B. Plaintiff was given formal possession and B got actual possession. Plaintiff brought the present suit against B and K for recovery of the amount due on his mortgage of 1893 and for possession of the house on default of payment:

DABU LAL V. JALAKIA.

Held, (1) that the suit was neither one for sale on plaintiff's mortgage nor a suit to foreclose that mortgage, but was based on plaintiff's failure to obtain actual possession of the property which he had purchased at the sale in execution of his decree; [p. 346, col. 1.]

(2) that B was entitled to nothing more than an opportunity of paying off the prior mortgage, and that on his declining to do so, he should surrender possession; [p. 346, col. 2; p. 348, col. 1.]

(3) that, as the right of sale possessed by each of the mortgagees had been exercised by them and exhausted, there was no need to put up the property again to sale or bring a second suit for sale and that what remained to be determined was the respective rights and liabilities of the rival auction-purchasers; [p. 346, col. 2; p. 347, cols. 1 & 2.]

(4) that limitation for the suit commenced to run from the date of plaintiff's purchase. [p. 348, col. 2.]

Per Piggott, J.—It would be contrary to sound principles to allow a defendant to raise for the first time in second appeal a plea, even one of limitation, which could not be determined without the taking of fresh evidence upon a question of fact not at all raised in the Courts below. [p. 347, col. 1.]

Per Lindsay, J.—The title of either party is immediately traceable to his purchase in execution and reference to their rights under the mortgages is only necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the equities existing between them. Each has an imperfect title acquired by purchase and the point for determination is which has the stronger equity in his favour. The plaintiff's omission to implead the puisne mortgagee rendered her title defective only to the extent that her title as owner is qualified by a right of redemption which was vested in the second mortgagee and which passed to the purchaser under the decree obtained on the second mortgage. The purchaser has no superior title merely on the ground that he purchased first and his title could only become absolute by a discharge of the prior encumbrance. [p. 347, col. 2; p. 348, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. Pearcey Lal Banerji (for Mr. Shyam Krishna Dar), for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. N. Banerji (for Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This second appeal arises out of the following facts;—

On October 16th, 1893, Musammāt Durga mortgaged a certain house to the predecessors-in-title of Musammāt Jalakia, the present plaintiff-respondent.

Sometime in the year 1907, Musammāt Durga again mortgaged the same house to the defendant-respondent Kedar Nath.

On August 19th, 1910, the plaintiff sued on her mortgage, without impleading Kedar Nath. She obtained a preliminary decree for sale on April 21st, 1911, the defendant mortgagor being allowed the usual period of six months in which to redeem. The decree was made absolute in due course, the house was brought to sale and purchased by the plaintiff herself on July 30th, 1912.

In the meantime Kedar Nath filed a suit on his mortgage, without impleading the prior mortgagee. The suit was filed on June 20th, 1911, and decreed on August 13th, 1911, only fifteen days being allowed to the mortgagor in which to redeem. The house was brought to sale under this decree on February 27th, 1912, (there seems to be a clerical error in the plaint as to the date of this sale) and was bought by the defendant-appellant, Babu Lal. The plaintiff was given formal possession on her auction-purchase, but found Babu Lal in actual possession and failed to dispossess him. Hence the present suit, brought against Babu Lal and Kedar Nath. The main relief claimed is that the defendants be ordered to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 627 due on the mortgage of 1893, with costs and future interest, and that in case of default the plaintiff may be put in possession of the disputed house, and all the rights of the defendants may be extinguished. There is an alternative prayer for any other relief which the Court may consider proper and it is more particularly suggested that the plaintiff might be given a decree for possession by redemption of Kedar Nath's mortgage.

The Court of first instance, the Munsif of Agra, dismissed the suit, but the District Judge of Agra, on appeal, has given the plaintiff a decree for the first relief sought, only awarding a slightly lesser amount than that claimed. Babu Lal, the auction-purchaser, has alone appealed, but Kedar Nath has appeared to support the appeal, and has further taken a verbal plea to the effect that he ought to be exempted from costs throughout.

The following further facts appear to be found by the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff's allegation that she did not in fact know of the existence of Kedar Nath's mortgage when she filed her suit of August 19th, 1910, would seem to be accepted as true. Her decree was obtained after contest, and in the teeth of a plea that the mortgage of October 16th, 1893, had been completely paid off. The decree in favour of Kedar Nath was a consent decree. The learned District Judge infers from this fact, from the circumstances under which the suit was instituted and from the narrow period allowed for redemption that the parties to this suit were acting in collusion, that they were both aware, not only of the existence of the plaintiff's mortgage, but of the suit brought and the preliminary decree obtained on the same and that they acted with the deliberate purpose of embarrassing the present plaintiff by bringing about a sale under the second mortgage before the sale on the first mortgage could be effected. He also finds that the auction-purchaser Babu Lal, if not a mere benamidar for Kedar Nath, was acting in collusion with him and had knowledge of the prior mortgage and of the litigation thereon.

These findings are not traversed in Babu Lal's petition of appeal to this Court.

The first point argued on his behalf was that due execution and attestation of the mortgage of October 16th, 1893, was not proved in the present case. The marginal witnesses are dead. The plaintiff produced a witness named Kallu Ram. He deposes that he was present when the deed was executed, that the executant put her mark on the deed in his presence and in that of the marginal witnesses and that the said marginal witnesses then signed the deed in his presence. It is contended that the lower Appellate Court could not legally accept Kallu Ram's evidence as proving execution and attestation because Kallu Ram is illiterate. There is no question as to the identity of the document, because it was read over to Kallu

Ram and he purported to remember its terms. In my opinion an illiterate witness is just as much entitled to depose that the, to him, illegible black marks on the paper are the signatures of the marginal witnesses which they affixed in his presence as he is to depose that he recognized the mark on the paper which represents the execution of the deed by the illiterate mortgagor. We are precluded in second appeal from discussing the credibility of Kallu Ram's evidence. I hold that it is sufficient, if believed, to prove both execution and attestation according to law.

The next question to be considered is whether, on the facts found, the plaintiff is entitled to any, and if so to what, relief. The case for the appellant may fairly be stated thus:—

The suit as brought is virtually one for foreclosure, and the plaintiff has no right to foreclose the auction-purchaser at the sale held under the second mortgage. A puisne mortgagee has not only the right to redeem the prior mortgage, he has also a right in law to bring the property to sale subject to the prior mortgage. If he had been impleaded, as he ought to have been, in the suit brought under the prior mortgage and had refused to exercise his right of redemption he would not have been foreclosed; the mortgaged property would have been put to sale, and he would have had the first claim on the surplus sale price, in the event of this exceeding the amount due to the prior mortgagee. From this it is contended that the only remedy open to the present plaintiff would be by way of a second suit for sale on her mortgage and that such a suit would now be barred by limitation. It is further contended that the present suit as brought is in substance one for foreclosure on the mortgage of October 16th, 1893, and that this is also barred by limitation. A further point, which I do not think was clearly taken on behalf of the appellant, but which may have perhaps required consideration, is whether Babu Lal would be entitled to plead that the plaintiff's suit as brought on August 19th, 1910, was even then barred by limitation and what would be the effect of such a plea, if raised.

BABU LAL V. JALAKIA.

The legal questions involved are of some complexity and have given rise to differences of opinion in various High Courts. Probably the best discussion of the entire question is to be found in the case of Mulla Veetil Seethi Kutti v. Korambath Paruthooli Achuthan Nair (1); but it is more immediately in point to consider the published decisions of our own Court. The case most nearly in point is that of Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2), which applies and expounds the principles laid down in two older rulings, Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (3) and Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (4). I feel little doubt that whoever was responsible for the drafting of the plaint in the present suit had the decision in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2) before him and was confident that he had brought the plaintiff's claim within the scope of the principles there laid down. It is true that the facts in the two cases are not quite the same, in that the defendant in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2) had purchased at auction sale held in execution of a simple money-decree, and had done so before any suit was instituted on the original mortgage. It seems to me, however, that these differences of fact only tend to make the present plaintiff's case a stronger one; and I observe that the principles laid down in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2) have been approved, and applied to a state of facts practically identical with those now before us, by a majority of the learned Judges who decided the case of Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (5).

It seems clear to me, therefore, that the present suit is neither a suit for sale on the mortgage of October 16th, 1893, nor a suit to foreclose that mortgage: it is not a suit on that mortgage at all. It is a suit brought after that mortgage had been extinguished upon a different cause of action, namely, the plaintiff's failure to obtain actual possession of the property purchased at the sale of July 30th, 1912. The plaintiff-respondent and the defendant-appellant Babu Lal both claim to have bought the very same property. Babu Lal's purchase was first in point of time; but he purchased at a sale held on a decree obtained by a puisne mortgagee in a suit in which the prior mortgagee was not impleaded. What was put up for sale and purchased by Babu Lal was the equity of redemption, subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee. Babu Lal has a clear right to redeem the mortgage; and this right is not affected by anything which took place in the course of or in consequence of the plaintiff's suit on her mortgage to which the puisne mortgagee was no party.

We are dealing with a case in which legal complications have arisen in consequence of an initial departure from the plain course prescribed by the law. The plaintiff was bound by law to implead the puisne mortgagee in the suit instituted on August 19th, 1910. The failure to do this has led to the present litigation; but the necessary parties are now before the Court, and the duty of the Court is simply to work out the equities between them. On the facts found, I hold that the appellant Babu Lal is entitled to nothing more than is given him by the decree of the Court below, namely, an opportunity of paying off the prior mortgage. If he declines this opportunity he certainly has no right to hold the property in suit clear of that encumbrance. There seems to me no valid basis for an order putting up the property to sale again: the right of sale possessed by each of the mortgagees has been exercised by them, and exhausted. All that remains to be determined is the question of the respective rights and liabilities of the rival auction-purchasers.

In arriving at this conclusion I have disposed of the plea of limitation in the only form in which it has ever been taken by the appellant himself. The present suit is not brought on the mortgage of October 16th, 1893, but upon a cause of action long subsequent, and is well within limitation in respect of the said cause of action. I have felt some little difficulty about a point which was suggested for the first time in the course of arguments before us; could Babu Lal be permitted to plead that the prior mortgagee's suit was barred by limitation on the date on which it was instituted, viz., on the 19th of August 1910? If Kedar Nath had been a defendant in that suit he could presumably have taken the point; there seems some plausibility about the suggestion that it is open to Babu Lal to do so.

One answer is, however, sufficiently obvious. The plea, if raised, would depend for its determination upon a question of fact, namely, the truth or otherwise of the plaintiff's assertion that there had been payments on account of interest for a number of years subsequently to the date of the mortgage. It would be contrary to sound principles to allow a defendant to raise for the first time in second appeal a plea, even one of limitation, which could not be determined without the taking of fresh evidence upon a question of fact not raised at all in the Courts below.

Apart from this, I incline to the opinion that Babu Lal, holding under a transfer effected while the suit instituted on August 19th, 1910, was pending, cannot be permitted to call in question the result of that suit so as to affect the rights acquired by the plaintiff as a result of that suit. A plea which might have been open to Kedar Nath, if there had been no transfer pendente lite, is not necessarily open to Babu Lal.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

LINDSAY, J.—I agree with my learned colleague in holding that this appeal should fail. I have nothing to add to what he has said regarding the question of proof of the plaintiff's mortgage but I desire to offer a few remarks with respect to the other question for decision, namely, the nature of the relief, if any, which can be granted to the plaintiff.

The case for the appellant is that she is entitled to no relief at all, the argument being that her only remedy was a second suit for sale on her mortgage, a remedy which she has now lost owing to the operation of the law of limitation.

On the facts the present case is in all respects similar to that of Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmandan Singh (5), and I agree entirely with the opinion of Mitra, J., that in the circumstances there was no necessity for the plaintiff here to bring another suit for sale.

We are dealing here with a conflict of title between two parties and the question is, which of the two titles is to carry with it the right to possession and upon what terms should that right be awarded to the party entitled.

It seems clear to me that the rights of the parties are not to be determined solely upon a consideration of the rights which accrued to the first and second mortgagees under their respective mortgages. In each case there has been a decree on the mortgage followed by a sale of the property and in each case the parties have by virtue of their respective purchases obtained qualified titles to the property, the nature of which must be examined for the purpose of awarding possession. It is, I think, impossible to ignore the fact that these sales have taken place and to deal with the matter in issue as if they had not in fact occurred. The title of either party is immediately traceable to his purchase in execution and reference to the rights under the mortgages is only necessary for the purpose of ascertaining the equities existing between them; each has an imperfect title acquired by purchase and we have to determine which has the stronger equity in his favour. As for the title of the plaintiff it cannot, I think, be argued that she acquired nothing under her purchase. It will not, I imagine, be denied that had she joined the subsequent mortgagee as a defendant in her suit, she would by her purchase have acquired an absolute title to the property including the right to possession. To what extent then is her title defective by reason of her omission to implead the puisne mortgagee? Only to the extent that her title as owner is qualified by a right of redemption which was vested in the second mortgagee and which has now passed to the appellant as purchaser under the decree obtained on the second mortgage.

That is the only right which the second mortgagee could have enforced against her as prior incumbrancer, for the right of the subsequent mortgagee to bring the equity of redemption to sale to satisfy his claim is a right which is exercised against the mortgagor only. The right of the first mortgagee to have the property sold is in no way affected by the second mortgagee's right of sale. As between the first and second mortgagees (or their representatives), the

As for the title of the auction-purchaser under the second mortgage, that too is circumscribed by the liability to redeem the earlier mortgage. The title could only become absolute by a discharge of the prior incumbrance.

It is true that this title was in point of time acquired prior to the title obtained by the first mortgagee under her purchase. It is also true that it has been laid down in a number of cases, beginning with Nanack Chand v. Teluckdye Koer (6) and Durgopal Lal v. Bolakee (7), that the title which is prior in point of time must prevail. But as was pointed out both by Brett, J., and Mitra, J., in Har Pershad Lal v. Dalmardan Singh (5), those cases were pure cases in ejectment to which the provisions of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply. There were no prayers in those suits for redemption or for the re-opening of the sales held under the first mortgages: the plaintiffs asked for possession and no more. It cannot, therefore, be held in the present case that the purchaser under the second mortgage has a superior title merely on the ground that he purchased first.

We have it then that the purchaser under the second mortgage has acquired the property subject to the first mortgage, and it is difficult to see on what ground of equity he can be permitted to say that he is now entitled to hold the property discharged from that liability, for that is in effect what is now claimed on his behalf. Is it not more proper to say that the title of the plaintiff in this case is the stronger one and that she is entitled to enforce it and to ask for possession, provided she gives the auction-purchaser under the second mortgage the opportunity to redeem, which the second mortgagee would have had if he had been joined as a defendant in the suit on the first mortgage?

This way of dealing with the case, as remarked by Mitra, J., in the judgment above cited does full justice to the respective claims of the parties. The defendant, if he desires to continue in possession, is bound to satisfy the mortgage-debt which was imposed on the property before any right accrued in his favour, and the second mortgagee who is now represented by the auction-purchaser could not have had any greater benefit from a decree for sale made in his favour. I hold, therefore, that there was no need for the plaintiff to bring a second suit for sale and that no question of limitation arises as the qualified title, which the plaintiff is entitled to enforce upon the condition of allowing an opportunity to redeem to the purchaser under the second mortgage, only came into existence on the date of her purchase in execution. I would dismiss the appeal.

By THE COURT.—Order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

XLIII—Madras Civil Rules of Practice, rr. 134, 179—Application under r. 179 for payment of moneys standing to credit of different suits—Objection by decree-holder in latter suit—Order upholding objection, nature of—Remedy of party aggrieved—Appeal—Revision.

PONNURANGAM PILLAI v. LAL KHAN SAHIB. .

C filed a suit on a mortgage against A and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. B, who held a decree against A in another suit, attached the profits of the mortgaged property deposited in Court to the credit of C's suit by a Receiver, and applied under rule 179 of the Civil Rules of Practice, Madras, for the issue of a cheque for a sufficient part of the attached money. C objected claiming a charge on the amount for any balance that might be due to him after sale of the property. C's objection was upheld by Court and B's petition dismissed. B filed a petition in the High Court to revise the said order:

Held, (1) that B's petition should have been for the transfer of moneys to the credit of B's suit; [p. 350, col. 2.]

(2) that the dispute was not covered by section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and the order was not appealable as one passed under section 47, Civil Procedure Code; [p. 350, col. 1.]

(3) that the order should be treated as one falling under Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code, on C's claim and was not subject to appeal or revision, whether it was passed under rule 179 of the Civil Rules of Practice in C's suit or under rule 137 of the Civil Rules of Practice in B's suit or under Order XXI, rule 60, in B's suit; [p. 351, col. 1.]

(4) that B's remedy was to proceed by way of a suit under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 351, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The words "proceed as if the attaching decree-holder was the assignee of the judgment-debtor to the extent of the amount due to the latter" in rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice are intended merely to make provision for the method by which the attaching creditor is to obtain the benefit of his attachment; it invests him with no legal character and does not expressly or impliedly justify the application of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the determination of his rights. [p. 349, col. 2; p. 350, col. 1.]

Attachment no more creates or transfers a right of ownership in a fund in Court than in any other description of property. [p. 350, col. 1.]

It may not be safe to hold generally that where the remedy by suit is open, interference by way of revision is unjustifiable, but where the Court's order is based on the merits of the case, though in the exercise of a jurisdiction wrongly assumed, and where it is not shown how the party aggrieved will be unfairly prejudiced by being made to resort to a suit, the High Court will refuse to interfere in revision. [p. 350, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 430 of 1915, in Original Suit No. 34 of 1911 (Original Suit No. 123 of 1912), on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, and Petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Civil Miscellaneous

Petitions Nos. 430 of 1915 and 455 of 1914, in Original Suit No. 34 of 1911.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The petitioners in these civil revision petitions, one of whom has also filed an appeal, hold decrees against the defendants in Original Suit No. 34 of 1911, persons who in one way or other are interested in the estate of one T. Krishnier. During the pendency of Original Suit No. 34 of 1911, the plaintiff, here respondent, obtained the appointment of a Receiver of the properties comprised in that estate, who has paid certain profits into Court. Petitioners have attached those profits and have asked for cheques for the amount of their claims from the fund under attachment. The lower Court in the orders before us refused to issue cheques, on the ground that petitioners could not have recourse to this fund until the sale of the property which has been ordered in the decree in Original Suit No. 34 of 1911, one on a mortgage, has taken place, and it has been ascertained whether the fund will be required to make good any deficiency in the amount of that decree. It is argued before us that, apart from the merits of the lower Court's order, no appeal lies against it and that we should not interfere in revision, because the petitioners have another remedy by suit.

It is not alleged that any appeal is provided against an order of this description in Order XLIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suggestion is only that the order is one passed under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, because petitioners are representatives of the judgment-debtor. This is supported by reference to rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice, which no doubt has the force of law and in which the Court is directed to "proceed as if the attaching decree-holder was the assignee of the judgment-debtor to the extent of the amount due to the former". But this merely makes provision for the method by which the attaching creditor is to obtain the benefit of his attachment. It invests him with no new legal character and does not expressly or impliedly justify the application of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to the determination of his rights. On general principles, moreover, it is clear that no such application can be justified.

For as the rateable distribution procedure indicates, attachment no more creates or transfers a right of ownership in a fund in Court than in any other description of property. The lower Court's order, therefore, is not appealable as passed under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. As regards the revision, there is no doubt no explicit provision in the Code and so far as we have been shown, no authority for petitioners' right to sue. But their right is not negatived by that fact, and we have not been shown that a future suit by them will be barred by the decisions in the present proceedings. The reason why it will not be is, not that the lower Court postponed adjudication on their right and gave no final decision on it, but that, as the dispute was not covered by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was not entitled to adjudicate on it at all except in a properly constituted suit. It may not be safe to hold generally that where the remedy by suit is open, interference by way of revision is unjustifiable; but the fact that petitioners can sue, affords good ground for refusal to interfere in revision in this case, since it is not shown how they will be unfairly prejudiced by being made to take that course. Some suggestion has been made that a refusal by the lower Court to exercise jurisdiction under section 115 (b), not a material irregularity or an illegality under section 115 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, is in question. But the lower Court's order is based on a consideration of the merits of the case and was an exercise, though possibly a wrong one, of the jurisdiction which it assumed that it had. In these circumstances cause has not been shown for interference by way of revision.

The appeal against order and the Civil Revision Petitions are, therefore, dismissed with costs which will, however, be allowed only in the latter.

† SADASIVA Aiyar, J.—The legal questions to be decided have arisen out of facts and considerations which may (for the purposes of this decision) be stated with sufficient accuracy as follows:—The decree-holder (B) in one suit (which may be called the first suit) attached moneys of his judgment-debtor (A), which were deposited in Court to the credit of another suit (which may be called the second suit) and which suit was filed by C against the same debtor (A) for sale of mortgaged properties and for the recovery of the balance, if any, after such sale from A personally. The attaching creditor B then made an application in the second suit under rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice. The prayer of an application under rule 179 ought to be only that a "sufficient part" of the attached money should be transferred to the credit of the first suit. B, however, seems to have prayed in his said application for the issue of a cheque for a sufficient part of the attached money. I think the Court ought to have asked B to amend his petition by praying only for such transfer of moneys to the credit of the first suit from the second suit. It was only after the Court passed such an order of transfer in the second suit that B should have put in his application for cheque in his own first suit under rule 137 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice for the amount so transferred. I shall, however, treat B's application under rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice for a cheque in the second suit as consisting of two applications, one in the second suit for the transfer of sufficient money to the first suit and another application in the first suit for cheque for the money so transferred. Now the second application for cheque was clearly premature and ought to be dismissed. As regards the first application, the mortgagee decree-holder C was properly treated therein as a counter-petitioner. He objected to the transfer of a sufficient portion to the credit of the first suit, on the ground that he had a first charge on the whole amount for any sum which might in the future be ascertained as the balance due to him by A after the sale of the mortgaged properties and that till that sum was so ascertained in the future, no portion of the money could be transferred to the credit of the first suit or be paid out to B. This objection of C was allowed and B's application under rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice was dismissed as premature.

I think that C's objection to B's application in the second suit under rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice was in substance a petition under Order XXI, rule 58, of the Civil Procedure Code, advancing a claim to the moneys attached by B and that such a petition must be treated as made in the first suit of B. It follows that the order of the Subordinate Judge allowing C's objection is an order on C's claim petition and was passed in the first suit. That order is final, subject to the result of any suit brought by B under Order XXI, rule 63, of the Civil Procedure Code, within one year of that order. It is that remedy by suit which B ought to have pursued, and he had no right of appeal or revision to this Court against the Subordinate Judge's order, whether it was passed under rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice (in the second suit), whether it was passed under rule 137 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice (in the first suit) or whether it was passed under Order XXI, rule 60 (in the first suit). Having regard to the complications which are likely to arise (as shown above) in similar cases, I would suggest that rule 179 of the Madras Civil Rules of Practice should be supplemented by rules providing that where an objection to an application under rule 179 of the Civil Rules of Practice be made, it should be treated as a claim petition in the suit of the applicant and an order should be passed thereon and that after the passing of such an order, the application under rule 179 should be disposed of in accordance with such an order. Forms for applications under rule 179 might also be prescribed. I am also not sure whether the limit of six months mentioned in rule 179 should not be removed. I agree in the result that the appeal and the Civil Revision Petitions should be dismissed and the latter with costs.

Appeal and Petitions dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 95—Simple money, claim for—Usufructuary mortgagee, suit by—Fraud of mortgagor.

A usufructuary mortgage was executed in 1907, but possession was not delivered to the mortgagee. In 1912 it was ascertained that the mortgagor had no power to mortgage the property and had fraudulently concealed the fact from the mortgagee. In 1914 the mortgagee sued for recovery of money due to him with interest thereon by way of damages:

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 95, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act and was not barred by time. [p. 352, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 12th November 1914, reversing the order of the Munsif, Tarabganj, dated the 23rd August 1914.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant executed a deed of mortgage for Rs. 72 in favour of the plaintiff on the 22nd September 1907 and agreed to deliver possession over the mortgaged plots. He did not, however, deliver possession and went to Rangoon sometime in March 1908. On his return from that place in May 1912 the plaintiff pressed him to deliver possession, but found that he was unable to do so, as it was then ascertained on enquiry that only one of the plots mortgaged belonged to him and that he had no power to mortgage the remainder. On that allegation the plaintiff sued for the recovery of the money due to him with interest thereon by way of damages or in the alternative for possession of the plots mortgaged with mesne profits.

The Court of first instance granted a decree for possession in regard to the plot which belonged to the plaintiff and dismissed the rest of the claim. The lower Appellate Court, however, granted a simple money-decree for the amount lent to the defendant with interest thereon by way of damages at 6 per cent. per annum for the three years preceding the suit. The latter decree is impugned on appeal on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation. The finding of the lower Appellate Court that the mortgagor had concealed from the plaintiff the material fact that he was not the owner of the plots mortgaged other than plot No. 3625 khassra and that the plaintiff came to know of that fraud in May 1912 is anyhow conclusive, and reading that finding with the decision of this Court in Udit Narain Singh v. Sahib Ali (1), the claim is obviously one governed by Article 95 of the Indian Limitation Act and is not barred by time.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Decree, amendment of—Power of Court.

In a partition suit a preliminary decree was made and a commissioner was appointed to make an allotment. While the case was before the commissioner one K, whose name was not in the decree, applied for amendment of the decree so as to include his name in it and also asked for the allotment of a separate share to him. The Court made the amendment and ordered the case to proceed de novo:

Held, that the Court had no power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to make such order. Under that section it had power only to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the pleadings and should have acted accordingly.

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Mozuffarpur, dated the 29th August 1916.

Mr. Baidya Nath Narain Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ganesh Dutta Singh and Siv Nandan Rai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the lower Court had made a preliminary decree for partition without contest among the parties. An order was issued to a commissioner to make an allotment and while the case was before the commissioner, one Kirtan Thakur discovered that his name was not in the decree although he was a co-sharer in the property. He, therefore, went to the learned Subordinate Judge and asked that the decree be amended so as to include his name as a co-sharer. He also asked for an allotment of a separate share. The learned Subordinate Judge thereupon, under what he described as his inherent power under section 151, set aside the preliminary decree and directed that the whole case be tried de novo. This the learned Sub-Judge had no power whatever to do. Under section 151 he had power to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the pleadings and this is the course which he should have adopted.

We, therefore, set aside the order made and direct that the learned Subordinate Judge do now take up the petition of Kirtan Thakur and proceed to bring the preliminary decree into conformity with the pleadings. He will then take up the commissioner's final report and consider that report in the light of the amendment made in the decree, and if without prejudice to the interests of the other parties concerned in the case Kirtan Thakur can at this stage be given a separate allotment, there will be no objection to that course being taken.

We make no order as to costs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Order set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1855), s. 103B, scope of—Record of Rights, entry in, history of proceedings as to, relevancy of—Burden of proof, objection as to, in appeal after evidence fully recorded.

The statutory provision in section 103, Bengal Tenancy Act, says nothing as to the value to be attached to an entry in the Record of Rights; it only says that the entry must stand and be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect.

It is open to a Court to consider the history of the proceedings which have resulted in a particular entry in a Record of Rights.

The question of the burden of proof is only a question of procedure and where the evidence has been fully recorded on both sides and the Court has only to adjudicate upon it, no such question arises.

Second appeal from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Arrah, dated the 21st August 1915, setting aside the decree of the Munsif, Sasseram, dated the 29th May 1914.

Mr. Chandar Sekhar Prasad Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bimla Charan Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of title and for recovery of possession of an agricultural holding.

The plaintiff did not obtain the actual admission of any document in support of his case. He produced the evidence of certain witnesses. The defendant relied upon an entry in the Record of Rights and also produced certain witnesses. The Original Court, relying upon the entry in the Record of Rights, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Court of First Appeal reversed this order and decreed the suit. Against the decree a second appeal has been made to this Court, and, in support of the appeal, it has been said that the First Court of Appeal wrongly placed the burden of proof upon the defendant, and that it did not give effect to the presumption provided for in section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which is to the effect that an entry in the Record of Rights must be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved by evidence. The third contention is that the learned Judge, in estimating the value of the entry in the Record of Rights, went into the history of the proceedings which resulted in that entry, and that he was not entitled to do this. So far as the question of the burden of proof is concerned, the Courts have had recently the assistance of the labours of specialists in the history of the law of evidence, and now the question of the burden of proof remains only a question of procedure. The plaintiff had to begin his case and to produce evidence and clearly the burden of proof was laid upon him. In determining the case subsequently upon the evidence on both sides it is not possible to say that any question of the burden of proof arose.

In regard to the presumption in favour of the Record of Rights, the contention fails upon a similar ground. There was evidence to rebut the presumption and that evidence was believed by the learned Subordinate Judge in a very carefully considered judgment.

In regard to the third point, it is not possible to say that it is not open to the Court to consider the history of the proceedings which have resulted in a particular entry in a Record of Rights. On the contrary it is often of the greatest value to very carefully consider the history of those proceedings, for the history is frequently of the greatest assistance in enabling the Court to estimate the value which should be attached to an entry in the Record of Rights. The statutory provision in section 103B of the Bengal Act says nothing as to the value to be attached to an entry in the Record of Rights; it only says that that entry must stand and be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect. It says nothing as to the strength or value of the evidence necessary to rebut the presumption.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Execution proceedings—Connected suits for partition, decrees in—Identity of subject-matter and parties—Execution application, dismissal of, on ground that relief was granted on previous application in connected suit—Subsequent application for division of specific omitted properties—Patent mistake of Court, effect of—Res judicata.

Two suits were filed for partition (Original Suit No. 1 of 1889 and Original Suit No. 1 of 1899) in which the parties were the same, though differently arrayed, and the properties in dispute were identical. The Court decreed in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 that the properties be divided into equal parts and that the plaintiffs should be put in possession of one of them. Plaintiffs in the said suit made an application for execution of the decree, but it was dismissed on the ground that the properties had already been divided in a prior execution of the decree in the other suit, Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, and that the matter could not be re-opened. It was pointed out that 3 acres and 72 cents were left undivided in the previous execution proceedings, but the Subordinate Judge took no notice of it and his order of dismissal was affirmed on appeal by the High Court. The plaintiffs put in the present application for division of the 3 acres and 72 cents. The records disclosed that the Subordinate Judge made a patent mistake when he said that all the properties including the said 3 and odd acres were divided. It was contended that the application was barred as res judicata:

Held, that the real question in the previous application and in the appeal to the High Court was whether the previous partition was liable to be re-opened at all, and not as to the particular items of property which had or had not been divided and that the present petition was not affected by the rule of res judicata. Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapati Vasudeva Devu, 24 M. 681; 4 M. L. J. 313, referred to.

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, in Appeal against Order No. 245 of 1912, preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Execution Petition No. 126 of 1911, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899, on the file of the District Judge, Godavari.

FACTS are clear from the following judgment, dated the 29th October 1913, by

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs, the decree-holders, are the appellants in this execution appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore. The decree in execution directed, among other things, the division into two equal parts of certain immoveable properties and that the plaintiffs should be put in possession of one such part. When the plaintiffs put in a former Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 for such division into two equal parts of all the immoveable properties in accordance with the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 obtained by the plaintiffs, the Subordinate Judge decided that they could not have such a partition of the said immoveable properties because they (plaintiffs) were bound by a partition already effected of the same properties in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889 and he held that the plaintiffs could in execution of their decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 obtain only the one-half share other than the half delivered to the defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11 in execution of the latter's decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889. That order of the Subordinate Judge was made on the 21st November 1906. It begins by saying that the property involved in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 itself had been made into two shares in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889. It makes no reservation and it does not say that the property involved in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 except 3 acres 72 cents had been made into two shares in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889. Against this order of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 appealed to the High Court. One of the grounds of appeal (6th ground) was that the lower Court had failed to notice that out of 54 acres 89 cents of land directed to be divided 3 acres 72 cents had not been divided in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889 and that the same was in possession of defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a division of these lands. Now there can be no question that when the Subordinate Judge said in his order in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 that the property involved in Original Suit

PODURU LAKSHMI NARAYANA v. PONNADA PALLAMRAJU.

No. 1 of 1899, i.e., the whole property, had been divided into two shares in Execution Petition No. 14 of 1903 in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, he made a mistake as it appears from the records that the entire extent of 54 acres 89 cents had not been so divided (though the defendants Nos. 9 to 11 had prayed in their execution petition for the entire lands to be so divided), and that 3 acres 72 cents were left undivided. It is this mistake of the Subordinate Judge which was pointed out by the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 in their Appeal against Order No. 52 of 1907 to the High Court in their 6th ground of appeal. But notwithstanding this contention in the appeal memorandum the learned Judges who decided this case in the High Court dismissed the Appeal against Order No. 52 of 1907 wholly. It seems to me that the result of the Subordinate Judge's decision was that the only relief which the plaintiffs could obtain in respect of possession of immoveable property in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 was to obtain possession of the half share of the properties divided in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, left after delivering one half share to the defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11, who are the decree-holders in the said Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, and that even as regards that 3 acres 72 cents, which the Subordinate Judge by mistake thought had been included in the division made in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, the plaintiffs could not obtain any relief in their Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906. Now the present Execution Petition No. 126 of 1911 was filed by plaintiffs for the partition of 3 acres 72 cents and for delivery of one-half share therein. In this petition the parties impleaded are the very same as those who were impleaded in the previous Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 or their representatives (13th defendant being the legal representative of the 7th defendant). It seems to me that this petition is clearly barred as res judicata as held by the Subordinate Judge and that this appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge ought to be dismissed. That the principle of res judicata may apply to execution petitions also has been held in numerous cases. It is, however, contended by the appellants' learned Vakil (Mr. G. Venkataramiah) that the order of the Subordinate Judge in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 and the order of the High Court in Appeal against Order No. 52 of 1907 should be held not to have dealt with the right of the plaintiffs to partition of this 3 acres 72 cents at all and that, therefore, those orders are not res judicata so far as this acres 3.72 cents are concerned. He relies for this contention on the case in Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapati Vasudeva Devu (1). The facts of that case were rather peculiar and under the particular circumstances of that case, it could be fairly argued that the executing Court by its order did not intend to pass a complete order on the first execution petition. That petition prayed for the recovery of the decreed lands and for mesne profits, but the order passed on that petition directed delivery of the possession of the lands and was silent as to mesne profits. It was held that under those circumstances, the Munsif could not be deemed to have refused execution as regards the mesne profits.

But in the present case the Subordinate Judge's order seems to me to show clearly that he intended to refuse all the reliefs in respect of the lands sought to be divided and delivered to the plaintiffs, except the relief of possession of that moiety of the land which was divided in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 101 of 1889 entered in the list prepared by the amin of properties allotted to the share other than that delivered to the defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11. No doubt the Subordinate Judge omitted to order the division of 3 acres 72 cents left wholly undivided in the partition proceedings in the other suit, owing to his having been under the mistaken impression that this land also had been divided in those proceedings. But his omission under a mistaken impression to order partition of this 3 acres 72 cents cannot be held to be an order not refusing the division of 3 acres 72 cents. Even if my interpretation of the order of the Subordinate Judge in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 is wrong on this point, I cannot see my way to this that when the High Court dismissed the Appeal against Order No. 52 of 1907, notwithstanding the sixth ground in the appeal memorandum before them, they intended to keep alive the right of and not to refuse to plaintiffs that portion of the reliefs claimed by them in execution which relates to the partition of those 3 acres 72 cents. It seems to me, therefore, as I said in the beginning, that this present petition, Execution Petition No. 126 of 1911, was rightly dismissed by the Subordinate Judge as barred by res judicata. Two of the statements of the Subordinate Judge in his order seem to be wrong, namely, that "there is nothing to support the petitioner's allegation that 3 acres 72 cents of land have been omitted in the division in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889", and that "on the contrary it appears from the records that the land of 3 acres 72 cents was shown in one of the lists as delivered to defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11 in execution of that decree". But these misstatements by the Subordinate Judge do not affect the question of res judicata. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal but as the contesting respondents are not shown to have any interest in opposing this appeal there will be no order as to costs.

SPENCER, J.—The Subordinate Judge is mistaken in saying that the land measuring 3 acres 72 cents was delivered to the counter-petitioners in Execution Petition No. 14 of 1903. The High Court, in appeal from the District Judge's decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899, gave the petitioners a decree for a moiety of the immoveable properties described in Schedule A attached thereto. One of these properties No. 11 in the list is re-survey No. 723 measuring 7 acres 4 cents corresponding to old survey No. 448.

Of this number the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, who were defendants Nos. 9 to 11 in the petitioners' suit, got 1 acre 99 cents forming sub-divisions I (a) and I (c) in the execution of their decree. It is noted in the remarks column of the partition list dated the 1st March 1903 that acres 372 cents of this No. 723 are in the possession of defendants Nos. 20 and 21, who are defendant Nos. 8 and 13 in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899. This supports the petitioners' allegation that 3 acres 72 cents have been omitted in the division. The Subordinate Judge is, therefore, wrong when he says that there is nothing to support it. He is also wrong in stating that the former Subordinate Judge, who passed the order dated the 21st November 1906 in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906, found that all the lands had already been divided and that there was nothing left to be divided. There is no such statement in the order. Nor was it correct to state that defendants Nos. 9 to 11 asserted in their counter-petition that they had been in possession of these 3 acres 72 cents in pursuance of the division effected in execution of their decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899. In their counter-petition these defendants raised the question whether the matter of these 3 acres 72 cents was "res judicata" by reason of the above said order in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 and the High Court's order in Appeal against Order No. 52 of 1907 by dismissing the appeal against it. Defendants Nos. 8 and 13 have not opposed the petition.

In my opinion the matter is not "res judicata", for the reason that the order in Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 is silent on the point of these 3 acres and 72 cents and the petitioners' decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 granting them a moiety of this property is apparently still in full force and effect and they are entitled to execute it as long as it is kept alive, and the decree cannot be superseded by the mere omission of the Court executing it to pass orders on a claim made under it.

The case is similar to that of Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapati Vasudeva Devu (1). It is true that in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 52 of 1907 the petitioners in appealing against the order dated the 21st November 1906 took as their sixth ground of appeal in their appeal petition that the lower Court had failed to notice that out of the 54 acres and 89 cents directed to be divided 3 acres 72 cents had not been divided in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889, and that they were in the possession of the defendants and that the petitioners were entitled to a division of them. But there is nothing to show that this point was pressed at the hearing or even brought to the notice of the High Court. The main question there was whether the partition made in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1889 could be re-opened in executing the subsequent decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1899 and on that point the appeal failed.

The Subordinate Judge's order should, therefore, in my opinion, be set aside and the present petition should be returned for passing the necessary orders in the light of the above remarks.

In the result the order of the lower Court will be confirmed and this appeal dismissed without costs.

Mr. G. Venkataramiah, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham (for Mr. B. Narasimha Rao) and Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the conclusion arrived at by Spencer, J. What the appellants sought to do by the Execution Petition No. 46 of 1906 was to re-open entirely the partition effected on the application of the respondents. That was disallowed by the Subordinate Judge and his order was upheld in appeal by the High Court.

As a matter of fact, as rightly found both by Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, JJ., 3 acres 72 cents in Survey No. 448 were not divided on the previous occasion and the mere fact that this was mentioned in the grounds of appeal to the High Court, cannot be said to have the effect of implied adjudication debarring the appellants before us, from having a division. The real question before the High Court was, whether the previous partition was liable to be re opened at all, and not as to the particular items of property which had or had not been divided.

It would be absolutely going too far to say that, under these circumstances, the principle of res judicata has any application to the appellants' petition [see Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapati Vasudera Devu (1)].

The result will be that the order of the High Court confirming the order of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside and the petition of the appellants will be remitted to the Subordinate Judge for disposal according to law. The respondents will bear the costs of the appellants throughout. The 5th respondent's estate will be liable to recoup to the appellants the sum of Rs. 22, which he has paid into Court.

Appeal allowed; Case sent back.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 395 OF 1916.

November 3, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Chapman.

KARU SINGH AND ANOTHER—

APPELLANTS

versus

Musammam BIBI NASIBAN AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Assignee from tenant, resistance by, to landlord's entry—Right to resist, proof of, by defendant—Burden of proof.

Where in a suit in ejectment the defendant acknowledges the landlord's title but pleads that the defendant is the assignee from the tenant and is not bound to quit, the onus is on him to show that he had a right to resist the landlord's entry. The mere fact that the plaintiff has failed to prove a special case set up by him, though it may be a point in defendant's favour, does not relieve the Court from finding affirmatively on the evidence whether the defendant has a right to resist the landlord's entry. [p. 358, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 3rd July 1916, confirming the decree of the Munsif, Barh, dated the 12th January 1915.

Messrs. Farnendra Nath Sinha and Shivanandan Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohammad Tahir, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject of this suit is certain land upon which huts or houses have been built in Mokamah. The landlords alleged that they allowed one Musan to occupy the land and the homestead. On the death of Musan the landlords allowed Musan's sons defendants Nos. 3 and 4 to remain on the property.

In October 1913 the two sons of Musan left the village and migrated elsewhere. The plaintiffs went to take possession when they were opposed by a person named Nasiban, who claimed under a transfer from the two sons of Musan. The landlords were unable to eject Nasiban and accordingly had recourse to the Court. The learned Munsif dismissed the suit upon the ground that the two sons of Musan had permanent and transferable rights in the land. The learned District Judge in appeal has expressly refrained from deciding as to the nature of the right to the land held by Nasiban or before her by the sons of Musan. The learned District Judge has disposed of the case in the following sentence: "The plaintiffs' case is based on an allegation of a conditional settlement made about fourteen years ago, and that having broken down, they cannot shift their ground and throw the burden of proof as to the permanent nature of the grant on the defendants."

The case was contested by the defendant Nasiban alone.

Now, it being conceded that the plaintiffs are the proprietors of the land, it was for the transferee Nasiban to make out her right to resist the plaintiffs' entry on the land. The mere fact that the plaintiffs tried to make out a particular case and failed might be a point to set up in favour of the defendant Nasiban's case; but it did not relieve the Judge from finding affirmatively on evidence that the defendant, the transferee Nasiban who resisted, had a right to resist the entry of the plaintiffs on the land. I may note that in the Record of Rights the entry in the column 'status' is a word gair mazrooa from which I infer that the persons in occupation of the land were not recorded by the Survey Officers as having either an occupancy or a non-occupancy right in the land.

It may be that the tenancy was transferable but there must be a finding to that effect.

The result is that I set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and remand the appeal to the District Judge for a fresh decision. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

POORAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF—

versus

Musammat HAIDRI—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Jurisdiction—Civil or Revenue Court—Suit for declaration of invalidity of lease—Agra Tenancy Act U. P. Act II of 1901, s. 197.

A suit for a declaration that a certain lease is invalid does not lie in a Civil Court. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh, 26 Ind. Cas. 731; 37 A. 41; 12 A. L. J. 1252, followed.

Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad, 27 Ind. Cas. 913; 37 A. 223; 13 A. L. J. 278, Gomti Kunwar v. Gudri, 25 A. 138, A. W. N. (1902) 220, referred to.

The intention of United Provinces Act II of 1901, as well as of the Acts before it, was that when a Rent Court could try the issue which lay between the parties, then the Rent Court and Rent Court alone had jurisdiction. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 19th March 1915.

FACTS.—Pooran Singh plaintiff and his brother Sher Singh jointly owned some property. In 1907, an application for partition was filed. On the 6th of August 1908, Sher Singh gave a perpetual lease of 38 bighas 16 biswas to his mistress Musammat Haidri. On the 15th of June 1910, the partition proceedings came to an end and a portion of the leased land fell to the plaintiff's share. On the 25th of March 1912, the plaintiff's suit for ejectment of Musammat Haidri was dismissed for default by the Revenue Court. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that the lease granted by Sher Singh was null and void. The Courts below dismissed the suit, holding that the suit was not maintainable in a Civil Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Lakshmi Narayan, for the Appellant.—The suit has been thrown out on the ground that Civil Courts have no jurisdiction in matters of this kind. They have relied on the case of Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (1). In that case, a lease was set up in the Revenue Court which went into the question and decided it. In the present case, the matter was never gone into by reason of the fact that the suit had been dismissed for default and the plaintiff's cause of action for setting aside the lease accrued only after he came to know of its existence. Moreover the principle laid down in this case, namely that the real substance of the relief has to be looked at and not the form, is opposed to the case of Gomti Kunwar v. Gudri (2), which was based upon the Privy Council case of Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (3). Gomti Kunwar's case (2) has also been followed in Kidambi Venkatachariar v. Lakshmi Doss (4).

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 731; 37 A. 41; 12 A. L. J. 1252.

(2) 25 A. 138; A. W. N. (1902) 220.

POORAN SINGH v. HAIDRI.

In the case of Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad (5) it was held by the same Bench which decided Ram Singh's case (1) that although the Revenue Court has held a person to be the sub-tenant of the defendant, the plaintiff could institute a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration that he was the tenant-in-chief and not the defendant.

The present suit is clearly maintainable in the Civil Court: section 9, Civil Procedure Code, Chrit Ram v. Hira (6), Jagrup v. Gaya Prasad (7).

A second suit for ejectment would be maintainable in the Revenue Court and would not be barred.

It has also been held that if a suit for ejectment fails, the plaintiff can bring a suit for ejectment in the Civil Court on the allegation that the defendant is a trespasser: Zubeda Bibi v. Sheo Charan (8), Hamed Ali Shah v. Wilayat Ali (9) and Jagar Nath v. Ajudhya Singh (10).

In any event the District Judge ought to have acted under the provisions of section 197 of the Tenancy Act: Badam Singh v. Musammam Sabta Kuar (11), Naubat Singh v. Baldeo Singh (12).

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondent, was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this second appeal was a suit brought by the plaintiff, who is here the appellant, to obtain a declaration that a certain lease, dated the 6th of August 1908, is void as against him. The plaintiff and Sher Singh defendant No. 2 were brothers. They both owned certain plots measuring 33 bighas 16 biswas. An application was made for partition and the partition was sanctioned on the 15th of June 1910. At that time defendant No. 2 was the lambardar and while the partition was still pending, he gave a perpetual lease of the entire plot in favour of one Musammam Haidri defendant No. 1. The major portion of the plots, amounting to 20 bighas 4 biswas, fell at the partition to the share of the plaintiff. He brought a suit in the Revenue Court for the ejectment of Musammam Haidri. That case was dismissed on 25th March 1912 for default. The appellant then brought the present suit in the Civil Court to obtain a declaration that the lease was invalid and ought to be set aside. Musammam Haidri contested the suit and pleaded that it was not cognizable by the Civil Court. Both the Courts below, following the law as laid down in Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (1), held that the suit did not lie in the Civil Court and dismissed the claim.

In appeal before me it is contended that the Court below had jurisdiction and in any case should have exercised the powers conferred upon it by section 197 of Local Act II of 1901. In the course of the argument it was further contended that the case just cited by me can be distinguished and that in any event it is opposed to what was laid down in the case of Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad (5) and also in the case of Gomti Kunwar v. Gudri (2). The principle laid down in Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (1) has my fullest sympathy. As I understand Local Act II of 1901, the intention of that Act as well as of the previous Acts before it was that when a Rent Court could try the issue which lay between the parties, then the Rent Court and Rent Court alone had jurisdiction. I understand this to be the principle which governed the Judges in Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (1). At any rate I have the authority of that case for my decision in the present case and, as I said, the principle has my fullest sympathy. I dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 19, 20—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Acquisition of occupancy rights during lifetime of widow—Eviction by reversioners, validity of.

Occupancy rights are not the creation of a zemindar or of the manager or of the temporary holder of an estate; any person cultivating lands in an estate acquires in time occupancy rights therein and the temporary holder can do nothing to prevent the acquisition of those rights save by evicting the occupancy ryot by legal process. Any person holding in good faith as a cultivating ryot land under a temporary manager, proprietor or even lease-holder would acquire occupancy rights therein after twelve years' cultivation.

Hence occupancy rights acquired during the time when an estate was in the hands of a Hindu widow cannot be questioned by the reversioners after her death.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mozufferpore, dated the 17th February 1913, affirming that of the Munsif, Muzufferpore, dated the 5th August 1912.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Mr. Baikun'ha Nath Mitter), for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganesh Dutt Singh (with him Mr. Baidya Nath Narain Sinha), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant is reversioner to an estate which was in the hands of a Hindu widow from the year 1876 up to the year 1904. During that period certain connections of hers obtained a settlement of the parcel of land now in dispute as cultivating ryots and have been recorded as holding occupancy rights therein. The appellant seeks to evict them, firstly, on the ground that the land in suit was zerait land of the estate and that, therefore, the respondents could not legally acquire occupancy rights therein; and secondly, that the widow had no authority to create occupancy rights in these lands.

With regard to the second argument occupancy rights are not a creation of the zemindar or of the manager or of the temporary holder of the estate, any person cultivating lands in an estate acquires in time occupancy rights therein and the temporary holder can do nothing to prevent the acquisition of those rights save by evicting the occupancy ryot by legal processes. It is certain that any person holding in good faith as a cultivating ryot land under a temporary manager, proprietor or even lease-holder would acquire occupancy rights therein after twelve years' cultivation.

With regard to the first point raised that the lands are zerait land, it has been found as a fact that they are not zerait lands, and we cannot go behind that finding unless it is shown that the appellants did not have a fair trial on this issue. It is suggested that they might have proved their case by means of a local enquiry, but we note that there was no application made for a local enquiry until after the evidence in the case had been completed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the first class Subordinate Judge, Nasik, in Appeal No. 228 of 1913, confirming the decree passed by the second class Subordinate Judge, Malegaon, in Civil Suit No. 215 of 1912.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for a declaration that a certain immoveable property belonged to him and for a decree that possession of the same should be delivered to him by the defendant. He bases his title upon a purchase of the properties in question from Narayen Ganpati on the 5th of December 1911. It has been held by the lower Appellate Court that prior to this date the plaintiff had notice of the execution of a contract for the sale of the same property by Narayen to the defendant. The defendant contends that he has paid to Narayen portion of the purchase-money agreed upon and that the balance was to be paid after the sale-deed was passed. It is found by the lower Appellate Court that nearly half of the purchase-money was in fact received by Narayen from the defendant under the contract of sale.

The question is whether the defendant has a good defence to a suit by a purchaser from Narayen who can rely upon a registered sale-deed and whether he can, notwithstanding the sale-deed, retain possession of the property on the ground that the plaintiff purchased with notice of the defendant's contract.

The defendant's right to enforce the benefit of the obligation of his intended vendor against the purchaser with notice is expressly affirmed by section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, as explained by the illustration. The plaintiff is, moreover, according to the Specific Relief Act, section 3, a trustee for the defendant of the land purchased by him: see illustration (g). Section 91 of the Indian Trusts Act affirms the same rule as the Specific Relief Act. The Legislature has herein adopted the law applied in the cases of Daniels v. Davison (1) and Potter v. Sanders (2). It is not contended that in the defendant's contract any date is fixed for performance nor is there any evidence that before he learnt of the plaintiff's purchase, the defendant had any notice that the vendor would refuse performance. Therefore at the date of the plaintiff's suit, namely, the 16th of April 1912, a suit by the defendant against his vendor for specific performance would have been within time and if the plaintiff was at the date of suit in the position of a trustee for the defendant, the latter is clearly entitled to enforce that position up to the end of the litigation. It must not be taken from the above remarks that the defendant would be in a worse position in relation to the plaintiff if at the date of suit his right to sue his vendor for specific performance had been barred, since he is a defendant now relying upon his possession. In this connection reference may be made to Orr v. Sundra Pandia (3); Krishna Menon v. Kesavan (4) and Rangnath Saktharam v. Govind Narasim (5).

The result is that the plaintiff cannot profit by his conveyance except to stand in the shoes of his vendor and receive the balance of the purchase-money due, on payment of which he would have to convey to the defendant. This, however, is not the relief which he seeks, and the result is that his suit for possession must fail.

This decision may appear to be inconsistent with the result arrived at in Lalchand Motiram v. Lakshman Sahadu (6) and in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (7), from which, if rightly decided, it would appear that the defendant would have no defence against a suit by his vendor for possession, although by reason of the statutory provisions above referred to, he has a complete defence against his vendor's assignee, notwithstanding that

It may be necessary hereafter, when a suitable occasion arises, to consider in a Full Bench, whether the Transfer of Property Act necessarily involves such inconsistent positions. The facts of the present case do not raise the question decided in Lalchand Motiram v. Lakshaman Sahadu (6). When the question does arise for consideration, the observations of the Privy Council in Immadipattam Thirugnana Kondama Naik v. Periya Dorasami (8) and the words "of itself" in the last clause of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which attention was called by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in *Karalia Nanubhai v. Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 35 (3)—'Assign', whether donee of gift is—Execution, admission of, by donee after donor's death—Registration.

A donee under a gift deed is an 'assign' of the executant within the meaning of section 35 (3) of the Registration Act.

Section 35 of the Act authorises the registration of a deed of gift, after the death of its executant, if the donee appears before the Registering Officer and admits the execution.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, second Court, Burdwan, dated the 13th November 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, second Court, Katwa, dated the 4th September 1913.

Babus Satish Chandra Mookerjee and Khetra Gopal Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Babus Surendra Kumar Bose and Sarat Kumar Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the second Court of Burdwan, dated the 13th November 1914, reversing the decision of the Munsif of the second Court at Katwa. The suit brought before the learned Munsif was one for recovery of possession of certain lands, to which the plaintiff founded his title on a deed of gift executed by a lady. The lower Appellate Court has found that the deed of gift was executed. The only question that was raised before that Court and which has also been pressed before us in this appeal is as to the registration of that deed. Under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, a gift of an immoveable property can only be made by a deed of transfer duly registered. The lady died a few hours after executing the deed of gift. The document was, however, registered within the four months required by the Indian Registration Act and the only question is, "was the plaintiff an assign of the deceased lady within the meaning of the third clause of section 35 of the Indian Registration Act, which authorises the registration of a document where the executant is dead and his representative or assign appears before the Registering Officer and admits the execution?" The plaintiff was vested with the interest that the deceased lady had in the property comprised in the deed of gift; and ordinarily, he would be an assign of the lady. No reason has been shown why the word "assign" should not be given its ordinary signification, and it is quite possible that the Legislature inserted the word "assign" in the third clause of section 35 to provide for the case where the representative would not appear and unless the transferee was authorized to appear and admit the execution, the deed could not be registered. I think the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890), ss. 42, 44, 13, scope of—Public street—Vyasantol of procession, prohibition of, for all time and throughout a district—Government Resolution, if ultra vires—Public, right of, to use public roads.

The Government of Bombay Resolution dated the 6th of May 1911 prohibiting Vyasantol processions in the District of Belgaum for all time is illegal and ultra vires and is not covered either by section 42 or by section 44 of the Bombay District Police Act. [p. 364, col. 2; p. 366, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 42 of the Bombay District Police Act expressly limits the powers of prohibition conferred upon the Magistrate both in time and in place, the limitation of place being to a particular town or village or the vicinity thereof. Section 44 (1) of the District Police Act deals not with the prohibition of religious ceremonials, but with the maintaining of public order at religious ceremonials which are not prohibited. [p. 364, col. 2; p. 366, col. 1.]

Section 13 (2) of the District Police Act does not confer any unlimited power on the Government to prohibit processions. [p. 366, col. 1.]

All members of the public have a right to use the public streets in a lawful manner, and it lies on them who would restrain them to show some law or custom abrogating the privilege. [p. 364, col. 1; p. 366, col. 1.]

Therefore, the Lingayats of the District of Belgaum have a right to exhibit Vyasantol, their religious symbol, in procession in any public street, subject to the lawful orders that may be passed under any provisions of law such as section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or sections 42 and 44 of the Bombay District Police Act. First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Suit No. 14 of 1913.

Mr. Strangman (with him Mr. S. R. Bakhale), for the Appellants.

Mr. Jardine, Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Bahadurji (with him Messrs. G. K. Parekh and K. H. Kelkar), for Respondents Nos. 2 to 6.

JUDGMENT.

BATCHELOR, J.—This appeal is brought by the plaintiffs in the suit. They sued as representatives of the Lingayat community of the town of Athni, and the object of their suit was to obtain a declaration of their right to exhibit in public their religious emblem known as the Vyasantol.

The learned District Judge has decided against them because he has upheld the validity of a certain contested order of Government, viz., Government Resolution, Judicial Department, No. 2568 of the 6th May 1911.* Upon that point only the

*RESOLUTION.

The Lingayats of Athni in the Belgaum District pray for permission, under section 44 (1) of the District Police Act (Bombay Act IV of 1890), to parade the Vyasantol procession through certain streets of the town of Athni on the occasion of the visit of their High Priest, the Swami of Chitaldurg. The procession is intended to do honour to him and to show the respect and reverence with which his followers regard him.

2. The main points requiring consideration under section 44 (1) of the District Police Act (Bombay Act IV of 1890) are:—

(a) whether any dispute or contention exists which is likely to lead to a grave disturbance of the peace; and

(b) what order would be proper having regard to the apparent legal rights and the established practice of the parties.

3. As to a) there can be no doubt, on the evidence produced and from the past history of nearly a century, that a dispute has always existed and does now exist about the right to parade the Vyasantol procession, both in Belgaum and in other districts. Similarly the same evidence shows that disturbances of the peace have in the past been caused by this procession, which has been described as "an obnoxious ceremony" and "an unbecoming procession." The element of disturbance is in the symbol of the great Vyasa's hands represented as cut off, and paraded in that manner. Though the Vaishnavite Brahmins are the class who consider themselves most directly aggrieved, there is no doubt that Vyasa has been held in the highest respect and is considered to be a god by those Brahmins who are followers of Shiva, and by the non-Lingayat Hindus generally. These last, though they may not voluntarily and actively lead any opposition, would certainly sympathise with an agitation against the processions. The Governor-in-Council is, therefore, convinced that the dispute that exists is such as to raise a reasonable apprehension of a grave disturbance of the peace. The fact that the District Magistrate, Belgaum, ordered a special party of Police to attend at Athni shows that in his opinion the occurrence of a riot was not improbable.

4. As regards (b) the Governor-in-Council is of opinion that there can be no legal right to parade through the streets with this symbol. He agrees with the Commissioner, S.D., that the Vyasantol is not a necessary part of religious worship. The plaintiffs failed in the Trial Court, and that point only is the subject for our decision in this appeal.

Now the proposition with which we start, in a consideration of this subject, is the well-known principle that all members of the public and every sect have a right to use the streets in a lawful manner, and it lies on those who would restrain them in its exercise to show some law or custom having the force of law depriving them of the privilege: see Sadagopachariar v. Rama Rao (1), which was followed by a Bench of this Court in Baslingappa v. Dharmappa (2).

These general or common law rights may be restricted by Statute: in this instance by the Bombay District Police Act. But the restrictions imposed must, it is manifest, be justified by the Act. The question, therefore, is whether the Government Resolution, which I have quoted, is justified under the District Police Act. For, it is admitted by the learned Advocate-General that the Resolution is not to be saved by reference to section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code read with section 38 of the District Police Act. The learned District Judge, commenting upon the terms of the Resolution, observes that the order is not drafted with legal precision and does not suggest that legal advice was taken. The want of precision to which the Judge here alluded adds some difficulty to our task. But the question is, whether, without pressing technicalities, the substantial requirements of the District Police Act have been complied with. In my opinion, the answer is in the negative. The authority issuing the order ascribes it to section 44, sub-section 1. That ascription, however, is, I think I may say, obviously a mistake. For whereas the Resolution under notice purports to prohibit this Vyasantol procession, section 44 (1) deals not with the prohibition of religious ceremonials, but with the maintaining of public order at religious ceremonials which are not prohibited. That notwithstanding, the Resolution may, of course, still be valid if it can be attributed to powers vested in the Government by any other sections of the Act, and the only section to which recourse has been had for this purpose is section 42. That section also, in my opinion, fails to serve the turn of the respondents. For, in the first place, the authority empowered under section 42 is not the Government, but the local Magistrate of the District, and the words 'whenever and for such time as it shall appear necessary' appear to me in the context to mean 'appear necessary to that Magistrate.' It was suggested that the powers thus vested in the District Magistrate might be capable of legal exercise by the Government by reason of the provisions of section 50 read with section 13, sub-section 2, of the Act. It is not at present necessary to pronounce upon this argument, and I will only say that I am doubtful whether it should be conceded. Assuming, however, that the argument is sound, it goes no further than this that the present orders, though issued by Government, have the same validity as if they had been issued by the District Magistrate. The question, therefore, is whether these orders, if issued by the District Magistrate, would be lawful orders under section 42. I think they would not. For section 42 enables the Magistrate to issue these orders only whenever and for such time as it shall appear necessary and the orders are to operate only in such town or village or the vicinity thereof as may be directed; in other words, the powers of prohibition conferred upon the Magistrate are by the Statute expressly limited both in time and in place, the limitation of place being to a particular town or village or the vicinity thereof. This particular order, as I understand it, is to operate for all time, and instead of being limited to any town or village or the vicinity thereof is to prevail throughout the whole of the Belgaum District.

On these grounds, therefore, I think that objection of the Brahmans and others is not to the procession itself, but to the parading of the Vyasantol. On the question of the established practice, which after all is the most important one, it is admitted not only that there have been no processions of the kind in the Belgaum District within the memory of the present generation but that it has been prohibited whenever the Lingayats attempted to revive it.

(1) 26 M. 376.

(2) 7 Ind. Cas. 663; 12 Bom. L. R. 586; 34 B. 571.

5. The Governor-in-Council for these reasons is pleased to direct that permission should not in future be given to hold Vyasantol processions in the Belgaum District.

DUNDAPPA MALLAPPA SIGANDHI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

the Resolution in question is beyond the powers conferred by the Act.

The learned Advocate-General, as a last effort to sustain the Resolution, suggested that it might be upheld if it were regarded as being nugatory. I am unable, however, to read it in that sense. From what I have already said, it is manifest that we must attend not so much to the words as to the plain meaning of this Resolution, and of the meaning of it I have not been able to entertain any doubt. As I read the Resolution, its meaning and effect is, and was intended to be, the prohibition of the Vyasantol procession throughout the Belgaum District for all time.

For the reasons which I have given I am of opinion that no such orders could lawfully be issued under the Bombay District Police Act. Therefore, the point upon which the judgment of the Court below has gone against the appellants must now be decided in their favour; the decree of the District Judge must be reversed and the suit must be remanded to his Court to be heard and decided on the other issues.

Costs to be costs in the suit.

SHAH, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Lingayat plaintiffs in the District Court of Belgaum for a declaration that the Lingayats have a right to exhibit Vyasantol, their religious symbol, in procession on religious and other occasions, and that the Government Resolution No. 2658 (Judicial Department) of the 6th May 1911 is illegal and ultra vires in so far as it forbids the exhibition of the symbol entirely for all time and throughout the District. Among other things, it was urged by way of defence that the validity of the Government Resolution could not be questioned in a Civil Court. The material issues were decided by the lower Court against the plaintiffs, principally on the ground that the Government Resolution was within the powers conferred by the District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890) on the Government, and that its validity could not be questioned in a Civil Court except so far as section 81 of the Act permitted it. The result was that the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed with costs.

In this appeal against the decree of the District Court, the only point argued is whether the Government Resolution of the 6th May 1911 is illegal and ultra vires.

At the outset it will be convenient to deal with the point, which has been raised by the learned Advocate-General, that the Resolution does not prohibit anything and is merely a direction to the District Magistrate that permission should not be given in future to hold Vyasantol processions in the Belgaum District. Taking the Resolution as a whole, I have no doubt that it was intended to prohibit, and has clearly the effect of prohibiting, Vyasantol processions in the District of Belgaum without any limitation as to time, so far as the Government are concerned. The Resolution cannot, therefore, be treated as merely nugatory as suggested by the Advocate-General.

As regards the validity of the Resolution, it is conceded, and, in my opinion, rightly conceded, by the Advocate-General that section 38 of the District Police Act has no application to the present case. No reliance was placed on behalf of the defendants on section 81 of the Act in the course of the argument; and it is clear that the section can have no application, unless the order contained in the Resolution is made by the Government under an authority conferred by the Act.

The question, therefore, arises, whether the order in dispute can be referred to any authority conferred by the District Police Act on the Government. It is argued that the requisite authority is conferred by section 50 read with section 13, clause 2. Under section 50 orders made by the Magistrate of the District under Chapter IV are subject to the provisions of section 13 (2); and section 13, clause (2), provides that in exercising authority under the preceding sub-section the Magistrate of the District shall be governed by such orders as Government may from time to time make in this behalf. Assuming, without deciding, that the Government have the power under section 13 (2) of making such discretionary orders, as the District Magistrate is empowered to make under sections 42 and 44, so as to make them binding on the District Magistrate under section 50, it is clear that the orders to be made must be justified under sections

DUNDAPPA MALLAPPA SIGANDHI v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

42 and 44. If they transgress the provisions of sections 42 and 44, they would be ultra vires to that extent. Section 13, clause (2), does not confer any unlimited power on the Government to prohibit processions.

Having regard to the decisions in Baslingappa v. Dharmappa (2) and Sadagopachariar v. Rama Rao (1), it is clear that the plaintiffs have a right to use the public streets in a lawful manner and it lies on those who would restrain them to show some law or custom abrogating the privilege, and that subject to the lawful orders that may be passed under any provisions of law such as section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure or sections 42 and 44 of the District Police Act, they would be entitled to hold the Vyasantol processions in any public street. As I have already pointed out, the Government by their Resolution prohibit the Vyasantol processions in the whole District of Belgaum, without any limit as to time. The prohibition, that section 42 of the District Police Act contemplates, is limited as to time and space. It provides that the Magistrate of the District may, whenever and for such time as it shall appear necessary, prohibit in a town or village or the vicinity thereof the exhibition of symbols, which, in the opinion of the Magistrate, may probably inflame religious animosity between different classes. The order of the Government is not confined to any town or village but extends to the whole District, and it is not limited in any manner as to time. I feel clear that it is outside the ambit of section 42. Under section 44, it is still more difficult to justify the order of the Government. Under that section, when it appears to the District Magistrate that a dispute exists which is likely to lead to grave disturbance of the peace, he can give such orders, with reference to any religious exhibition or procession, as to the conduct of the persons concerned towards each other and towards the public as he shall deem necessary and reasonable under the circumstances. Such orders apparently are to have operation in a particular town or place. The present order of the Government does not appear to me to fall within the scope of section 44, as it involves an unqualified prohibition of the Vyasantol processions in the whole District, and pays no regard to the apparent legal rights of the persons interested. Further, under section 44 (2), any order made under section 44 (1) is subject to a decree of a competent Court and is liable to be recalled or altered if it is inconsistent with a decree that may be passed in a suit, filed by an interested person, as to the rights and duties of the persons affected by the order. This subsection would save the present suit even if the order of the Government were within the scope of section 44 (1), because no order made under the first paragraph is to be inconsistent with the legal rights of the parties as determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction. But, in my opinion, the order of the Government is clearly outside the scope of sections 42 and 44; and it is not possible to treat it as having been made under an authority conferred by the Act.

I am unable to agree with the learned District Judge in his opinion that "it is within the competence of Government in the exercise of their power of control to give a general direction to the District Magistrate." No authority has been cited in support of this view; and on the proper construction of the sections of the Act, I cannot hold that the Act confers upon the Government an unlimited power of prohibiting religious processions in the whole of any District. On these grounds I am of opinion that the Government Resolution is illegal and ultra vires in so far as it prohibits the Vyasantol processions in the whole District without any limit as to time, and that it is no bar to the plaintiffs' suit.

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 6 (1)—Set-off, legal and equitable—Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for—Liability to defendant on accounts—'Ascertained sum', meaning of—Set-off, right to, in claims arising in respect of same matter—Trust—Voluntary management of property—Constructive trustee—Liability of manager to account.

The expression 'ascertained sum' in Order VIII, rule 6 (1), Civil Procedure Code, means an amount which is beyond challenge and beyond dispute, concluded and conclusive. [p. 369, col. 1.]

A set-off can be claimed on the basis of a contractual relation between the parties. [p. 369, col. 1.]

In the absence of such a contract, there is a right to an equitable set-off when the set-off arises out of the same transaction out of which the claim springs. If it is found that the set-off is foreign to the original claim, the set-off will not be allowed. [p. 369, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a claim for rent due by a tenant under a lease, it is not open to the latter to plead a set-off of amounts due to him by the plaintiff on accounts in respect of payments made on the plaintiff's behalf in respect of other properties which are not the subject-matter of the suit. The defendant can, however, claim a set-off in respect of payments made on the plaintiff's behalf qua the property which he holds under him. [p. 368, col. 2.]

A volunteer acting in the management of another's property, without remuneration, becomes clothed with the character, position and capacity of a trustee and is deemed in law a constructive trustee, and, as such, is undoubtedly liable and bound to account for the management of the property committed to him. Voluntary service is the foundation underlying all trusteeship and the law precludes a trustee from making a profit or acquiring a benefit from his office as trustee. The fact of the payment of a salary affords no test in determining the liability to account. [p. 370, col. 2; p. 371, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—A gentleman called Tundun Singh died prior to the 19th of April 1891, leaving a widow and three daughters him surviving. The plaintiff is the second daughter, the third daughter Muntor Koer is dead, having died in December 1906, and the eldest daughter is also dead and is represented by her son. Upon the death of Tundun Singh, a family arrangement was arrived at and embodied in a written agreement dated the 19th April 1891, whereby all the property of Tundun Singh, save four denominations, was equally divided amongst his three daughters, each of whom took a share to the extent of 5 annas 4 pies. The plaintiff Diltor on the 5th April 1892 leased her one-third share of that property to the defendant Harkhoo Singh. The plaintiff's one-third share represented 61 villages in all, and the rent reserved by the lease was Rs. 3,975 per annum payable in various proportions on the dates specified in the deed itself. There is no dispute as to the validity of the deed. The defendant entered into possession of the lands and continued to hold the lands under the lease for the term of seven years; and he remained on in possession after the expiration of the lease and is in possession still of the lands, and the rent that is sought to be recovered is the rent for the years 1315 and 1316 Fasli. The defendant also admits that he is liable, since the period when the lease expired, to hold the lands subject to all the provisions and terms embodied in the lease itself. Accordingly the plaintiff in action No. 49 of 1913 seeks to recover Rs. 6,114-11-0 for arrears of rent due for the years that I have already mentioned, and that sum of Rs. 6,114-11-0 is arrived at after the plaintiff has given the defendant credit for payment of Government revenue. Primarily, the plaintiff would be bound to pay all the charges affecting the property, namely Government revenue, road cess, and whatever superior rents might be payable in respect of the same, and, in so far as the defendant has paid Government revenue and road cess, or has paid any superior rents so far as they affect the thika properties, of course, as against the rent due, he must be entitled to get credit for such payments, because the obligation to make all such payments is not upon him but upon the plaintiff, who is the proprietor or owner of this property. It seems a very simple matter, and one would have thought that it was a matter easily disposed of within a reasonable limit of time. However, it has taken over six years for a simple claim for rent payable under a lease to be disposed of in the subordinate Courts.

The defendant's defence to this action for rent is one of a very extraordinary character, unless indeed the defendant is clothed with the authority and occupies the position which the plaintiff alleges he does in the corresponding Suit No. 1.9, namely that of an agent, manager or trustee. The defendant's defence to the action shortly stated is:—"I was your lessee of the leased lands, but I consented to pay in respect of your other properties (which I will refer to in a moment) all the charges that might affect them, and that whatever payments I made in respect of those properties I was to be entitled to set off by way of payment as against the rent payable by me to you under the lease."

It appears that in the year 1891 the plaintiff purchased a 5 annas share in three villages, Dibra, Shahpur and Fatehpur, and also that upon the death of her sister Muntor, childless, she inherited the 3-annas share which that lady also bought in these same villages, as well as her one-third share in the family property settled by the agreement of the 19th April 1891. These properties have been referred to in the course of the argument as the non-thika properties. The defendant's case or defence is, that he was to make all payments which could be properly claimed against the plaintiff in respect of these non-thika lands, whether by way of wages for servants, or Government cess or road cess or superior interests, and he avers in the claim that he was to pay them, and the payments which he made he was to be entitled to set off as against the rent payable under the lease of 1892. The plaintiff denies that contention altogether, and says that the payments the defendant may have made form the subject-matter of a different transaction; that the defendant was to pay her rent under his contract and that whatever claim he had for acting as her manager was to be settled in a different proceeding and on a different basis entirely. Dr. Bysack in a very strenuous argument has suggested that really the only question for the determination of the rent suit is, whether or not the contract that was made between the plaintiff and defendant was the one which is pleaded in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the written statement, or is the simple contract alleged by the plaintiff. In fact he says that the real thing is this, that the disbursements to be made by the defendant in respect of the non-thika properties were to be made by way of a settlement of the rent due under the lease. Well, we do not at all hold with that view. We think that there was no such contract made between the parties as is alleged in the written statement and as has been contended for here. We think the case is one of a simple lease made between landlord and tenant, whereby the tenant contracts to pay rent to his landlord and that, if the defendant as tenant makes payments on his landlord's behalf qua the property which he holds under him, that, therefore, only to that extent is the defendant entitled to set off as against the rent due what sums he has paid. I have indicated the nature of the items to be set off, but in order to emphasize it I desire to draw particular attention to the fact that the claim is conversant only with the thika properties. Therefore, the first question which appears to us to require an answer is, what was the contract between the parties? Was the defendant to pay all the expenses and outgoings of all the plaintiff's property and set off the same as against the thika rent? or was the defendant only to pay outgoings and Government demands of the thika properties and set off the same as against the thika rent payable by the defendant to the plaintiff? We are of opinion that 'yes' is the proper answer to be given to the second question and 'no' to the first, namely that the set-off as against the thika rent is only conversant with payments made by the defendant in respect of the thika properties and no other.

DILTOR KOER V. HARKHOO SINGH.

Then in the written statement an attempt is made by way of further defence to set off as against the rent due a very large sum which is claimed in very loose and ambiguous terms, and so far as it purports to be a set-off seems to be directly in violation of every rule of pleading. The defendant says: "You owe me on a general account items amounting to Rs. 18,000 and odd. I will set off as against your rent so much; it leaves you a debtor in my hands of Rs. 9,145 and, therefore, I owe you nothing, and your action for rent must be dismissed." It is impossible to tell how the claim of set-off is made out, no details are given, it is lacking in precision, and some of the items appear to have been arrived at in a very scratchy way. No one single item seems to us to be verified or vouched, nor can it be said to be ascertained, ascertained in the sense that it is beyond challenge or dispute. But the items which are claimed to be set off are items not connected with the thika property but with general disbursements made by the defendant in his capacity as the plaintiff's agent or trustee. We do not think that the various sums that are sought to be set off are in themselves what are termed in law 'ascertained sums'; nor are they within the express provisions of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure sufficiently ascertained to justify and entitle the defendant to claim a legal set-off as distinct from an equitable set-off. Dr. Bysack did not argue whether he had the right to an equitable set-off. He was very strenuous in his argument that he ought to be entitled to set off by way of rent what he claims to have paid on foot of Nowratan's decree. I do not see why that claim should be allowed at all. It is certainly not an ascertained sum in the sense that it is beyond dispute. He claims it as a definite sum; it may be, I feel sure it will be, hotly contested that the amount allowed by the Subordinate Judge is not in itself the amount for which he ought to get credit. Therefore, this item cannot be said to be ascertained; ascertained, as I have said, means beyond challenge and beyond dispute, concluded and conclusive. Well, that being so, we do not think that a right to an equitable set-off can exist in this case, because the right to equitable set-off is founded upon the condition that the set-off must arise out of the same transaction out of which the claim springs. If it is found that the set-off is foreign to the original claim, then the Courts of Equity prior to the Judicature Act in England did not allow the set-off. Here the set off springs not under the contract created by the lease of 1892, but out of a claim arising from a breach of trust, in a totally different matter under a totally different right, and in respect of totally different property. Therefore, an equitable set-off is entirely out of this case; in fact the whole of the defendant's alleged claim to set off appears to me to be more in the nature of a counter-claim than a set-off. That really disposes of the action for rent. I shall indicate in a moment the form of direction which we will give and the case must be sent back to ascertain what are the specific items for which the defendant is to have credit as against the rent due.

The next question is, was the defendant manager, agent or trustee for the plaintiff in the management of what has been referred to as the non-thika property? Dr. Bysack contends that he was not, that he was never clothed with the character of an agent, that he was never manager, and that what he did was done more or less as a matter of friendship or as a mode of paying his rent, that it never imposed any obligation or duty upon the defendant. But the Judge in this case finds as a fact that Harkhoo Singh the defendant did look after the plaintiff's sir property not as manager but as a relative. I got lost in my endeavour to find out what the learned Judge meant by that 'not as manager but as a relative.' I think, viewing the evidence in its entirety and having studied it with the greatest possible care, not only from the point of view of the plaintiff but from that of the defendant also, and having gone through every single exhibit referred to in the case, that it is obviously plain that Harkhoo Singh managed and controlled the plaintiff's property. Whether he did so for a reward payable under an express contract does not satisfactorily appear, but what is established by the evidence of the plaintiff's and defendant's witnesses is, that by his actions and conduct the defendant put himself in a fiduciary capacity towards the plaintiff in reference to the management of her non-thika property. He received the rent and profits of her property; he exercised control and domination in his relationship with the tenants, his order and mandate prevailed, and the patwaris and gomasthas in their diverse capacities acted in obedience to his direction and order. The defendant instituted rent suits on behalf of the plaintiff against the tenants, and generally conducted and controlled the course of the litigation; and if money was required demanded it for the purpose. Most significant of all, however, are the three revenue chalans of 1907 and 1909, which show payments of revenue by the defendant of the non-thika property as agent for the plaintiff. By what right, by what authority did he, the defendant, make these payments unless he had put himself in the position of manager of this lady's property, thereby acting as her trustee? However one fact can never be lost sight of in this case, that in Fasli 1311 the defendant rendered his account, having rendered antecedently five prior accounts, on the basis of his liability to account. The account was settled and the parties were satisfied, and what is asked and prayed for by way of relief in this suit is an account by the defendant for the years 1312 to 1316 Faslis that is from the settlement of the last account in 1311. Exhibit 16 (a), page 81, clearly, I think, points to an admission by the defendant of his liability to account, as also Exhibit 15 (a), page 78, and Exhibit 20 at page 85. It may be said that these Exhibits refer to a period antecedent to the period of account sued for in this action. That fact, admittedly true, is wholly immaterial, because these documents are only relied upon to establish the genesis and origin and nature of the relationship and its character existing between the plaintiff and the defendant in their dealings with the plaintiff's property. We shall not attempt to take the account or investigate its bona fides or accuracy. All we decide in these two actions is the main outstanding feature of liability—the liability for rent and the liability on the defendant's part to account.

The relationship between the defendant and the plaintiff is somewhat mixed. He was a cousin and a kinsman. She was a pardanashin lady living a considerable distance from the property in suit, and naturally she would look to the defendant, who is her kinsman and who had managed the property for her mother in her lifetime and who had managed the property for her sister, and the natural thing for her to do would be to look to the defendant to assist her in the management of her property in the way he did.

Dr. Bysack relied very strongly upon an admission made by the plaintiff's husband at page 125, line 12, of his evidence that he used to manage his wife's property. I think that an entirely erroneous importance has been attached to that admission. I think that what the plaintiff's husband meant and said was, that as between the defendant and the plaintiff he used to conduct the negotiations with the defendant on behalf of the plaintiff but that he never acted in regard to the plaintiff's property as the defendant himself did. The learned Judge who tried this case seems to have erred lamentably in his view of the law touching the defendant's liability to account, having regard to the defendant's admissions which are not denied, because it is sworn to specifically by Muneshar Lall and by the plaintiff's husband that the defendant admitted he was asked to manage the plaintiff's sir property. The learned Judge seems to have thought that to establish the defendant's liability to account as manager it was necessary, in support of the plaintiff's case, to prove or establish a contract appointing the defendant manager at a fixed salary or scale of remuneration, because he seems to imply that if a relative acts voluntarily without remuneration in the management of his kinsman's property, no question of liability to account would arise. Of course if that was the view of the learned Judge he was hopelessly wrong. No doubt a manager appointed at a salary is one thing, but it is equally certain and different that a volunteer acting in the management of another's property without remuneration becomes clothed with the character, position and capacity of a trustee, and is deemed in law a constructive trustee, and as such is undoubtedly liable and bound to account for the management of the property committed to him. The fact of the payment of a salary affords no test in determining the liability to account. Voluntary service is the foundation underlying all trusteeship, and the law precludes a trustee from making a profit or acquiring benefit from his office as trustee. Therefore, we are clearly of opinion that the Subordinate Judge erred in law in finding that the defendant was not liable to account. The Judge finds as a fact that the defendant did manage the plaintiff's property as a relative. Taking this finding of fact coupled with the evidence and documents submitted in evidence by both sides, we are clearly of opinion that the defendant occupied the position of a constructive trustee in law, and by reason thereof he has clearly to account for all moneys which he ought to have received, which he did receive, and which he disbursed in the due course and management of the property. To allow this decree to stand would be a defiance of justice and the negation of equity and good conscience. Dr. Bysack says in effect, "I will account for whatever moneys I have received." If this decree were to stand the defendant would not be called upon to account for a single penny. Dr. Bysack's own admissions show that his client is liable to account for something; he does not know to what extent. But if we hold, as we have held now, that the defendant is in the position of a manager and has been acting as a manager of this lady's property, then he must account. That he has made disbursements, I think, is beyond doubt. If he is an honest defendant he can very well discharge himself of the burden the law casts upon him, if he cannot then he must suffer.

Accordingly we think the form of the decree in this case should be as follows.

In Suit No. 49 of 1913 we decree the rent suit qua the thika properties, subject to the defendant's right to set off as against the rent due all revenue and other outgoings primarily payable by the plaintiff in respect of the same but in fact paid by the defendant during the years 1315 and 1316 Faslîs. We shall remand the case to have the defendant's claim ascertained, and direct that upon ascertainment the same should be set off as against an aliquot part of the rent due, and the plaintiff shall thereupon be entitled to a decree for the balance so found due. We shall direct this inquiry to be expedited and disposed of without delay. The plaintiff will be declared entitled to her costs of the rent suit in the lower Court, and also of this appeal and of the enquiry now directed. We decline to put any stay upon the execution of that decree for rent.

In Suit No. 159 of 1913 we shall declare the plaintiff entitled to the account claimed by her plaint for the years 1312 to 1316 Faslîs as against the defendant in respect of the property mentioned in paragraph 8 of the plaint, with liberty to the defendant to file an account by way of discharge, if so advised, of all disbursements made by him as agent, manager or trustee in respect of the said property. We shall remand the case to the Subordinate Judge to have the account taken and we shall direct him to proceed with the hearing of this matter as expeditiously as possible. The costs in the lower Court and of this appeal and of taking of the account will abide the issue of the taking of the account.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to Privy Council—Subject-matter of suit, value of—Suit for injunction and declaration—Fiscal valuation—Real value, if can be shown.

In the Bombay Presidency it is open to a plaintiff to sue in a second class Subordinate Judge's Court for a declaration and injunction, even though the immoveable property referred to or affected by the injunction exceeds the pecuniary limit of that Judge, i. e., Rs. 5,000. [p 373, col. 2.]

Therefore, a plaintiff by suing for a declaration and injunction in a second class Subordinate Judge's Court makes neither directly nor indirectly any sort of representation to the defendant as to the real or market value of the property to be affected, as distinguished from the fiscal value which, as the law allows him to do, he places upon the relief which he is seeking. [p. 373, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

BACHELOR, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the applicant being the original plaintiff in the suit. The suit was filed for a declaration that the plaintiff was the adopted son of one Nagji Vithal and for an injunction restraining interference by the defendant.

The suit was originally instituted in the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Broach. It so happened that he was the only Subordinate Judge then at Broach, and by him the suit was transferred for hearing to the second class Subordinate Judge. It was contended by Mr. Jayakar that as the trial before the second class Subordinate Judge was acquiesced in by the plaintiff, the result is the same as if the suit had been filed in the Court of the second class Subordinate Judge. That position has not been contested, and I will assume for the purposes of my judgment that this part of Mr. Jayakar's argument is unassailable.

The Trial Court found in favour of the plaintiff and that decree was confirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. But in the appeal to the High Court, which was heard by my learned brother Shah and myself, we came to another conclusion, being satisfied that there had been the exercise of undue influence by the plaintiff. Therefore, we reversed the decision of the lower Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. From that decree the plaintiff now seeks to go in appeal to the Privy Council.

The suit as instituted by the plaintiff was valued by him at the sum of Rs. 135, and this present application is met at the outset by the objection that the plaintiff cannot now be heard to say that, within the language of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal is Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The argument is that since the plaintiff himself elected to value his suit at only Rs. 135 and conducted it in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the limit of whose pecuniary jurisdiction was Rs. 5,000, he cannot now contend that the subject-matter of the suit is worth Rs. 10,000. It is urged in support of this argument that the word 'subject-matter' occurring in section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code must be used in the same sense which the expression bears in section 24 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act. This argument is based upon the decision of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beaman in Hirjibhai v. Jamshedji (1). That was a suit brought in the Court of the second class Subordinate Judge for taking accounts, and the claim was valued at Rs. 101 for the purposes of Court-fees and jurisdiction. The plaintiff, however, in applying for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, alleged that the amount or value of the subject-matter of his suit was far in excess of Rs. 10,000. The Court decided against him, and the scope of the decision is stated very clearly towards the end of Mr. Justice Beaman's judgment, where we read:—

"We are, therefore, very clearly of opinion that the proposition we began by stating is correct, and has been supported by good reasoning in the case of Golap Sundari v. Indra Kumar Hazra (2). That proposition is that the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit can in no case exceed the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which it is instituted. It follows that the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit, for the purposes of section 109, clauses (a) and (b), and section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, if that suit is instituted in a Court the pecuniary limit of whose jurisdiction is Rs. 5,000, can never be greater than Rs. 5,000."

Though the facts of the present case are in some respects different from those of the application before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Beaman, notably in this respect that whereas that was a suit for accounts, this was merely a suit for an injunction and declaration, yet I am not prepared to hold that the present application can be taken out of the scope of the decision in Hirjibhai v. Jamsheji (1), in so far as that decision interprets the words occurring in the first paragraph of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code—I mean the words ‘the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council.’ But even supposing that Mr. Jayakar is successful in bringing this part of his application within the ambit of the decision which I have quoted, it remains to consider whether the petitioner is not entitled to obtain leave to appeal under the second paragraph of section 110. For the section enacts that a petitioner is so entitled if, in the circumstances which are now before us, the decree or final order must involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of like amount or value. For the purposes of the present argument we are assuming that the property affected by our decree exceeds in value the sum of Rs. 10,000. And the argument which we have to consider is, whether upon that assumption there is anything in the past conduct of the present petitioner which should, as by a species of an estoppel, debar him from asserting and proving, if he can, that such is the value of the property affected. In my opinion there is nothing which should debar him. And in this respect the application is, I think, clearly distinguishable from the facts which were before the Court in Hirjibhai's case (1). That, as I have said, was a suit for accounts, and the plaintiff elected as his forum the Court of a Subordinate Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction was limited to Rs. 5,000. The Court, therefore, for reasons which may readily be appreciated, held the plaintiff bound by this action of his to acquiescence in the statement that the value of the subject-matter of his suit could not exceed Rs. 5,000. Here, however, our facts are otherwise. The suit was, as I have said, brought only for an injunction and a declaration. By a series of decisions of this Court, which are at present binding upon us and of which I need notice only the case of Vachhanni Keshabji v. Vachhani

Nambha (3), it is the law in this Presidency that it is open to a plaintiff to sue in a second class Subordinate Judge's Court for a declaration and injunction even though the immoveable property referred to or affected by the injunction exceeds the pecuniary limit, i. e., Rs. 5,000, of the second class Subordinate Judge's jurisdiction. That being so, the plaintiff in this case by suing in the second class Subordinate Judge's Court seems to have made neither directly nor indirectly any sort of representation to the defendant as to the real or market value of the property to be affected, as distinguished from the fiscal value which, as the law allowed him to do, he placed upon the relief which he was seeking.

Admittedly, the decision in Hirjibhai v. Jamsheji (1) proceeds upon the reasoning that a plaintiff should not be allowed to put inconsistent values upon the subject-matter of his claims at different times according to the shifting character of his interests. But if I am right in what I have already said, it will be clear that this reasoning cannot affect the present plaintiff, for the merely fiscal valuation which he put upon the injunction and declaration which he sought is wholly independent of the real or market value of the immoveable properties.

I am consequently of opinion that the decision in Hirjibhai v. Jamsheji (1) cannot be invoked so as to shut out the present plaintiff from appealing to the Privy Council, if he succeeds in proving that the condition described in the second paragraph of section 110 is in his case satisfied, that is to say, if he can succeed in proving that the decree or final order must involve directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000.

In my opinion, therefore, he must have an opportunity of proving that that is the value of the property.

As the affidavits which have been put in on both sides with reference to the question as to the value of the property are in direct conflict, we think it desirable to act under the powers given to us by Order

XLV, rule 5, of the Code. Under that rule, therefore, we refer to the Court of first instance the dispute as to the amount or value of the property which must be involved directly or indirectly by the decree or final order in this appeal. It is conceded that the Sutarel property is no part of the property in suit, which is concerned only with the property at Derol. The Court of first instance will take evidence and report on the question referred to it.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Declaratory suit—Consequential relief claimable—Suit, whether competent—Mortgage, redeemable—Suit for declaration that certain conditions were not enforceable, maintainability of.

A declaratory suit is not maintainable when the plaintiff is entitled to claim consequential relief.

Where, therefore, a mortgagor, instead of claiming possession of the mortgaged property by redemption, sues for a declaration that certain conditions of the mortgage are not enforceable, his suit must be dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 2nd November 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Jagraon, District Ludhiana, dated the 28th July 1915, decreeing the claim in part.

FACTS.—Plaintiffs executed a mortgage in favour of defendants, which provided that the mortgage-debt should carry interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum and that there should be no redemption for 50 years. Plaintiffs sued to have the mortgage declared ineffective, on the ground that the above conditions were unconscionable and unenforceable. The first Court upheld the condition postponing redemption, but declared that the rate of interest was unreasonable.

On appeal, the District Judge upheld both the conditions as valid and enforceable and dismissed plaintiffs' suit in toto. Plaintiffs appealed to the Chief Court.

Chaudhri Nabi Bakhsh, for the Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Dr. Nand Lal takes a preliminary objection that under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, the suit as framed does not lie, inasmuch as the plaintiff can claim possession of the land by redemption if his allegations are correct. The proviso to that section prohibits a declaratory decree being passed where the plaintiff can seek further relief. Mr. Nabi Bakhsh agrees that the plaintiff can claim further relief and does not object to the suit being dismissed so long as he is able to bring the redemption suit.

I, therefore, reject the appeal and leave the plaintiff to bring a suit for redemption, if so advised. Parties will bear their own costs in this appeal.

Appeal rejected.

Malicious prosecution, suit for—Illegal distraint of cattle—Damage to reputation—Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871), s. 20.

Per Curiam.—A suit for damages for malicious prosecution is not confined to criminal proceedings alone nor would such an action lie for all criminal prosecutions. The cases for which such a suit lies are those in which there is either (a) damage to a man's reputation or (b) danger to his liberty or (c) damage to his property. [p. 375, cols. 1 & 2; p. 376, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—A suit for damages for malicious prosecution under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act may lie in some cases, for though in such an accusation there may not be either danger to the liberty or damage to the property of the accused, still there may be "damage to the reputa-

Per Napier, J.—A charge of illegal distraint of cattle does not come within the mischief of the principle of damage to the reputation of the accused and no suit for damages lies. The damage to a man's reputation must be something serious, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous. [p. 376, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff impounded the defendant's cattle. Thereupon the latter complained under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. But the plaintiff was acquitted. The present suit is for damages for malicious prosecution on the ground that the defendant instituted proceedings falsely and maliciously. Both the Courts below have held that such a suit would not lie. Hence this second appeal.

It is not with reference to criminal proceedings alone that a suit for malicious prosecution lies. An action will lie for the institution of bankruptcy proceedings, for filing an ungrounded petition to wind up a Corporation, for procuring the arrest of a person even for a civil debt, and for instituting proceedings to declare a person a lunatic. See Whitworth v. Hall (1), Quartz Hill Gold Mining Company v. Eyre (2), Metro- politan Bank v. Pooley (3) and Lockenour v. Sides (4). But neither would an action of this nature lie for all criminal prosecutions. A man may be prosecuted for driving a motor car without lights, for laying down a drain in an improper manner, etc. If the prosecution fails in such cases, the prosecutor will not be held liable for malicious prosecution.

Lord Davey explained in Allen v. Flood (5) on what basis, an action for malicious prosecution rests: "In my opinion the somewhat anomalous action for malicious prosecution is based on the same principle (referring to defamation). From motives of public policy the law gives protection to persons prosecuting, even where there is no reasonable or probable cause for the prosecution. But if the person abuses his privilege for the indulgence of his personal spite, he loses the protection, and is liable to an action, not for the malice, but for the wrong done in subjecting another to the annoyance, expense, and possible loss of reputation of a causeless prosecution." This is also the view of Lord Herschell (see page 125). Sir F. Pollock in his book on Torts says that this is the true foundation of the action. According to these authorities, the gist of the action is not the prosecution, but the aspersion on character or reputation which the prosecution involves.

I shall now proceed to consider the present case in the light of the above principles. The proceedings under the Cattle Trespass Act are of a criminal nature; but no imprisonment is provided for the offence under section 20. A fine in the nature of solatium is to be levied. A complaint under section 20 is included in the definition of the term 'offence' [section 4 (o) of the Code of Criminal Procedure]. Under section 260, clause (m), it is triable summarily. Therefore all the ingredients of a criminal prosecution are to be found with reference to the complaint; but the question still remains, whether a complaint of this nature involves moral turpitude or stigma on character. In the well-known case of Quartz Hill Gold Mining Company v. Eyre (2), Brett, M. R., and Bowen, L. J., accept the dictum of Lord Holt in Savile v. Roberts (6) as practically exhausting the classes of cases for which a suit for malicious prosecution would lie. There must be in the previous proceedings either (a) damage to a man's reputation or (b) danger to his liberty or (c) damage to his property. There can be no question in this case of danger to a man's liberty. Under section 386 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, if the fine that was imposed is not paid, there may be a distress of property: see per Lord Buckley in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (7). The accused is not liable to be sent to jail. It is conceivable that clause (c) may cover this case. As Lord Justice Bowen says, as the theory is that in ordinary civil actions, the costs awarded to a successful litigant are intended to compensate him for the trouble incurred by him, there will be no action for malicious prosecution in such cases. See also per Buckley, L. J., in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (7). In the present case, no costs could have been awarded to the accused under the Cattle Trespass Act; and probably, if the claim for costs were one of the items of the claim for damages, it may be open to argument that there was probable damage to property within the dictum of Lord Holt. But, in the present case, although the claim for such costs was in the plaint, it was advisedly given up in appeal. It is not, therefore, necessary to consider this question further.

The only other ground on which the action can be sustained is that the plaintiff's reputation suffered by the complaint under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. It certainly looks as if it would be straining the language too far to say that an injury to a man's reputation has been done by accusing him of having improperly and maliciously impounded the cattle of the complainant. A great deal will depend upon the position in life of the man who has been thus accused, and upon the motive and status in life of the accuser. I am not prepared to hold that an accusation of this kind is not covered by the head of "damage to reputation". Mr. Justice Mookerjee, in C. H. Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (8) seems inclined to give an extended application to the principle.

The District Munsif in paragraph 14 of his judgment says that there has been enmity between the plaintiff and the defendant for some years. It may be that the prosecution was started with intent to harm the reputation of the plaintiff. The Munsif has, however, held that there was no malice or want of probable and reasonable cause for the complaint by the defendant. The District Judge has expressed no opinion on the facts; but the evidence has been placed before us and on reading them, (see section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure) I see no reason to differ from the conclusion of the District Munsif. I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this appeal should be dismissed and I entirely concur with him as to the principles governing suits for maliciously setting the law in motion [vide my judgment in Rama Aiyer v. Govinda Pillai (9)], but I would go rather further than he does in applying those principles to a suit for maliciously proceeding under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act. The Court of Appeal in England has, in Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (2) and Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban District Council (7), accepted the proposition that where it is based on damage to a person's reputation it must be something serious, the words of Holt, C. J., in Savile v. Roberts (6) being "as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous"; and Bowen, L. J., in Quartz Hill Gold Mining Company's case (2), at page 692, draws an analogy between such cases and spoken slander, giving as examples charges that a man has been guilty of an indictable offence which is criminal and scandalous in its character and involves the loss of liberty or fair fame. Accepting this explanation as to what is meant by damage to fair fame, I cannot regard a charge of illegal distraint of cattle as coming within the mischief of the principle.

Contract Act (IX of 1972), ss. 73, 74—Contract, breach of—Remedy of party wronged—Non-reservation of right to damages, effect of—Deposit, forfeiture of, effect of, on claim for damages.

In cases of breach of contract, parties have their right to damages under section 73 of the Indian Contract Act, and unless they expressly contract out of that right, under section 74, they are entitled to such compensation as flows from the breach. [p. 377, col. 2.]

The forfeiture of a deposit for failure to perform a contract is not affected by section 74 of the Act, though in estimating the damages, the amount forfeited may be taken into account and may go towards mitigating the claim. [p. 377, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Appeal Suit No. 100 of 1913, preferred against that of the District Munsif, Paramagudi, in Original Suit No. 782 of 1911.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Subramanian Chetty agreed to sell paddy to Ayodhia Pillai and received a deposit of Rs. 500. Ayodhia Pillai failed to perform his part of the contract and is sued for damages by Subramania. The finding is that it was Ayodhia that broke the contract. The question is whether Subramania is restricted in his claim by the amount of the deposit. The Courts below have held that he is not entitled to recover anything more.

In second appeal Mr. Venkatachariar wants to support the judgments of the Courts below by asking us to read a finding in their judgments to the effect that the parties agreed at the time of the contract that nothing more than Rs. 500 is to be recovered, in case of breach. We are unable to agree with this contention. There is no finding, as a matter of fact, that there was an agreement that the only amount payable as damages is Rs. 500. The District Judge gives as reason for refusing damages the fact that the contract contains no stipulation for damages for breach of contract. If this reasoning is to be given effect to, then in every case where the parties fail to provide for damages for breach, the offending party is not liable to pay damages.

The parties have their right to damages under section 73 of the Indian Contract Act, and unless they expressly contract out of that right under section 74 they are entitled to such compensation as flows from the breach. The decision in Allahabad Improvement Trust v. Tikandra Jang Bahadur (1) no doubt supports the respondent, but, with all respect, we are unable to follow it. In this Presidency it is now settled that the forfeiture of the deposit for failure to perform is not affected by section 74 of the Contract Act. Natesa Aiyar v. Appavu Padayachi (2). In a later case (Full Bench), Vellore Taluq Board v. Gopalasami Naidu (3) it was held that the amount forfeited may be taken into account in estimating the damages. That was also the view taken by one of us in Orr v. Chitha Chinna Yegappa Chetty (4). It follows from these rulings that the general right to damages remains unaffected by the forfeiture, although in estimating the damages the amount may go towards mitigating the claim.

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 584; 38 A. 52; 13 A. L. J. 1079.

(2) 19 Ind. Cas. 462; 38 M. 178; (1913) M. W. N. 341; 24 M. L. J. 488; 13 M. L. T. 391; 38 M. 178.

In this view, the decision of the Court below must be reversed. It has been found that Subramania suffered damage to the extent of Rs. 1,031-10-3. Deducting from this the sum of Rs. 500, Subramania is entitled to a decree for Rs. 531-10-3 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from this date from the estate of Ayodhia Pillai. He is entitled to his costs in this Court. There will be no costs in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. Act I of 1908), s. 131—Tender to Divisional Officer, whether sufficient.

The deposit required by section 131 of the Madras Estates Land Act may be tendered to the Divisional Officer, who is bound to receive it. The amount need not be paid into the sub-treasury.

Revision petition from the order of the Honorary Deputy Collector, Vizagapatam, in Sale Application No. 1466 of 1914-15, dated the 13th March 1916.

Mr. J. Janakiramayya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Desikachariar, for the Counter-Petitioner.

ORDER.—The Honorary Deputy Collector has contravened the express provisions of section 131 of the Act. The deposit was tendered to him with an application to set aside the sale within the prescribed limit of thirty days and should have been received. The applicant is not bound to deposit the sum in the sub-treasury. The rule under the Act merely says he may do so. There is a dispute as to whether the petitioner has any right or interest in the land affected by the sale, which it is necessary to determine before the sale can be cancelled. The Honorary Deputy Collector or his successor-in-office will be required to submit within one month after notice to the parties to this petition a finding on this point after taking such evidence as is necessary.

[On receipt of this order the Honorary Deputy Collector submitted the following finding:—]

* * * * *
"5. In the result, I find that the petitioner has a right and interest in the land affected by the sale, that is zeraiti land, Patta No. 15, of Kalamrajupeta of the Gajapatnagaram Tana of the Vizianagaram Estate, as its purchaser."

After receipt of the finding, the Court passed the following

FINAL ORDER.—It is clear from the finding of the Honorary Deputy Collector, which I accept that the petitioner has an interest in the land affected by the sale. The sale will be set aside, the amounts specified in section 131 (1) of the Act will be paid to the counter-petitioner, who is landholder and auction-purchaser, out of the deposit made by petitioner. The purchase-money is ordered also to be returned to the counter-petitioner under section 131 (2). The costs of this revision petition will be paid by the counter-petitioner.

injuriously affects either party to the case he can, and should, exercise his power under sections 151 and 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, to correct the mistake and amend the decree accordingly.

Application, under sections 151 and 152 of the Civil Procedure Code, for amendment of the judgment and decree passed by the Chief Court of the Punjab in Civil Appeal No. 2183 of 1914 on the 22nd February 1915 and reported as 27 Ind. Cas. 775.

Mr. Beechey, for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. Bevan Petman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—(1). [On 30th March 1912, the learned Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree for pre-emption of a site on which was a house belonging to the vendee. The decree was to the effect that plaintiff should get the site on payment of Rs. 300, that defendant should remove the house within four months, that if she failed to do so, plaintiff should have the right to pay Rs. 3,600 to defendant within one month of the default and get possession of the house and site. In April 1912, vendee-defendant appealed, asking that the decree be set aside; and that appeal was not decided until 15th June 1914, when the lower Appellate Court dismissed plaintiff's suit. On 30th September 1914, plaintiff filed a second appeal here, and I after discussing the whole case at length and concurring with the first Court in its findings on 22nd February 1915 "accepted the appeal with costs." When plaintiff attempted thereafter to execute his decree, the executing Court on 11th May 1915 held that plaintiff, who deposited Rs. 3,600 on 8th March 1915, had not complied with the terms of the decree, and that the suit stood dismissed with costs. Plaintiff has now come to this Court with this petition under sections 151 and 152, Civil Procedure Code.

(2). I think under section 151 I can and should give him relief. In accepting his appeal, knowing that he had not paid the Rs. 3,600 within five months of the original decree, I, of course, meant that he should have five months from date of my decree; in short, I intended my decree to be a reproduction of the decree of 30th March 1912, with 22nd February 1915, substituted for 30th March 1912. I can now, under section 151 aforesaid, so alter my judgment as to make this result clear and I do so hereby; and of course the decree will be amended accordingly. As plaintiff deposited Rs. 3,600 on 8th March 1915, the deposit is well within time. Plaintiff decree-holder is now at liberty to apply to the executing Court for review of its order of 11th May 1915. The parties will bear their own costs.

Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. Act I of 1908), ss. 74, 75 (6), 75 (7)—Appraisal of produce—Apportionment of varam, jurisdiction as to—Disagreement with assessors—Award, when final.

The officer deputed to make an appraisal under Madras Act I of 1908 has jurisdiction to decide the rate of 'varam' in cases of dispute. [p. 380, col. 1.]

Where the assessors accept the appraisal of the officer, but differ as to the rate of the 'varam', the award is not final under section 75 (7) and the officer can record his opinion on the rate after hearing objections. [p. 380, col. 1.]

Revision petition from the order of the District Collector, dated the 29th March 1916, in Revision Petition No. 4 of 1915.

Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Counter-petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner's main contention is that the Revenue Divisional Officer had no jurisdiction in this case.

2. The first point is that the application under section 74 is for appraisal and not for division of the produce; therefore the officer deputed to make the appraisal has no jurisdiction to decide the rate of "varam" when there is a dispute. On the other hand, it is contended by the counter-petitioner that the petition is also for division, that division of produce does not mean mere physical division, but includes a decision as to the shares payable. The object of section 75 is to divide the produce or determine the rent payable.

MANSARAM DAS v. AHAMAD HOSAIN.

The rent is payable by appraisalment of the standing crop in this case. It is incumbent on the officer deputed to determine the rent payable. See section 75 (6). Without a decision as to the rate of "varam" it is obvious that you cannot determine the rent and the provisions of the section would be futile.

3. The next contention is that inasmuch as the assessors and the officer agreed as to the appraisalment and they were only appointed to appraise and nothing more, the award was final under section 75 (7). The assessors accepted the appraisalment but differed on the rate of "varam". The award must contain a decision as to the money value of the "varam". Reading the latter portion of section 75 (6) with section 75 (7), I think it is clear that the award is final only when the assessors agree with the officer as to the award. Section 75 (5) enacts that in making his award the officer shall record and have regard to the opinions of the assessors. It does not restrict the opinions to the appraisalment.

I hold, therefore, that the Revenue Divisional Officers had jurisdiction to hear objections.

On the question of the burden of proof I see no ground for interference.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Interest on mortgage of minor's property.*

A mortgage of a minor's property executed by his certificated guardian without sanction by the District Judge can be avoided by the minor only on restoration of the benefit actually received by him under the transaction. But it is for the mortgagee to show to what extent the money raised by the mortgage was applied for the benefit of the minor's estate. [p. 381, col. 1.]

Where in a mortgage-bond executed by a certificated guardian of a minor the rate of interest was Rs. 7-8-0 with annual rests, which rate was not sanctioned by the Court nor placed before it:

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rangpur, dated the 30th June 1913.

Babus Bepin Behari Ghose and Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Appellants.

Babus Basanta Kumar Bose and Atul Chandra Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage-bond executed by defendant No. 2 on behalf of her son Monasharam Das defendant No. 1, who at the date of the mortgage was a minor. The mortgage was executed in favour of one Rahamatulla Prodhan, whose heirs the plaintiffs are. It is not denied that defendant No. 2 had executed the mortgage. But the defence was that no consideration was actually paid for the bond. It appears that defendant No. 2 was the certificated guardian of defendant No. 1 under Act VIII of 1890. She applied to the District Judge for permission to raise a loan of Rs. 2,000 on mortgage from one Hossain patwari at an interest of Rs. 1-4-0 per cent. per month. The permission was granted; but Hossain subsequently being unable to advance the loan, the defendant No. 2 again applied to the Judge for permission to raise the loan from Rahamatulla the father of the plaintiffs. This application was granted by the District Judge. Subsequently, it appears that the District Judge called upon the guardian of the minor (defendant No. 2) to state whether the mortgage had been executed or not, and on her failing to do so the Judge on the 8th March 1906 revoked the order granting permission to the guardian to execute the mortgage. The creditor Rahamatulla, it appears, had acted upon the original order of the District Judge granting permission to raise the loan from him, a copy of the order having been shown to him on behalf of the guardian. It may be observed that Rahamatulla was specifically named in the application for permission as the person in whose favour the mortgage-bond was to be executed on taking the loan from him. But although the order revoking the permission was made, no notice was given either to the said Rahamatulla or even to the guardian. The guardian denies in her written statement that any such notice had ever been given to her, and her witness, Mohesh Chandra Barman, denies that any notice was served upon her. Rahamatulla appears to have acted bona fide in advancing the loan on the mortgage without any knowledge whatever of the order revoking the permission; although the order was passed before he advanced the money. It is unnecessary, however, to decide whether the order revoking the permission is effective as against Rahamatulla.

Assuming that the order was effective, the transaction stands in the same position as if there were no sanction by the Judge to the certificated guardian. The order was merely a voidable one under section 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act at the instance of the minor, and the minor, who is now of age, can avoid the transaction only on restoration of the benefit received by him under the order. [See the cases of Eastern Mortgage and Agency Company, Limited v. Rebati Kumar (1) and Hem Chandra Sarkar v. Lalit Mohan Kar (2).] There can be no doubt that the full consideration was paid. Apart from the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs, there are two receipts executed by defendant No. 2, the guardian, which show payments of the money on certain dates, namely the 1st April 1906 and 27th June 1906. These two receipts were registered and defendant No. 2 was identified by one Mohesh, who is an uncle of defendant No. 1 and lived in the same mess with him. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the money was actually paid by Rahamatulla to the guardian.

It is contended before us that it is for the creditor to show how much of the money was actually applied for the benefit of the minor and that he cannot get any decree for more than the amount so applied. No doubt it is for the plaintiff to show to what extent the money was applied for the benefit of the minor's estate. The guardian in her application to the Judge stated that there was urgent necessity for raising a loan of Rs. 2,000 for paying off the creditors of the estate; and as we have said, there is no doubt that Rs. 2,000 were actually advanced to her by the father of the plaintiffs.

The defendants were called upon to produce account books. They produced an account book which does not appear to be the genuine book, because it does not contain any entry as to the payments of Rs. 1,200 and Rs. 800 made to the guardian in March and April 1906. But the account book produced by the defendants shows that, at any rate, a portion of the money advanced was actually applied for the benefit of the estate. The defendants withheld the real account books and having regard to all the evidence and circumstances of the case, the Court below came to the conclusion that it has been established that the entire amount had been applied to the benefit of the minor's estate. That being also our opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for Rs. 2,000 advanced on the mortgage-bond.

The only question which remains to be decided is, what is the rate of interest which ought to be allowed. The order of the Judge does not specify the rate of interest. In the application made by the guardian to the Judge for permission to raise a loan by mortgaging the property to Hossain patwari Rs. 1-4-0 was stated as the rate of interest. In the mortgage-bond executed in favour of Rahamatulla the rate of interest was Rs. 1-8-0 with annual rests. This rate of interest does not appear to have been placed before the Court, nor was it sanctioned by the Court. We are of opinion that compound interest at Rs. 1-8-0 ought not to be allowed. We think the plaintiffs should not get more than 12 per cent. simple interest. That interest is to be calculated upon the amounts advanced on the 31st March 1906, 11th April 1906 and 27th June 1906 respectively, after deducting Rs. 193 admitted by the plaintiffs to have been paid by the defendants on account of the debt.

Let a decree be made accordingly. The subsequent interest will be at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Six months will be allowed to the defendants for redemption.

The parties will pay costs in proportion in both Courts.

Decree varied.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Petitioner.

Diwan Bahadur L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Counter-petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—These are appraisement proceedings for 1324 Fasli under section 75 of the Estates Land Act. It has not been shown how the procedure was not in accordance with that section.

The main grounds on which the Board is asked to revise these proceedings are (1) that the lands concerned do not form an estate; (2) that the petitioner is not a ryot but a mokhasadar and this land is his private land; (3) that the Revenue Courts should not have entertained these proceedings when there was litigation going on in the Civil Courts regarding the title and mesne profits; (4) that the proceedings are barred under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code (res judicata) and (5) that all the land-holders should have joined in the application for appraisement.

The first objection was not made at all before the Deputy Collector but formed the ground for revision before the Collector. No reason has been satisfactorily urged before me for differing from the Collector's views. The parties must, therefore, be considered to be land-holder and ryot under the Act and the Deputy Collector has not exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. The counter-petitioners had one-third share of the village and it has been found that the Board's petitioner was bound to pay one-third of his rent to counter-petitioners. There are no grounds for revising that finding under section 205. There was no necessity under the circumstances for all the share-holders to join in the appraisement proceedings. The civil litigation involves the questions of title and mesne profits. There is no reason for postponing or not entertaining these proceedings, which are for rents payable by petitioner in his capacity as ryot and distinct from the civil litigation. The Civil Courts in settling the question of mesne profits will doubtless take into consideration, if necessary, the payment under the Deputy Collector's decree for rents. No grounds for revision have been shown. The petition will be dismissed with costs.

KAMTA v. PARBHU DAYAL.

JUDGMENT.—(1). This case is the outcome of my orders in Civil Appeal No. 2183 of 1914 [Jhanda Mal v. Sardar Begam (1)] and Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 285 of 1915 [Jhanda Mal v. Sardar Begam (2)]. In the latter order I explained why it was necessary for me so to amend my former order as to give Musammam Sardar Begam time to remove materials. I pointed out that I intended in my earlier order to substitute the date of it (22nd February 1915) for the date (30th March 1912) to be found in the first Court's decree. This order of mine was dated 24th November 1915, and I regret that I did not go on to direct that, as 22nd February 1915 was long past, and the four months' term allowed had long expired if counted from that date, I, therefore, altered the date to 24th November 1915. Musammam Sardar Begam has again come up, and I find I must give her reasonable satisfaction. Mr. Beechey on the other side objects that she is estopped, and that section 152, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply. I can find no estoppel, and I think the section is wide enough to enable me to avoid a reductio ad absurdum.

(2). But I think Mr. Beechey's clients deserve some consideration. The lady's legal advisers should have put to the Court, both on 17th February 1915 (hearing of Civil Appeal) and on 24th November 1915, exactly what was required; and one result of all this loss of time is that since 8th March 1915, Mr. Beechey's clients have been standing out of Rs. 3,600 and that there have been two miscellaneous petitions argued.

(3). I, therefore, direct that the decree be so amended that Musammam Sardar Begam may have four months from to-day to remove materials, instead of four months from 22nd February 1915, subject to the condition that on or before this day week she do deposit in executing Court Rs. 288 for Mr. Beechey's clients, this being the interest at 6 per cent. per annum on Rs. 3,600 for 13 months. I also direct that the costs of the present proceeding be paid by her in the ordinary course. Pleader's fee Rs. 25.

Petition accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 23

—Preliminary point—Decision on one issue—Remand.

In a case four issues were framed and the first Court decided an issue and finally disposed of the suit. The lower Appellate Court remanded the suit under Order XLI, rule 23:

Held, that the decision was on a preliminary point within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 23, and the suit was properly remanded. [p. 383, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 12th February 1916.

Mr. S. D. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Mr. Newal Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case four issues were framed. The Munsif decided the first issue in favour of the defendants and dismissed the suit. Now the first issue was an issue which, if decided in favour of the defendants, finally disposed of the suit. If on the other hand it was decided in favour of the plaintiffs, it left other issues undetermined, and the suit, therefore, came up to the Appellate Court in the condition that if the first issue was wrongly decided, the remaining issues had not been decided at all, and it was necessary to decide them. Having regard to the previous decisions in this Court and particularly to the decision in Mata Din v. Jamna Das (1), we think that that was a preliminary point within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 23. It is most important that on these questions of practice the decisions of the Court should be consistent. We think, therefore, that the case was a proper one for remand under that order. A further point has been suggested that the Appellate Court improperly admitted additional evidence, but there seems to be no force in that point although it was put in the forefront of the memorandum of appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8—Ejectment, suit for—Necessary parties—Co-owner, maintainability of suit by.

Where a number of persons hold a joint interest in a cause of action and where the extent of the interest of each is an unspecified interest, it is open to any one of those persons to maintain on behalf of the whole body of interested persons a suit to establish the cause of action set forth and in the event of success of that one person all persons interested will enjoy the fruits of the litigation, unless there is some specific law forbidding such a procedure.

Kanna Pisharody v. Narayanan Somayajipad, 3 M. 234, 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 718, followed.

Therefore, one of several co-owners can, on behalf of the whole body, maintain a suit for the recovery of the land against trespassers.

Second appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra, dated 27th March 1915, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Chapra, dated the 10th July 1914.

Mr. Saroshi Chandra Mitra (with him Mr. Baidya Nath Sinha), for the Appellant.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal (with him Messrs. Shambhu Saran and Anugrah Narain), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case upon the findings of fact arrived at by the lower Court, the only point on which the appeal can be argued is whether the plaintiff is entitled to sue, and if so, to what extent can he obtain relief.

The facts are that the plaintiff, and the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 who apparently have, apart from this suit, no joint interests with the plaintiff, purchased in execution of a decree the right, title and interest of one Dhanukdhari in the lands in suit. The extent to which the plaintiff was interested in this purchase is not specified in the plaint. It is mentioned only that the purchase was a joint purchase.

The lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that the plaintiff and these two defendants are entitled by virtue of an auction purchase to take possession of the whole of the lands in suit and has, therefore, made a decree in favour of the plaintiff for such possession jointly with the defendants Nos. 4 and 5. It is argued that inasmuch as the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 have not made themselves plaintiffs in the suit and have asked for no relief, it is inequitable that they should be given possession with the plaintiff. And it is further argued that since the defendants Nos. 4 and 5 cannot in equity obtain any share, it follows that the plaintiff cannot obtain any share inasmuch as he has failed to specify in the plaint the extent of his interest as separate from the interests of defendants Nos. 4 and 5. We are of opinion that in these suggestions there is no force. The principle laid down in Kanna Pisharody v. Narayanan Somayajipad(1) is one which has been universally followed in the Courts throughout India. It is that where a number of persons hold a joint interest in a cause of action and where the extent of the interest of each is an unspecified interest, it is open to any one of those persons to maintain on behalf of the whole body of interested persons a suit to establish the cause of action set forth and that in the event of success of that one person all persons interested will enjoy the fruits of the litigation, unless there is some specific law forbidding such a procedure. There is no bar to the present suit in any codified law. Under the common law the plaintiff must be held entitled to bring on behalf of the whole body of persons interested a suit for the recovery of the land upon which the principal defendants are trespassing, and the whole body of those interested participate in the fruits of his success. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Srinivas, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The Agent to the Governor, Vizagapatam, was directed by this Court in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 152 of 1909 to investigate and decide the question whether the petitioner Raghunatha Doss is the lawful mahant of Sri Balajiswami Mutt in Jaypore or not and to dispose of the application for restitution of property accordingly. The result is that we have before us a finding of the Special Assistant Agent that the said individual is the lawful mahant, an order dated 6th March 1913 of the Agent to the Governor made without hearing the parties accepting the Special Assistant Agent's finding, two written endorsements dated 12th March 1913 on petitions objecting to the Special Assistant Agent's finding and asking for a hearing, and an order dated 22nd May 1913 made after hearing both sides deciding that Raghunatha Doss was not the lawful mahant.

We are now asked under rule 20 of the Agency Rules to direct the Agent to review his last order on the ground that having once passed an order in the matter, he had no jurisdiction to review it without a fresh direction from the High Court.

There are no merits in the present application to recommend it. I have no doubt that the final order of the Government Agent, which follows the carefully considered decision of a former Government Agent Mr. H. G. Turner, is right. If the matter had come before us on appeal from the first order of the Government Agent, we should feel the necessity of directing him to pass a proper order after hearing the parties. Now that he has decided the case in a proper way, it will serve no useful purpose to again remand it. To ask us to declare in favour of his first order is in effect to ask us to prefer a worse judgment to a better upon a purely technical objection. It is an elementary principle of justice that every litigant is entitled to be heard before an order is made to his prejudice. If any authority be needed for this self-evident proposition, it will be found in the wording of Agency Rule XVIII which speaks of "the officer hearing the appeal" and in Yandamuri Jagannadham v. Yandamuri Seshachelam (1), and in Ganeswar Singh v. Ganesh Das (2) the Privy Council lay down in the latter case that the proper remedy of a party against whom an order has been made without hearing him is to apply to the same authority for a re-hearing, as was done in the present case. The first order having been passed without notice to the parties had thus no judicial value. As the whole matter is before us and the parties have been fully heard and as I am satisfied that the order appealed against is a just order, the proper course, in my opinion, is to dismiss the present application with costs.

This is sufficient to dispose of this petition, but as the question has been raised and argued at length whether the Agent acted without jurisdiction in reviewing his own order, I may state how, I think, that plea fails.

Under the Civil Procedure Code if a Court passes an order or decree without hearing one of the contesting parties, it is provided that that party may apply to the Court that passed the order to set aside its ex parte order or decree (see Order IX, rules 6, 8, 9 and 13). The procedure to be followed when an order is passed ex parte both of plaintiff and defendant is similar (see Order IX, rules 3 and 4).

Although it has been held that ex parte decrees and orders are capable of being reviewed under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code [vide Bibi Mutto v. Ilahi Begam (3) and Amir Hasan v. Ahmad Ali (4)], yet the ordinary procedure for dealing with the consequences of the non appearance of parties is distinguishable from the procedure for review of judgment and is contained in Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code.

Now the Agency Rules are silent as to the procedure to be followed by Agency Courts in the event of parties not appearing at the hearing of suits and appeals. It is only as regards the examination of witnesses that rule 13 specifically states that the rules prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code will apply. But rule 10, clause 4, invests the Agent and his Divisional Assistants with the same powers as are vested in District and Subordinate Courts respectively, subject to the modifications contained in these rules.

Where nothing appears to the contrary, it may, therefore, be reasonably assumed that a Government Agent, who takes the step that a District Court, acting as directed by the Civil Procedure Code, would take under similar circumstances, is acting legally. When the matter before the Agent is an appeal not summarily dismissed, rule 18 states positively that he "will proceed as directed by the Code of Civil Procedure". In this view, the order dated 22nd May 1913 was not ultra vires.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—Under rule 10 of the Rules framed for the Vizagapatam Agency Tracts, the Agent to the Governor has the powers of a District Court, subject to any modifications contained in the rules, and under that rule, the Agent has held that he has the power of reviewing his own order, and purports to do so in the case now under reference. For petitioner, it is contended that the Agent has no such power and secondly, that even if he has such power, his present order is wrong because it is a review of a review. I think the second objection may be disposed of briefly on the ground that the Agent has not reviewed an order passed in review. The petitions put in by counter-petitioner on 5th March 1913 and 8th March 1913 were apparently written before the order of 6th March 1913 had been received by him, and they are certainly not applications to review that order. The first is merely a petition asking for a hearing before orders are passed, and the second is a petition setting forth the objections which counter-petitioner wished to urge against the finding of the Senior Assistant Agent. There was no hearing of either petition, but the Agent summarily dismissed them on the ground that counter-petitioner was not entitled to a hearing and that orders had already been passed. As the orders were not passed on any application to review the original order, of which counter-petitioner was then unaware, they cannot be treated as orders passed in review. I think it unnecessary to deal with the more difficult question of whether the Agent has the power of review, for I agree with my learned brother that on the merits petitioner has no case. Even if I were of opinion that the Agent has no power of review and that the order under reference was passed without jurisdiction, it would be manifestly unjust to set it aside and restore the order of 6th March 1913 which was passed without hearing the parties. Both orders would have to be set aside and the whole proceedings commenced afresh. However, I do not think that this course is necessary now, for the order under reference corrects an order which had been made previously without hearing the parties. It is an elementary principle that a party is entitled to be heard before an order is passed to his prejudice and the Agent acted illegally in passing the order of 6th March 1913 without hearing either party. Even if he considered it to be an appeal, which it was not, the Agency Rules do not empower him to dismiss an appeal without allowing the appellant to be heard in support of it, although he need not summon the respondent. In a case where a Deputy Commissioner passed orders in the absence of a party who had died, and subsequently reviewed his order, it was held by the Privy Council that he was right and Lord Shaw remarked: "Quite apart from section 151, any Court might have rightly considered itself to possess an inherent power to rectify the mistake which had been inadvertently made," Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (5). When a party can have a mistake corrected by the Court which made the mistake, he should adopt that course rather than resort to the Appellate Court [vide Vint v. Hudspeth (6) and Ganeswar Singh v. Ganesh Das (2)]. In this view as the whole case is open before us, I agree that we should not interfere in a case where an initial injustice has been corrected and substantial justice done.

Petition dismissed.

Mr. K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 708 of 1916 is an application to review our judgment in Second Appeal No. 92 of 1914,* as it proceeded on the basis that the suit to set aside, among other things, the Court auction-sale of item No. 13 (at which the 15th defendant became the purchaser of that item) was brought more than a year after that sale and was, therefore, barred by Article 12 of the Limitation Act. It is not now disputed that we were in error in having entertained the opinion that the suit was brought after an interval of more than one year from the date of the confirmation of the sale of item No. 13.

It is, however, argued for 15th defendant's legal representatives (the appellants) that the sale should not be set aside as the 15th defendant was a bona fide purchaser at the Court auction without notice of the irregularities relied on by the plaintiff. A third party who is the bona fide purchaser at a Court auction-sale is no doubt protected where the decree, in execution of which the sale was held, was passed by a Court having jurisdiction, though the decree was vitiated by illegality or was afterwards set aside. But irregularity in the conduct of the sale itself which vitiated it could be urged against the Court auction-purchaser also in proper proceedings by way either of application or of suit taken within the period fixed by law and the observations in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (1), Krishna Chandra Mandal v. Jagendra Narain Roy (2) and Malkarjun v. Narahari (3), relied on by the appellants' learned Vakil [See also Satis Chandra Ghose v. Rameswari Dasi (4)] have no bearing on the question before us. The question for decision in those cases was whether sales in execution held under decrees afterwards reversed were valid. We think that we are bound by the Privy Council decisions in Malkarjun v. Narhari (3) and Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (5) to hold that a Court auction-sale held without notice to the judgment-debtor whose interests were to be directly affected by the sale (as in the present case), without notice to a major judgment-debtor who was wrongly treated as a minor, is vitiated by such a grave and material irregularity that the judgment-debtor is entitled to bring a suit to set aside the sale on that sole ground, unless the defendant pleads facts which raise valid defences to the claim of the plaintiff which is, prima facie, a sustainable claim. One of such defences is indicated by the decision in Ramachari v. Duraisami Pillai (6), namely, that the plaintiff, knowing of the proceedings before the sale actually took place, allowed another judgment-debtor to represent him in the execution proceedings, wilfully kept in the background and allowed the sale to proceed, when he could have stopped it by pointing out the irregularity to the Court at once.

If the decision in Ramachari v. Duraisami Pillai (6) intended to lay down that the plaintiff in such a suit ought to allege in the plaint not only that no notice was served on him through Court as required by law but that even otherwise he had no notice of the sale proceedings, we respectfully dissent from such a view. But we are not at all clear that the learned Judges intended to go so far as to lay down such a proposition.

The observations of the Privy Council found at page 348 of the decision in Malkarjun v. Narhari (3), which was decided later than the case of Ramachari v. Duraisami Pillai (6), seem to imply clearly that it was for the Court-purchaser to set up any appropriate defences when the plaintiff has made the only necessary allegation in his plaint, namely, that no notice through Court as required by law was issued to and served on him.

We are finally asked to send down for finding an issue as to whether the plaintiff had notice of the sale proceedings otherwise than through Court and whether he is estopped by his conduct from relying on the material irregularity in the sale proceedings.

We think that the 15th defendant not having raised that defence in his written statement, it would be inadvisable to allow him to raise it at this late stage and we, therefore, refuse it to be so raised.

In the result the Second Appeal No. 92 of 1914 is dismissed with the plaintiff's costs incurred by him in this Court, including the costs of the Review Petition, Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 708 of 1916.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. IX, r. 13—

Decree, ex parte, application to set aside—Minor—Guardian ad litem, father, whether proper—Hindu Law—Joint-family.

A father is fully competent to be the guardian ad litem of his minor son and to protect his interests. [p. 390, col. 1.]

A mortgagee sued his mortgagors, members of a joint Hindu family one of whom was a minor, on the mortgage. The minor's father, who was himself a defendant, was appointed guardian ad litem of his son, but he failed to put in any defence and an ex parte decree was passed against the minor. The latter applied to set aside the decree:

Held, that the minor was fully represented in the case by his father, and that the decree was, therefore, binding on him. [p. 391, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Patna, dated the 22nd February 1915.

Messrs. Ganesh Dutta Singh and Shivnandan Rai, for the Appellant.

Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—Nathuni Prasad is the maternal uncle of the present appellant. Jadunandan Prasad Singh, the grandfather, and Ram Das Singh the father of the appellant and the appellant himself are members of a joint Hindu family. The grandfather as karta of the family made a mortgage charging the family property with payment of money, and it is alleged that the debt so contracted was for a family necessity. The mortgagees under the mortgage instituted a suit on the 26th April 1909 to realise the amount of their mortgage-debt. The defendants to that suit were Jadunandan Prasad Singh the grandfather, Ram Das Singh his son, the present appellant and the defendant No. 4, who appears to be a subsequent purchaser of this property. At the date of the institution of the suit the appellant was a minor. Neither the grandfather nor any member of the joint family contested the suit. The suit was contested only by defendant No. 4. The appellant being a minor at the time, his father Ram Das Singh was on the 25th of May 1909 appointed guardian of his minor son, and on the 31st May 1909 Ram Das filed a petition on behalf of his father, himself, and as guardian of his son for time to file a written statement in answer to the claim of the mortgagees on foot of the mortgage-bond. No written statement was filed by any of these three persons, and as against them the suit proceeded and was decreed ex parte on the 30th August 1909. The present appellant on the 2nd February 1915 made an application to have the decree of the 30th August 1909 set aside on the following grounds, (1) that he had no notice of the proceedings incidental to that decree, (2) that he was not properly represented in the suit, and (3) that his interests were not properly looked after. He alleged that he had been living since the death of his mother in 1904 with his maternal uncle and that at the time when the process was served upon his father, he was not an inmate of his father's house, and that he received no notice of any kind whatsoever affecting him with knowledge of the proceedings in the mortgage suit. The learned Judge finds that that story is an entire concoction, that the appellant was not living with his maternal uncle, but that he was living in the house of his father, and that he was affected with notice of the proceedings. On the second point it was suggested that he was not properly represented. We entirely disagree with that contention. The appellant's father was appointed his guardian and he was fully competent to be the guardian ad litem of his son, and as such he was properly appointed and could have afforded the son in the course of the litigation every protection, if indeed he had any defence to the action at all.

Thirdly it is alleged that the interests of the minor were not looked after. As to this there is no evidence whatsoever before us which would justify us in arriving at the affirmative conclusion that the minor's interests at the time had been disregarded.

The present application is made under Order IX, rule 13. It is specific in its terms and it enables a person to apply to set aside an ex parte decree if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. Admittedly the appellant was not able to satisfy the Court that the summons was not duly served. We entirely agree with the finding of fact on that point arrived at by the learned Judge.

It remains to consider whether any sufficient cause was alleged or proved for the minor not appearing when the suit was called on for hearing. We have listened very attentively to the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellant, but he has utterly failed to convince us that any cause was shown or that proof of any cause was given to the learned Judge to show or to excuse the non-appearance of the minor appellant by his guardian at the trial. There is no affidavit or evidence given by the father or by the grandfather. It is suggested that the guardian either disregarded his duty or if he did not disregard his duty, that probably he may have been purchased off by the mortgagees from filing his defence to resist their claim. This is a matter of speculation and no evidence having been given to justify these allegations, we do not think that we would be justified in acceding to this application, and accordingly we dismiss the application with costs measured at one gold mohur.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 77 (3), as amended by Punjab Act III of 1912, scope of—Revenue Court, question exclusively triable by—Procedure—Civil Courts, duty of.

Where, in a case cognizable by a Civil Court, the question was whether defendants were occupancy tenants of the land in dispute:

Held, that the matter was one which could, under section 77 (3) of the Tenancy Act, be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, and that the Civil Court trying the suit should have returned the plaint for presentation to the Collector in accordance with the provisions of Act III of 1912. [p. 391, col. 1.]

Petition for revision, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 25th May 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd class, Zira, District Ferozepore, dated the 9th April 1915, and remanding the case for trial according to law.

Mr. Daulat Ram, for the Petitioners.

CHIRUNJI LAL v. AJODHIA PRASAD.

Lala Shaukat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Senior Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the suit as laid was one cognizable by a Civil Court; but he has ignored the proviso to sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, which was added by Punjab Act III of 1912. That proviso runs as follows:

"1. Where in a suit cognizable by and instituted in a Civil Court it becomes necessary to decide any matter which can under this sub-section be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court, the Civil Court shall endorse upon the plaint the nature of the matter for decision and the particulars required by Order VII, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, and return the plaint for presentation to the Collector."

In the present case the principal plea urged by the defendants was that they were occupancy tenants of the land on which the trees in dispute stood, and that as such they had a right to cut those trees. The question whether the defendants were occupancy tenants or not of the land on which the trees stood is a matter which can, under sub-section (3) of section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, be heard and determined only by a Revenue Court; therefore, the proviso to sub-section (3) applies to this case, and the Munsif who heard the suit should have proceeded in accordance with the directions contained in the first paragraph of the said proviso. Fakiria v. Dhani Nath (1) which has been followed by the Senior Subordinate Judge and the Full Bench decision of this Court, Haji Muhammad Bakhsh v. Bhagwan Das (2), have been rendered obsolete by the enactment of the proviso to sub-section (3) of section 77, to which reference has been made above.

I accept this revision and setting aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge send the case back to the Munsif with a direction that the provisions of the first clause of the proviso aforesaid be complied with. The parties will pay their own costs in this Court.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Appeal—Application for adjudication dismissed—order for.

In an appeal by a debtor against an order of an Insolvency Court dismissing his application for adjudication, notice of the appeal should be given to a substantial number of creditors to enable them to represent their interests as respondents. [p. 392, col. 1.]

An Insolvency Court has inherent power to refuse an application for adjudication by a debtor when it is satisfied that it will result in no benefit to anybody and is an abuse of the process of the Court. [p. 392, col. 2; p. 393, col. 1.]

Where there are considerable debts and also certain assets which can be administered and a dividend paid to all the creditors, it is contrary to the policy of the Provincial Insolvency Act to refuse adjudication. [p. 393, col. 2.]

The fact that a debtor, who is otherwise within the provisions of the Insolvency Act which renders an adjudication against him possible, is also a dishonest man, is not a reason for refusing an order of adjudication; but where fraudulent conduct is disclosed, such as that the debtor was carrying on a dishonest business to obtain some material benefit for himself through the machinery of the Insolvency Court, the Court must take it into serious account when the time arrives for him to apply for his discharge. JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This case is by no means easy to deal with and raises several questions of some importance. Not for the first time in this Court within my short experience questions are raised which show what, I think, has been recognised for some time by the legal profession, that there is a real necessity for a rigorous amendment of the existing insolvency law in these Provinces. It is a question of some public importance which calls for the attention of the Government. Now there was one preliminary question, which it is desirable to dispose of which was mentioned by Dr. Sundar Lal on behalf of the appellant at the opening of the appeal, namely, where the debtor has petitioned on his own behalf for an order of adjudication and his petition has been dismissed and he desires to appeal, whom he ought to make parties as respondents to his appeal. There is no provision in the Act dealing specifically with the matter. If there was a Receiver, then in the rare event of a debtor appealing from an order of an Insolvency Court, the proper person to make respondent would be the Receiver, but ex hypothesi there can be no Receiver, inasmuch as the appointment of a Receiver depends upon the adjudication. In this particular case there was an interim Receiver who had been appointed before the hearing of the petition and whose appointment was continued for the purposes of convenience, when it was known that the order of dismissal would be taken to the Court of Appeal. We are disposed to agree with Dr. Sundar Lal that that order, although a very natural and convenient one to make, was a nullity if anybody had chosen to call it in question and, therefore, the present appellant was well advised under the circumstances in not making the interim Receiver a party to the appeal. The persons really interested in the discussion before us were the general body of creditors and without attempting to lay down a rule of universal application, we think that the better practice in such cases is to do what has been done in this case or even less than what has been done in this case, to give notice to a substantial number of creditors of the proposed appeal, so as to enable them to represent their interests as respondents. Now the grounds upon which the learned Judge has dismissed the application may be summarised as follows:—

CHIRUNJI LAL v. AJODHIA PRASAD.

(1) It is alleged, and the Judge appears to have held, that one, if not more, of the applicants (there are in fact three applicants for insolvency) had supplied his mother with funds. What precise branch of the criminal law that act is supposed to constitute a breach of, we do not for the moment appreciate, but if it be the fact, then the money which could not otherwise be recovered from the mother, might be recovered by the Receiver under the Insolvency Act. That ground appears to us, so far from being a ground for refusing an adjudication in bankruptcy, to be rather a reason in favour of making the order.

The second ground is that the insolvent has deliberately incurred liabilities and committed various frauds in the course of doing so. The fact that a debtor, who is otherwise within the provisions of the Insolvency Act which renders an adjudication against him possible, is also a dishonest man, does not seem to us to be a reason for refusing an order of adjudication. Conduct of that kind can be dealt with either independently of, or through the machinery of, the Insolvency Act, and if he has committed any offence, he can be dealt with for it, whether he is made an insolvent or not.

The third ground is that he appears to have collected funds while proceedings in insolvency were contemplated, and not to have accounted for them. The observations we have made about the second ground apply equally to the third ground. It, therefore, appears to us that the three grounds upon which the learned Judge proceeded are not grounds recognised by law for refusing an adjudication. The respondents, however, have, in addition to the specific matters relied upon by the learned Judge in the Court below, put forward other arguments of a somewhat similar character. It is safe to say that none of them amount to an allegation of what is known as an abuse of the process of the Court or really do any more than aggravate the allegation made against the debtor at the hearing. It is perfectly true that it is open to an Insolvency Court, (we think it is generally recognised that the principles which regulate the administration of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883 in England are applicable to the Provincial Insolvency Act), and according to the English authorities it is quite clear that there is an inherent power in the Insolvency Court, to refuse an application by a debtor when it is satisfied that it will result in no benefit to anybody and is an abuse of the process of the Court. Before pointing out shortly the illustrations of that principle, because as Dr. Sundar Lal has rightly pointed out, it is very easy to use vague language and take it out of one context and apply it to another, and it is, of course, a dangerous method of interpretation it is important in this case to point out two things. First, owing to the nature of the resistance offered to the debtor's application and to the way in which the Judge has treated the case, there are certain findings of fact in the judgment before us of an undoubtedly embarrassing character to the appellant. We have not dealt with these findings of fact in any way and they must be regarded as immaterial, or if I may use the term ultra vires, in the judgment of the Court below inasmuch as they do not constitute, in our opinion, legal grounds for the order that was made and, therefore, any future proceedings which may be taken upon the facts and admissions of the debtor in the evidence of the Court below must be taken wholly and entirely without regard to any findings arrived at in the judgment now under review. Secondly, if it be true that the debtor, or the three debtors, are really fraudulent persons, who have been carrying on a dishonest business and hope to obtain some material benefit for themselves through the machinery of the Insolvency Court: such as for example payment of a dividend of their debts instead of payment in full, and obtaining a speedy discharge and starting a fresh career at an early date, it must be clearly understood that all these matters of the conduct of the debtors in the insolvency proceedings are matters which ought seriously to be taken into account when the time arrives for the appellants to apply for their discharge. It only remains to point out that we see nothing in what we are deciding which is inconsistent with the principle which has already been recognised by a Full Bench decision of this Court and which is reported as Tirloki Nath v. Badri Das (1) and which is consistent with the practice in England. But it should be recognised that the grounds upon which the Court has refused to interfere either at the instance of a creditor or at the instance of a debtor are limited. It is impossible to state them in the form of a general proposition, but two or three cases may at any rate be mentioned by way of illustration. In the case of Ex parte Painter, In re Painter (2), where a debtor who was possessed of a pension which he could not alienate and whose assets were only £12, filed his petition in order to evade a judgment summons; he was practically the only creditor, it was held that this was not an abuse of the process of the Court. Now the only conceivable object of the debtor in that case was to evade arrest, because he had a pension which bankruptcy could not effect and which enabled him to pay his creditors if he pleased, and although he had only £12 assets in addition to the pension, which would have enabled him to pay his debts in order to evade arrest, he petitioned the Bankruptcy Court, and there is a later case, In re Hancock, Hillearys, Ex parte (3), the facts of which (it is not necessary to refer to them in detail) were that the debtor had a very small income and there was practically no hope of anything for the creditors beyond his personal earnings and he wanted to evade committal which is, of course, the same thing as arrest; the Court of Appeal held that that also was not an abuse of the process of the Court. In this case there are very considerable debts and apparently, though that is not certain, considerable assets. At any rate there are a number of creditors, and it seems to us, at any rate so long as the existing Act is in force, administering that Act according to the recognised principles of law, that it would be contrary to the policy of that Act to refuse the adjudication in this case which will enable the assets to be administered and a dividend to be paid to all the creditors.

Under these circumstances the appeal must be allowed and we make the order which ought to have been made by the learned Judge, that is to say, we adjudicate the three appellants insolvent under the petition

We certainly think there are many grave circumstances appearing in the findings in this case which demand immediate action on the part of the Receiver. The Court should immediately appoint, if it can, a competent and responsible Receiver to enquire into the circumstances and to take steps under section 36 or any other section applicable to the facts, assuming there is a prima facie case. If no Receiver is appointed, then we think this is a case in which the District Judge, who will have to act as Receiver, should lose no time, although we recognise that he has very little time for such work, investigating the circumstances and instituting proceedings. It must be taken that we form no opinion whatever upon the merits or otherwise of such proceedings.

Prima facie land situate within the ambit of a zamindari must be deemed to be ryoti land unless the zamindar shows it is private land. [p. 394, col. 2.]

A claim for rent in respect of land in an 'estate' is cognizable by the Revenue and not by the Civil Courts; unless the plaintiff sets forth particulars taking it out of the cognizance of the former. [p. 395, col. 1.]

A claim is not exempted from the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts simply because it arises out of an ijara lease. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Clause 6 of section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act applies only to the case of a middleman taking an ijara and not where a ryot himself claims an ijara of his holding. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1902, praying the High Court to revise the order and judgment of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna, at Ellore, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 21 of 1910, (Original Suit No. 346 of 1910 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanuku).

Mr. P. Nagabhushanam, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. B. N. Sarma, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in revision is whether the suit is cognizable by a Revenue Court or by a Civil Court. The District Munsif before whom this and a number of connected suits were tried, was of opinion that the matter came within the jurisdiction of the Deputy Collector. There was an appeal against that. Mr. Nagabhushanam has preferred this civil revision petition to this Court against the appellate order. He contends that the proper tribunal is the Civil Court and not the Revenue Court.

One circumstance may be mentioned which, to my mind, is practically conclusive of this matter, and it is this. In the connected suits disposed of along with this by the Munsif there was a civil revision petition to this Court, No. 853 of 1910, and others. In those petitions Mr. Justice Phillips was of opinion that the order of the District Munsif was right and that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction. That decision was taken up in appeal to two Judges of this Court in Letters Patent Appeal and the decision of Mr. Justice Phillips was confirmed. If I interfere now, the result of it will be that in the same batch of suits tried by the same District Munsif, one of them will have to be tried by the Revenue Court and the others by the Civil Courts. The question is whether this anomalous state of affairs is really necessary having regard to the facts of this case. Prima facie a land within the ambit of the zamindari must be deemed to be ryoti land, unless the zamindar shows that it is private land. There is no allegation in the plaint in this suit as regards the nature of the land, whether it is ryoti or private land. Nor is there any allegation that the land is zamindari land,

BIJAI NARAIN SINGH v. PARBHU NARAIN SINGH.

Under these circumstances prima facie the presumption is that this land being in an estate and the claim being one for rent, the suit lies in the Revenue Courts.

Mr. Nagabhushanam's contention is that there is an ijara lease in respect of this land and other lands and that fact takes away the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts. He has not been able to cite before me any authority for the proposition that where there is a ryoti land and the suit is for rent, the proper forum is the Civil Court and not the Revenue Court simply because the claim for rent arises out of an ijara lease. He mainly relied upon clause 6 of section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act, which lays down that "a person holding land as an ijaradar or farmer of the rent shall not, while so holding, acquire otherwise than by inheritance or devise a right of occupancy in any land comprised in the ijara or farm."

I have very little hesitation in holding that this applies only to middlemen, who are a very well known class of persons and whose existence is recognized by a number of decisions in this Presidency. Where a middleman takes an ijara he does not acquire the occupancy right of a ryot. That is the class of cases contemplated by this clause 6 of section 6, and not cases where the ryot himself claims an ijara of his holding. Mr. Nagabhushanam drew my attention to the decision of two learned Judges of this Court in Tallapragada Subba Row v. Gopiseti Narayanaswami Naidu (1). One of them Mr. Justice Napier seems to dissent from the view taken in the Letters Patent Appeal against the decision in the connected suits. From a perusal of that judgment it seems to me that the learned Judge there was considering the question of middlemen, not that of ryots, because he says in one portion of his judgment that the person was not a "ryot". That makes all the difference between the two classes of cases. As regards the question of the correctness of the decision in the Letters Patent Appeal referred to, with all deference I am unable to see how, if Mr. Justice Napier holds that the person against whom rent is claimed was not a "ryot", the question of the correctness of the decision in the Letters Patent Appeal really arose. I am mainly influenced by this consideration, namely, that the learned Judges in the connected batch of petitions in this Court have held that it is the Revenue Courts which should try the suits: and I do not think that any object will be gained by a trial of these suits before a Civil Court. Moreover, all the questions that Mr. Nagabhushanam wants to raise, viz., question regarding the land not being a "ryoti land," etc.—all these questions can be gone into in the Revenue Court.

For these reasons I am of opinion that there is no substance in this petition.

The petition must be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 3rd February 1915.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gokal Prasad and Beni Madho Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arose are stated very clearly in the elaborate and well-reasoned judgment of the learned District Judge. I need not detail them. It is sufficient to note the points put forward by the learned Counsel for the appellants. These points are that the contents of the kabuliyat dated the 4th of September 1879 are not admissible in evidence, that even if they are admissible in evidence they do not prove that Bishesar Singh was a tenant of the plaintiff-respondent and that in any circumstance after the expiration of the term fixed by the kabuliyat, Bishesar Singh and his successors became trespassers whose adverse possession has ripened into full proprietorship after a lapse of more than twelve consecutive years. There was a fourth ground taken in appeal, but that was abandoned in argument. As to the admissibility in evidence of the contents of the kabuliyat the learned Counsel has taken me through a series of decisions of this Court with reference to this point. These are Nand Lal v. Hanuman Das (1), Kashi Gir v. Jogendro Nath Ghose (2), Sikandar v. Bahadur (3). There is also a decision on a similar point in Beni v. Pura Das (4). It would appear that the correctness of the view taken in the first three decisions which I have mentioned was challenged and that the point was argued before a Full Bench in the case of Sheo Karan Singh v. Parbhu Narain Singh (5). The Full Bench did not, however, determine the point and so far as I am concerned, I am bound by the decisions in question. These decisions do not, however, in my opinion, assist the case for the appellants. They nowhere state that the contents of a registered kabuliyat cannot be admitted in evidence to prove the obligations undertaken by the executant or to prove the relationship between the parties. What these decisions simply lay down is that where there is a kabuliyat but no lease, the executant of the kabuliyat cannot utilise the contents of that document against the owner of the land for his own benefit. But the owner of the land can clearly utilise the contents of the kabuliyat to prove what the executant of the kabuliyat has undertaken to do. The plaintiff-respondent is, therefore, entitled to show from the contents of this kabuliyat that Bishesar Singh not only asserted no title contrary to that of the plaintiff-respondent, but that Bishesar Singh admitted himself to be a tenant under the terms of this document itself. He is entitled to utilise it in this way, and an examination of the contents can only show that Bishesar Singh recognised the plaintiff-respondent as holding a superior title in the land in question and agreed to pay rent for that land by abstaining to collect from the plaintiff-respondent an equal amount which the latter owed him in another connection. The period of this kabuliyat expired in 1295 Fasli. The learned Counsel, for the appellants, argues that when the period of the kabuliyat expired Bishesar Singh must be taken to have been in adverse possession. How does the case stand? Bishesar Singh was certainly not in adverse possession so long as the kabuliyat was in force. When the period of the kabuliyat expired he continued to retain physical possession as he retained it before. He did not pay rent to the plaintiff-respondent; he never had done so; but he is not shown to have collected from the plaintiff-respondent the amount the plaintiff owed to him. Therefore, it can only be taken that the rent due with regard to this land was set off between the parties against the amount due from the plaintiff-respondent. In these circumstances can any question of adverse possession arise, specially when the relationship between the parties is considered? The plaintiff-respondent was first entitled to the revenue accruing from this land. Bishesar was the zemindar. The plaintiff-respondent, however, had purchased the rights of a tenant at fixed rates. After the recognition of the plaintiff-respondent as a Ruling Chief the right to receive the revenue vested in the British Government. The plaintiff-respondent became the zemindar, the appellants became under-proprietors and the plaintiff-respondent continued to be recognised as a tenant at fixed rate. In these circumstances, how can there be adverse possession? It may also be taken that when possession is non-adverse in its inception, it is necessary to prove some overt act of adverse possession before adverse possession can be deemed to exist. Here there is no overt act. I have been referred by the learned Counsel for the appellants as an authority for a view to the contrary, for which he argued with great skill, to the decision in Pusa Mal v. Makdum Bakhsh (6). But not only were the facts of that case considerably different from the facts of the present case, but that decision was passed before the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musammatt Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (7), which was followed by a Bench of this Court in the later case of Ganpat Rai v. Multan (8). I, therefore, hold that the appellants have acquired no title by adverse possession. This disposes of all the points raised. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeals dismissed.

DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 14, s. 47—Compromise decree—Mortgage—Execution—Mortgaged property, whether can be sold in execution.

In a suit for recovery of money due on a hand-note a compromise was effected in the following terms:—

"Till the realization of the entire decretal amount with costs and interest, the defendants have given as security the under-mentioned property for which a separate registered bond has been executed....In default of one instalment the petitioner shall be bound to pay the entire amount of the decree with costs and interest, etc. The plaintiffs shall be entitled to realize their dues on all the instalments, firstly, from property given in security and afterwards...from the petitioners' persons and other properties."

A decree was passed in terms of the compromise:

Held, that by virtue of Order XXXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, the property given in security could not be sold in execution of the consent decree. [p. 398, col. 2; p. 399, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Parganas, dated the 10th April 1916, confirming that of the Sub-Judge, Godda, dated the 31st January 1916.

Mr. Saroshi Chandra Mitra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nares Chandra Saha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD J.—This appeal arises out of an order of the Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Parganas, dated 10th April 1916, confirming an order of the Subordinate Judge, dated 31st January 1916, directing the execution of a decree obtained by the respondents on the 20th December 1911, and the sale of property in execution thereof. The respondents had brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to enforce their claim in respect of money due from the appellants on a hand-note. On 18th November 1911 during the pendency of the suit, the appellants executed a registered mortgage-bond in favour of the respondents, pledging the property now pursued as security for the repayment of the debt. On 20th December 1911 the parties filed a petition of compromise, the terms of which were based upon the terms of this mortgage-bond. It was agreed that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents against the defendant-appellant for Rs. 4,000, principal and interest. The decretal amount was to be paid by instalments set forth in the petition of compromise. The property which has in the present proceedings been advertised for sale was pledged as security for the payment of the instalments. Paragraph 4 of the compromise petition recites as follows:—

"Till the realization of the entire decretal amount with costs and interest the defendants have given in security the under-mentioned property, for which separate registered bond dated 18th November 1911 has been executed which is filed herewith for the perusal of the Court. We hereby promise that in default of one instalment your petitioners shall be bound to pay the entire amount of the decree with costs and interest, etc., till the date of realization. The plaintiffs shall be entitled to realise their dues on all the instalments, firstly, from property given in security and afterwards in case of the property not being sufficient from your petitioners' persons and other properties. But if the first two instalments are paid on the dates fixed, then in case of the default in the other kist the plaintiff will realise that kist alone with interest."

On 20th December 1911 the Court passed a decree in favour of the respondents for the sum agreed upon between the parties in terms of the compromise petition. No instalment due on the compromise petition was paid and the decree-holders-respondents applied for the execution of the decree for the entire sum due to them by attachment and sale of the property pledged as security in the consent decree. Both the Courts below have allowed the execution to proceed, directing the attachment and sale of the property. The judgment-debtors have appealed to this Court. The sole question is, whether the decree as it stands can be executed and the property pledged in security can be attached and sold in execution of the decree or the respondents should bring a separate suit and obtain a proper mortgage decree.

The Courts below have proceeded on the assumption that there was a condition in the decree that the decretal amount was, in case of default, to be realised by attachment and sale of the property in question. I, however, do not find any clear direction either in the compromise petition or in the decree that in default of payment of the instalments the decree-holder is entitled in execution of the decree to attach or sell the property in question. Paragraph 4 of the petition of compromise quoted above in extenso will show that the property in question is only offered as a security for the payment of the instalments in the terms of the mortgage-bond of 18th November 1911.

The parties compromised the suit on the basis of a separate mortgage-bond already executed by the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder cannot proceed against the property unless he brings a proper suit on the basis of the mortgage-bond. The ruling reported as Shyam Sundar Lal v. Bajpai Jainarayan (1) does not apply to this case, as the decree-holder in that case was not the mortgagee and the security bond for the due performance of the decree was given by the defendant in favour of the Court by its order under section 545 of the then Code of Civil Procedure. The ruling clearly says that "if he (decree-holder) be such a mortgagee, no doubt he cannot sell the properties comprised in the mortgage without obtaining in the first instance a decree under the provisions of section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act." In this case the decree-holder is a mortgagee under the mortgage-bond. The ruling reported as Abhoyesury Debee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday (2) clearly applies to this case, as there is no direction in the consent decree or in the compromise petition for the sale of the property. This view is supported by Kissory Lal Chowdhury v. Raja Seebur Begla (3), where it is observed at page 790* that "if the consent decree had not contained a direction that the property charged should be sold for non-payment, this application would have failed on the authority of Aubhoyessury Debee v. Gouri Sunkur Panday (2). Had that decree fallen short of declaring that sale should take place under certain contingencies, it is clear that a separate suit should have been necessary".

The respondents are, therefore, not entitled to attach and sell the property in question in execution of the decree and the order of the District Judge is bad and should be set aside.

The appeal is allowed with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree. The mortgage being prior to the compromise decree, the debt arises out of the mortgage. Therefore under Order XXIV, rule 14, the mortgaged property cannot be sold.

The plaintiff-respondent must institute a regular suit for the realization of the amount due to him.

The appeal is decreed with costs. Hearing fee five (5) gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

A party applying for review of judgment on the ground of discovery of a document not produced at the trial is required, under rule 4 of Order XLVII, to furnish strict proof of the non-availability of the document at the time of the trial or to satisfy the Court that its non-production was not due to any lack of diligence on his part. [p. 400, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 4th September 1914.

Mr. Wallach, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hamilton and Moti Lal Nehru, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are connected and may be disposed of by the same judgment. The facts are as follows:—

The parties are co-sharers in the village of Padri Mahdeo Buzurg. The appellant here, Kariya Mahto, is the owner of a plot No. 627/3 in this village and adjacent to it is another plot No. 627/4, the property of the respondents Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad.

The parties are at variance regarding the boundary line between these two plots and in the year 1913 they brought cross-suits against each other.

In one suit No. 526 of 1913, Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad were the plaintiffs. Their case was that Kariya had encroached upon a portion of their plot No. 627/4 and included it in his plot No. 627/3. In the other suit No. 622 of 1913, Kariya was the plaintiff and his story was that Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad had taken away a portion of his plot No. 627/3 and included it in their plot No. 627/4.

Suit No. 526 of 1913 was tried first and Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad won it. They got a decree on the 10th September 1913.

Kariya appealed and won the appeal, with the result that by its order of the 25th February 1914 the Appellate Court directed that the suit No. 526 of 1913 should be dismissed.

Meantime the suit in which Kariya was plaintiff was still pending. When he won his appeal he produced a copy of the appellate judgment before the Munsif and got a decree in his case No. 622 of 1913.

The opposite party filed an appeal and they also filed an application for review of the appellate judgment dated the 25th February 1914. Both of these came before another Judge than the one who had tried the appeal. He allowed the application for review and reversed the appellate order passed by his predecessor and acting upon the additional evidence which he permitted to be produced before him, he decreed the appeal of Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad. The present position, therefore, is that Kariya has been defeated in both suits.

He has filed two appeals here. No. 1809 of 1914 is directed against the order allowing review of judgment. No. 94 of 1915 is against the appellate order allowing the appeal of Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad by which Kariya's suit (No. 622 of 1913) has been dismissed.

In the first of these appeals it is argued that the Court below improperly admitted the application for review and, in my opinion, the argument must prevail. It is only necessary to refer to the terms of the application for review dated the 31st March 1914 to show that there was no case for review at all. The following grounds were set out in the application: (1) that the Judge who had decided the appeal by his order of the 25th February 1914 had paid no attention to a certain document, viz., a list of plots prepared at partition, (2) that the map prepared by the Commissioner was correct and proved the applicants' case, they said they would file a copy of it before the Appellate Court, (3) that this documentary evidence was not before the Court at the time the appeal was heard and (4) that the partition map which had been relied upon was wrongly coloured and that the applicants had a correct map which they would put in.

This latter map, said to have been prepared at a later partition, was received by the Judge and upon the strength of it he has decided both cases in favour of Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad. In his judgment allowing the review he remarks that neither the parties nor his predecessor-in-office had been aware that the earlier partition map relied on in the previous judgment had been superseded by the later map produced before him now by Ram Sarup and Bhagwat Prasad. It was for the applicants for review to show that this later map, which they persuaded the Court to accept, was not available at the time when the appeal was first tried, or to satisfy the Court that if it was available its non-production was not due to any lack of diligence on their part, and under rule 4 of Order XLVII, they were bound to furnish strict proof of any allegations made to this effect. I have not been referred to any proof at all of the allegations contained in the petition for review and so far as I can see, the lower Appellate Court never called for any but was content to act upon the application as it stood. The learned Additional Judge was not entitled to act in this way and his order allowing the petition for review must be discharged.

It also follows that Appeal No. 94 of 1915 must be allowed, as the Judge's order appealed against is based upon the documentary evidence which he improperly admitted in the proceedings in review. The result is that both these appeals are allowed with costs.

Appeals allowed.

Arbitration and award—Objections, evidence in support of—Objector to be given chance of adducing proof—Court, duty of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 15—Material irregularity—Revision.

Where a party to a suit referred to arbitration files objections to the award, he ought to be given a chance of calling evidence in support of his objections; and, if the Court refuses to give him such time, the refusal amounts to a material irregularity. [p. 401, col. 1.]

Mirza Sami Ullah Beg, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision by a defendant to a suit which was entertained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur. The facts, which it is necessary to state for the disposal of this matter, are as follows. There was a reference to arbitrators in the case and the arbitrators were directed to file their award on the 13th of July. The 13th being a holiday it was put in on the 14th of July and on that date the Subordinate Judge passed an order that the case was to come on the 30th of July 1914 and the parties were directed that if they had got any objection to the award they were to file them within ten days. The defendant who is the applicant here filed a petition of objections to the award alleging various grounds upon which the award should be set aside, several of them amounting to allegations of corruption and partiality against the arbitrators. When the case came up on the 30th of July the defendant was called upon to substantiate her objections. Her Pleader informed the Court that he had no witnesses in attendance as he understood that the date had only been fixed for the case to be brought up and he did not understand that he was under any obligation to bring his witnesses on the 30th. I may also mention that having regard to the date fixed for filing objections there was very little time for the defendant-applicant to apply for attendance of witnesses and it seems highly probable that if she had applied for the attendance of witnesses at the time she filed objections they would not have been in attendance. However that may be, the Subordinate Judge refused to adjourn the case so as to give the applicant a chance of calling evidence in support of the objections. The case was decided at once. The award was filed and a decree was passed upon it. An appeal taken to the Court of the District Judge was dismissed apparently on the ground that no appeal lay. I am asked in revision to interfere with the proceedings of the Court below and to hold that the applicant ought to have been given an opportunity of producing evidence in support of her objections. The point seems to me to be incontestable. I think this applicant should have been given a chance of bringing forward proof of the statements which she made in order to have the award set aside. To deny the applicant a chance of calling evidence of this kind would be to deny her a right of making objections altogether. I think it may fairly be held that in the present case the Subordinate Judge acted with material irregularity in refusing an opportunity to the applicant to call her witnesses.

I allow this application. The case will go back to the Subordinate Judge with directions to receive the evidence called by the applicant in support of the objections to the award and to dispose of them according to law. The applicant will get her costs in this Court.

Application accepted.

PARTHASARATHY CHETTY v. YELCHOORI NARAYANA CHETTY.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant in the suit mortgaged certain immoveable properties to one Venkatappa Chetty. The mortgagor (1st defendant) sued for redemption in Original Suit No. 14 of 1909. It was held in that suit that Venkatappa advanced only about Rs. 800 although the deed of mortgage stated that a larger sum was lent. The learned City Judge held in that case that only Rs. 800 was advanced and directed redemption on the payment of that sum. The first defendant paid the decree amount into Court and claimed the return of the title-deeds. Meanwhile Venkatappa appealed to the High Court against the decree. Before handing over the title-deeds, the City Judge ordered that security for a sum of Rs. 1,800 should be furnished. Thereupon the second defendant paid into Court the said sum as security, and the first defendant was given the title-deeds. In the High Court, it was held that the mortgagee, Venkatappa Chetty, was entitled to a further sum of about Rs. 2,000 more. On this decree being passed, Venkatappa claimed the payment of the money deposited as security. During the pendency of the appeal, the property was sold to the wife of the present plaintiff. The money was also attached by a person who had obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court. That attaching creditor is the third defendant in the suit. The City Civil Judge held in the claim proceedings that Venkatappa Chetty must first proceed against the property purchased by the plaintiff's wife. In consequence of this order the plaintiff had to pay the balance of the decree-debt in order to protect the property in his hands. This suit is brought by him for the payment of the money deposited by the 2nd defendant as surety in the mortgage suit.

The learned City Judge has come to the conclusion that his order in the claim proceedings was wrong and held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount. The attaching creditor raised a question that the money deposited by the 2nd defendant really came from the first defendant and that he was entitled to attach it. The plaintiff and the attaching creditor entered into a compromise by which they agreed that the former should get Rs. 700 and the latter Rs. 600. The decree is in terms of the compromise. The 2nd defendant has appealed against this decree. As the compromise does not affect the rights of the 2nd defendant, we see nothing illegal in the City Judge having accepted it.

The main contention of Mr. Seshachariar is that the liability of the 2nd defendant can arise only on the failure of the first defendant to satisfy the decree and that consequently there is no cause of action against his client.

It is well-settled that a creditor is entitled to proceed against the surety without exhausting his remedies against the principal debtor. Sections 28, 137 and 140 of the Indian Contract Act make this clear. The last section pre-supposes that the surety is compelled to pay without the creditor resorting to the principal debtor, for payment. Sankana Kalana v. Virupakshapa Ganesappa (1), Hajarimal v. Krishnarav (2) and Totakot Shangunni Menon v. Kurusingal Kaku Varid (3) support this proposition. We, therefore, hold that it was not incumbent upon the creditor to have proceeded against the mortgaged properties and the person of the first defendant before seeking to enforce his claim against the money deposited by the 2nd defendant. Moreover, as we read the order directing security to be furnished we understand it to direct that the amount paid into Court be held primarily liable.

Mr. Seshachariar relied on Gopal Nana Shet v. Joharmal (4). In that case the learned Judges held that the bonds etc., produced by the judgment-debtor should be first applied towards the satisfaction of the decree, before the amount paid by the surety is proceeded against. Apparently, the learned Judges understood the liability of the surety to be limited to satisfying the claim which may arise in case the judgment-debtor failed to satisfy the decree. We do not think this case is any authority for the proposition that a surety cannot be proceeded against before the creditor exhausts all his remedies against the principal debtor.

As regards the argument based on the order passed on the claim proceedings, it is enough to say that the present suit is brought to vacate that very order. Consequently it cannot operate as res judicata.

No question about the right of the plaintiff to sue was taken in the Court below and we cannot allow it to be argued here.

There can be no question on the statement of the facts that plaintiff is entitled to claim payment of the money which he was compelled to pay and which money should have been recovered from what was deposited in Court by the 2nd defendant.

We think the learned Judge is right and dismiss the appeal (City Civil Court Appeal 5 of 1916) with costs. In view of our decision in the connected suit, the decree should be modified by inserting in line 41 in page 13 after the words "700 only," the words "and the third defendant to Rs. 600". A decree in the suit by the attaching creditor (Original Suit No. 189 of 1913) has become unnecessary owing to his having secured his right in the purchaser's suit (Original Suit No. 258 of 1913). We must, therefore, reverse the decree which we may point out, was not in form a proper one under any circumstances. The parties will bear their costs in this and in the Court below in this case (City Civil Court Appeal No. 6 of 1916).

Where a widow is forced to mortgage not only her life-interest but also the estate itself for a legal necessity, the enforcement of that mortgage must be considered to be of equal legal necessity with the actual mortgage itself, and the sale of the property in execution of a decree based on the mortgage would pass not only the life-interest of the widow but also the estate of the husband. [p. 404, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Saran, dated the 9th February 1915, passed in Appeals Nos. 32 and 37 of 1916, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Chapra, dated the 30th June 1914.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the important parties are by name Kuara Kuar and Gujra Kuar. They were co-wives and afterwards co-widows of one Ajudhia Sahu. On his death Kuara Kuar the elder widow managed to secure possession of the entire property with the result, as found as a fact by the lower Courts, that in order to derive any maintenance from the property at all the younger widow was forced to institute a suit for partition. In order to prosecute this suit she was required to file certain Commissioner's fees. To raise these fees she mortgaged the property in suit. The partition proceeded and she was placed in possession of a separate share. The mortgagees then foreclosed upon the property and sold it. Shortly afterwards the widow Gujra left her father-in-law's house and married again in the sagai form. Upon these facts the elder widow Kuara claimed that the interest of the younger widow had terminated by the remarriage and that inasmuch as in the circumstances of the case no more than the life-interest or rather the interest during widowhood of the mortgagor could be bound by the mortgage she as the sole widow remaining was entitled to enter into possession of the partitioned share now in the hands of the mortgagees. The lower Court found the facts as I have stated them but upon the ground that inasmuch as the property was worth over Rs. 5,000 and mortgaged for Rs. 500 only and in auction sold for Rs. 900 only, it cannot be said that the sale in execution was for legal necessity even though it be conceded that the mortgage was for legal necessity.

The sole point for consideration, therefore, is, where it is shown that the property of a widow has been mortgaged for legal necessity does the auction-sale based upon that mortgage necessarily pass the deceased husband's interest in the estate. The question appears to come before us in its present form as res integra. We have no hesitation at all in saying that where a widow is forced by legal necessity to mortgage not only her life-interest but also the estate itself for a legal necessity the enforcement of that mortgage must be considered to be of equal legal necessity with the actual mortgage itself. It would probably be open to the reverenters to show that the redemption of the mortgage lien could have been effected without recourse to the sale of the estate but for the gross neglect of the mortgagor in collusion with the mortgagee. That point does not arise in this case for there is no suggestion on the record that there was any method by which the mortgage lien could be enforced otherwise than by the sale of the property in suit.

Moreover it is worthy of consideration that prior to the appellant's mortgage there was in existence a former mortgage upon the life-interest of the mortgagor. The mortgagor's life-interest having been already mortgaged it is clear that the only thing left to the mortgagor was the estate itself and the value of that estate subject to the mortgage upon the life-interest was probably not much greater than the sum realised by the sale. There is no reason for supposing that the mortgagor could by any means have saved the sale of the estate mortgaged to the appellant.

We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has no cause of action upon which she can claim any title in the property in the hands of the defendants-appellants. The appeal must, therefore, be decreed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts. The plaintiffs-respondents must pay the costs of the defendants-appellants. The defendants-respondents do not seem to us to be entitled to any costs.

Appeal accepted.

*Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J. (Phillips, J. dissenting).—*The Courts of a foreign country have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the title or the right to the possession of any immoveable property not situate in such country or generally to give redress for any injury to any immoveable not situate therein. In the case of immoveables the judgment pronounced of the forum rei sitae is absolutely conclusive. It makes no difference that the parties affected by the judgment are domiciled in foreign territory and its Court has, therefore, jurisdiction over them in personam. The judgment of the foreign Court will, however, be recognized by the forum situs only to the extent of carrying out any obligations on the parties arising out of contracts or of trusts. [p. 407, cols. 1 & 2.]

A judgment of a French Indian Court removing trustees appointed by the Will of a testator and substituting others in their stead cannot be enforced by an action in a British Court for possession from the discharged trustees of some immoveable properties covered by the Will and situated within the jurisdiction of the latter Court, especially when Letters of Administration have been granted to the defendants by the law in force in British India. The British Courts will not remove defendants from the trusteeship solely by virtue of the judgment of the French Court unless the plaintiffs have them removed and get themselves appointed by means of a suit in the Court having jurisdiction over the trust property in British India. [p. 408, cols. 1 & 2.]
